Words may sell a picture, but they'll never make one!

To say that Paralta Plays are the greatest pictures in the world, would be stale and trite. And if we used up all the highflown words in the dictionary, it would amount to no more than the usual flapdoodle you've been handed so long that you don't pay the slightest attention to it.
And you shouldn't.
Nowadays, only those who see can believe.
Well, there are those who have seen Paralta Plays.
And having seen, they believe,
What's more, they have backed their belief by actions which make the loudest words seem like a hoarse whisper.
Here are the men and their actions:
W. W. Hodkinson — who decided on Paralta Plays as his feature product for distribution.
Paul H. Cromelin — Inter Ocean Film Corporation — who obtained the foreign rights for Paralta Plays.
Arthur Cohen — Globe Films, Ltd.,— distributor of Paralta Plays in Canada.
Have you confidence in the judgment of these men?
Now, you see Paralta Plays and be convinced.

My staff also reports that they have looked at five other Triangle pictures, ("Fanatics," "Learnin' of Jim Benton," "Because of a Woman," "The Maternal Spark" and "Without Honor") and find them satisfactory. I can assure you you will have our every support. Keep up the good work."

Triangle has recently established a Traffic Department, whose sole duty it is to see that every Triangle exhibitor secures his film regularly and promptly and that it is shipped to him over the shortest route and at the least expense. This is just another little evidence of our desire to give service plus.

Triangle exchanges are operated by men who know picture quality, who can advise exhibitors as to the best methods of promoting pictures, and who fully realize that exery exhibitor with whom they do business must receive fair, square and courteous treatment. This is the unalterable policy of Triangle.

There is nothing revolutionary about Triangle. We have no wonderful red fire announcements to make to exhibitors. We are simply doing business in the most business-like way, with all of our cards on the table.

Does this method of doing business interest you?

Three Big Mergers Are Reported Closed

RUMOR FACTORY TURNS OUT HINTS OF ENORMOUS COMBINATION OF PRODUCERS

WITH the approaching advent of the New Year, the atmosphere in motion picture production circles is surcharged with rumors of impending combinations that will astonish the industry if they are carried out as report has it they are to be.

These rumors are based chiefly on the recently expressed attitude of many of the country's largest producers on questions of economy and hints from some quarters that retrenchments were to be put into effect. Along with these rumors come reports of alleged financial distress that is said to be causing much annoyance to some of the larger producing and distributing organizations.

Three Big Combinations

Three combinations are reported that stand out prominently in the rumor-filled atmosphere. The first combination includes one of the most active producing corporations, two big distributors,and possibly one newly organized firm that has been attracting considerable notice of late through its advertisements in the trade papers.

Another reported merger links one of the successful production corporations with an already enormous producing organization.

Five Producers Reported Merger

Still another combine is rumored which would join in one organization five large producers who now operate five separate chains of exchanges. All three of these mergers are said to have been completed and announcement is to be made shortly. One enormous distributing organization is said to be forming for the purpose of marketing the products of the three combinations.

With these reported mergers completed, three of the country's most active producers and distributors would be left to fight for existence against the combined strength of the merged corporations.

Economy Is Rumor Keynote

The understood purpose in forming these combinations, is primarily to cut down the tremendous overhead expense under which each individual organization is operated. Under this plan one of the prospective members of the combine would save more than $100,000 a year in a single item of its overhead expense. On this basis the twelve organizations reported to be about to merge, would save an almost unbelievable amount of money in the overhead of the present competing institutions.

Who Will Get Saving?

Nothing has been said in any quarter relative to where this tremendous saving will go. Whether the benefit of this plan will be passed on to the exhibitor who is in dire need of the benefit of some kind of an economic solution of the present day financial problem, or whether the money accruing to the producers by this plan will go into their own pockets, has not been made clear in any of the conversations that have been heard on this subject.

Points Censorship Evil

A small number of clergymen representing the Catholic, Episcopal, Baptist and Presbyterian churches of New Jersey met in the Senate Chamber of the State House at Trenton on Wednesday afternoon, December 19, to discuss the question of preparing a bill for introduction at the legislature, providing for state censorship. Some opposition to the proposition developed. H. F. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the National Board of Review, attended the conference and pointed out that state censorship did not accomplish anything of value, and was destructive, not constructive. He showed that the average of the quality of motion pictures is constantly rising, and wherever there may be a demand for finer pictures, constructive methods are better than destructive for securing them. He indicated that the industry was constantly striving to improve its product, and that the United States Government was recognizing the tremendous value of the motion picture as a means of distributing information.

First Pictures Made in Vera Cruz

The first motion picture to be taken in the State of Vera Cruz, with the exception of those relating to current events, was made recently by the Mexican Film Co., of Mexico City. The subjects chosen were scenes between Spaniards and Indians from "Tabare," a work by the Uruguayan poet, Juan Zorrilla de Sanmartin, and the place selected was a picturesque tropical ranch at Boca del Rio, a short distance south of Vera Cruz. The apparatus and supplies were purchased in New York.

Petition Congress to Alter Tax Law

EXHIBITORS OF NORTHWEST SEEK RELIEF FROM SEAT AND FOOTAGE LEVIES

A PETITION will be presented to Congress during the present session, by Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the North-west. This petition is intended to impress Congress with the inequality of the present war reservation law, as applied to the motion picture industry. It sets forth plainly the lack of equity of the present law, and states that exhibitors of the North-west are in favor of paying the United States Government an amount equal to 10 per cent of the gross receipts, as a substitute for the present seat tax and footage tax.

The resolution in full follows:

To the Honorable Senate and House of Congress of the United States of America. Washington, D. C.

Honorable Gentlemen:

Whereas at the last session of Congress there was enacted certain legislation concerning the taxation of theaters, motion picture houses and other amusements, including a tax on motion picture films, and

Whereas, it appears that the result of the application of the tax for the period so far involved, since the passage of this law, would indicate a lack of equity in the provisions of same, and

Whereas it further appears that the business of the Motion Picture Exhibitors throughout the country and particularly of this district is suffering materially with the result that many exhibitors have found it necessary to retire from business, your petitioners respectfully state and show:

Restrictions Are Uujust

That the Motion Picture Industry, in volume, is the seventh among the activities of this country; that in the creation, production, manufacture, distribution and exhibition of photo plays, many thousands of loyal Americans find their livelihood; that this industry, contributing so largely to the general prosperity of this country, deserves to be fostered and not restricted in a measure that threatens its destruction.

That the photo play has revolutionized the amusement business, placing as it has before the public,—clean, wholesome entertainment at remarkable cheap prices, and therefore deserves encouragement and support; that the morale of a nation's people is quite as important to conserve during the stress of war as the morale of the army; that nothing contributes more to create such a morale than good, clean amusement, such as the photo play provides at a price which makes it available to the most humble.

Important Aid to Government

The stage and motion picture screen have been important factors in placing before the public the activities of the government and in the spreading of its policies, including the encouragement of army enlistment, promotion of Liberty Loans, fostering of food conservation, spreading of patriotism and creation of public sentiment. In all these activities the exhibitors of the Nation have, as a unit, offered the use of their screens for the furtherance of every government desire.

That the lack of equity in the present law lies in the fact that while on its face the law would indicate an intent to tax amusements on the basis of ten per cent of receipts, that its present applications does not so work out, as the following would indicate.

Points Out Unequalities of Law

The exhibitor charging twenty cents (including war tax) pays a tax of two cents per admission, equivalent to ten per cent.

The exhibitor charging fifteen cents (including war tax) pays a tax of two cents per admission, equivalent to fourteen per cent.

A lack of equity appears in the tax on admissions to children which in all instances is one cent.

Theaters charging an admission price of one dollar or more, paying a tax only of one cent on childrens' tickets, pay practically no tax in comparison to the admission price.

Motion picture exhibitors who charge ten cents for children (including war tax) pay a tax of ten per cent.

Motion Picture exhibitors, of which there are many, charging five cents only for children (including war tax) pay a tax of twenty per cent.

Motion Picture exhibitors charging five cents admission pay no tax.

Increased Prices Justified

To meet the many increases in cost of operation, to avoid confusion in ticket selling, many exhibitors have increased their price of admission, which increases as a rule, are thoroughly justified from the standpoint of economic necessity. Judging by the drop in theatrical business, extending apparently over the entire United States, and being particularly true of the district represented by this Association, it would seem that the public, without a true appreciation of the situation, resents the amusement taxation.

That your petitioners lack not in patriotism, nor do they desire to avoid a just share of the burden of financing our country in this present great war, but the following plan is submitted for consideration as a more equitable taxation of amusements, more simple from the standpoint of accounting for both the exhibitor and the government, and less damaging to the exhibitor.

Would Tax Gross Receipts

This plan contemplates a change of the present law to the extent that instead of the tax applying to admissions as it does now, that same be levied on a percentage basis of the gross receipts arising from admissions. As to the amount of this percentage, ten per cent is suggested as an equitable basis in comparism with the taxation of other industries.

Attention is directed to the fact that the special taxation enacted in 1914, being a special tax levied on proprietors of "theaters, museums or concert halls," still remains in force. This tax which requires a payment by each opera house owner or manager of from fifty to one hundred dollars according to the seating capacity of the theater, was not repealed when the war revenue law of October 3, 1917 was passed and is still in effect. This provides for double taxation of amusements and more than the industry can consistently absorb.

That the footage or film tax, enacted October 3.

1917, designed to tax the film industry at its source, has, by the manufacturers, been forced upon the exhibitors to the extent of an arbitrary requirement on the part of the exhibitor to pay fifteen cents per reel per day. If this tax is to be applied in addition to the tax on admissions and the special tax hereinabove mentioned, the exhibitors face triple taxation.

That it is important for our government to analyze carefully the situation as to the picture industry and particularly the department of exhibition in view of the splendid revenue return the taxation of this industry will afford. That the present law should be so revised as to distribute the burden equitably and on a basis that will permit the exhibitor to exist.

Much Business Is Lost

The owners and managers of the minor theaters, particularly of the residential and rural districts, where they should be especially encouraged, have suffered much loss in business and many of them will be forced to close unless the conditions as to taxation are remedied. The government is vitally interested in keeping every theater possible open for business from the fact of the revenue received therefrom.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the Northwest, representing many hundreds of exhibitors in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin, in meeting assembled at the West Hotel at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on Friday, November 30th, adopted the following resolution:

RESOLVED that we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the Northwest, go on record as being in favor of paying the United States Government an amount equal to ten per cent of our gross receipts, and recommend to our Representatives in Washington that the present special war revenue seat tax and that the footage tax on motion picture film be abolished.

Refuse to Pay in Detroit

The tax situation in Detroit is explained in the following note received by MOTOGRAPHY from E. V. McGrath of the Straford Theater, Detroit, Mich. "Ninety-five per cent of Detroit's motion picture theaters are not paying the fifteen cent per reel tax or signing contracts with the reel tax clause inserted. Most of the cancellations received by exhititors are very welcome missives. Business generally is showing a big slump, hitting the neighborhood houses worse than down town."

Kane Visits Select Offices

General Manager Arthur S. Kane, of the Select Pictures organization, left last week for a trip to Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo, which points he was unable to visit during his recent tour of branches in the middle west, owing to pressure of business in the home office which resulted in his returning earlier than he had expected.

Cleveland was Mr. Kane's first objective, where he was received by Sam E. Morris, Select's Cleveland branch manager, and who also has supervision over the Cincinnati and Detroit exchanges. After a day's stay in Cleveland, Mr. Kane, accompanied by Mr. Morris, moved on to Detroit, where they were in conference with W. D. Ward, manager of the Select exchange in that city.

Last Thursday Mr. Kane arrived in Buffalo, and spent the day with Charles R. Rogers, manager of the Select branch there, returning to New York the following day.

Do You Always Get What You Want?

Many exhibitors have difficulty locating the pictures their patrons request them to book. Patrons do not always remember the name of the producer. Your exchange man may not be able to put you right unless the picture you seek happens to be one of his releases.

MOTOGRAPHY can always help you. Our Service Department is at your disposal. Make use of it. Ask us anything.

Gives Auto to His Director

After attending a projection of "A Modern Musketeer" Douglas Fairbanks last week presented Allan Dwan, his new director, with a twin six Packard automobile. This indicates what Douglas thinks of his new picture, which sets a new standard for speed, story and subtitles, written by Director Dwan, Fairbanks and Art Rosson.

The ceremonies attached to presenting said automobile were effective. Fairbanks suggested that Dwan try the new car that he was considering purchasing. Dwan started down the boulevard, where he was hailed by a planted traffic officer. The latter told Dwan he must report immediately at police headquarters for breaking speed laws, when the Fairbanks director complained that it was not his machine. The officer compared license numbers with his new list, which confirmed that Dwan was listed as the owner. Douglas came along at this moment and explained.

Council Favors Sunday Pictures

The city council of Lake Forest, Ill., has decided in favor of Sunday moving picture shows. A resolution to amend the blue laws and allow the theaters to remain open was passed by a vote of 3 to 2. Poolrooms and bowling alleys will continue to remain closed over Sunday as usual, it was stated. Attorney George Eddy Newcomb, representing the Presbyterians and Methodists, spoke against the resolution. John J. Spelman, president of the Lake Forest Ice Company, spoke in favor of it.

Ray Griffith Resumes Work

Director Harry Edwards has completed his dumb-waiter story, titled "Ruined by a Dumb-Waiter," and has started production on a new Triangle-Keystone comedy which will give Ray Griffith the camouflage role of a hard-working father. This comedy has not been titled as yet. The supporting cast will include Claire Anderson, Dorothy Hagar, Alice Davenport, Jack Henderson, Chris Richards and Fred Mack. This is Ray Griffith's first comedy since his return from Camp Lewis.

Reaching for the Moon, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Best picture Fairbanks has ever appeared in. No business on account of cold."—J. C. Taylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Ky.

Reaching for the Moon, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Very good but different from any of his others. Did not draw as heavy."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

Seven Keys to Baldpate, with George M. Cohan (Artcraft)—"Did good business and the story was very pleasing to the audience."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

The Narrow Trail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"Nothing better. It's Hart's best. Big business."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Good of its kind but if the producers don't stop giving us so much 'kid stuff,' we'll get no business, even with Pickford."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"We put this picture over with correct music and 'sound effects' and it was one of the biggest hits ever in the house."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

BLUEBIRD

The Princess Virtue, with Mae Murray (Bluebird)—"One of the best I have had in my house, simply great. I shall repeat it. The star is well liked here. Book this one for a big one."—G. L. Stoner, Grand Theater, Springfield, Minn.

The Doll's House, with Dorothy Phillips (Bluebird)—"A subject which delighted everyone. Fine settings. Picture good."—G. L. Stoner, Grand Theater, Springfield, Minn.

The Right to Be Happy, with Rupert Julian (Bluebird)—"Very seasonable and pleased our patrons."—J. F. Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

Polly Red Head, with Ella Hall (Bluebird)—"The star is a favorite here. Best drawing power of any star. This is an old release but we had a good print and it went over big."—J. F. Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

Mr. Opp, with Arthur Hoyt (Bluebird)—"No drawing power either through the star or the title. Pleased a scant fifty per cent in a mixed audience."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

The Clean-up, with Franklyn Farnum (Bluebird)—"A fair picture, no more. Pleases the less critical."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

The Charmer, with Ella Hall (Bluebird)—"This star always pulls a good house but this offering was below par. Action slow."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

BUTTERFLY

Straight Shooting, with Harry Carey (Butterfly)—"Where westerns are liked, as they are here, this will be classed as fine."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

Automaniacs, with Alice Howell (Century comedies)—"Contains a few new stunts but is only fair on the whole."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

FOX

The Pride of New York, with George Walsh (Fox)—"In my opinion, this is the best picture of its type I ever saw. George Walsh is certainly great. My patrons agree with me. After one performance I stood in the lobby and asked a large number of the people coming out of the theater how Walsh compared with Douglas Fairbanks. Almost every one, men and women, said they liked him better. Those who did not like him better, said they thought the two stars about equal. His popularity is further proved by the business he brings us. On a week's run at the Rose, this picture had taken in more money by Thursday night, after five days, than the W. S. Hart picture, which ran the week before, did during seven days. This picture is full of life and 'pep' from start to finish. It never lets down."—D. C. Miller, Rose Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Soul of Satan, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—"A good picture that pleased all who saw it. The star does some strong dramatic work."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Innocent Sinner, with Miriam Cooper (Fox)—"A very good picture but nothing to rave over. Story done many times."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Derelict, with Stuart Holmes (Fox)—"A very interesting picture, with the star at his best. Business capacity for two days."—Peter Grillo, Majestic Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

She, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"An old oriental story and a good picture. A good drawing card."—Peter Grillo, Majestic Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

Unknown No. 274, with June Caprice (Fox)—"June Caprice does not draw for us and this picture did not please. In our advertising we featured the name of the producer, William Fox, rather than the star."—D. C. Miller, Alcazar and Boston Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

Wedding Bells and Roaring Lions (Fox-Sunshine Comedy)—"This is a good comedy."—D. C. Miller, Alcazar and Boston Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

GENERAL

The Lady in the Library, with Vola Vale (General)—"A very good four-reel feature. We played this to capacity business."—Peter Grillo, Majestic Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

Hubby's Holiday, with Neal Burns (General)—"A cracking good comedy. It gets a riot of laughter. No vulgarity whatever."—George L. Madison, Kozy Theater, Chicago. Downtown house.

One Dollar's Worth (General)—"These good O. Henry stories are what the people like. They always please."—George L. Madison, Kozy Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

GOLDWYN

The Manxman, with Elizabeth Risdon (Goldwyn)—"Business very poor. Production good but has no drawing power."—Joe Steurle, Walnut Theater, Louisville, Ky.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A good picture. Pleased a large audience."—Louis J. Frana, Olympia Theater, Calmar, Iowa.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Mae Marsh never will be a favorite here. This picture would make a good 'family group day' attraction, as it contains many cute animal scenes."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"A rattling good farce comedy. Should please any class of audience."—A. K. MacMartin, Empress Theater, Kamloops, B. C., Canada.

KEYSTONE

The Late Lamented (Keystone)—"A dandy comedy, as good as any on the market."—J. C. Taylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Ky.

The Wild Girl, with Eva Tanguay (Select)—"Of all pictures this one is the limit. I do not know of a patron who did not register a kick, and the patrons were very few. Took off the picture on the third day."—Joe Steuerle, Walnut Theater, Louisville, Ky.

TRIANGLE

The Stainless Barrier, with Irene Hunt (Triangle)—J. C. Tylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Ky.

Fighting Back, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"Not much of a picture. No one well pleased."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

The Food Gamblers, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—"Good food propaganda picture and was well received but the extra long titles made it somewhat tiresome."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Double Trouble, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Somewhat disappointing, especially to those who have seen his later pictures. The drunk scenes were too long. Drew a fair crowd."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Master of His Home, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A delicate subject, birth control, well handled. The best this star has appeared in. J. J. Dowling does some extra good work in this picture."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A novel western picture with a female gun-fighter. The story was well liked, but bad weather kept many away."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Disciple, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"One of Hart's best. He is popular here and draws a good crowd. Patches were stiff as they have been on all these re-issued. This causes a jump whenever they run through the machine."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Wolf Lawry, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"A good money-getter and a good picture that ought to please any audience."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

Macbeth, with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree (Triangle)—"Great. A real Griffith production."—A. K. MacMartin, Empress Theater, Kamloops, B. C., Canada.

UNIVERSAL

Christmas Memories, with Ella Hall (Universal)—"A good subject, very appropriate for the Christmas week."—George L. Madison, Kozy Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

VITAGRAPH

The Ninety and Nine, with Lucille Lee Stewart (Vitagraph)—"Picture well produced and intensely interesting. Photography good."—J. A. Almon, Idle Hour Theater, Earlington, Ky.

Within the Law, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A big picture done in a big way. Good business for two days."—J. Frank Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

Aladdin From Broadway, with Edith Storey (Vitagraph)—"Many of our patrons stayed through two showings of this."—Eugene Saunders, Palace Theater, Harvard, Ill.

Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation (Vitagraph)—"Here is a great, timely and appealing picture. Played two days to fine attendance."—C. F. Hansen, New Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

The Sixteenth Wife, with Peggy Hyland (Vitagraph)—"An odd offering that seemed to get over fairly well. Fine settings and the star's dancing were great assets to this picture."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

WORLD

Rasputin, the Black Monk, with Montague Love (World)—"Very poor crowd. Lost money. My people don't seem to like this kind of picture."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

The Divorce Game, with Alice Brady (World)—"Very good but not a standard Brady picture. Fair business."—E. D. Yost, Colonial Theater, Orange, Calif.

The Burglar, with Carlyle Blackwell (World)—"A fine picture. Pleased everyone."—J. C. Taylor, Capitol Theater, Frankfort, Ky.

On Dangerous Ground, with Gail Kane (World)—"A very poor picture, not up to World standard."—Louis J. Frana, Olympic Theater, Calmar, Iowa.

The Volunteer, with Madge Evans (World)—"This is not a picture which would appeal to our audiences. It is all right for a neighborhood house but it neither drew nor entertained for us."—D. C. Miller, Alcazar and Boston Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

The Rise of Susan, with Clara Kimball Young (World)—"A good average production."—A. K. MacMartin, Empress Theater, Kamloops, B. C., Canada.

The Bondage of Fear, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"Only fair. Did not draw here."—A. K. MacMartin, Empress Theater, Kamloops, B. C., Canada.

SERIALS AND SERIES

Who Is 'Number One'? with Kathleen Clifford (Paramount)—"At the fifth episode, this is pleasing all. Good acting."—G. L. Stoner, Grand Theater, Springfield, Minn.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This serial got me very little money. Too much sameness."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"We have just started this serial and it seems to be a very interesting one."—Peter Grillo, Majestic Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

The Fatal Ring, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"This is a very good serial and we have done very good business so far. We have run fifteen episodes."—Peter Grillo, Majestic Theater, Haverhill, Mass.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"The plot being laid in British Columbia, this province, makes this a good drawing card here. Serial is full of action and punch."—A. K. MacMartin, Empress Theater, Kamloops, B. C., Canada.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"A good outdoor serial. Far different from the average mystery serial. We had many favorable comments on it."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

STATE RIGHTS

Even as You and I (Universal)—"Business good for the first day only, the last six days very poor. Patrons do not like allegorical pictures."—Joe Steuerle, Walnut Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The Sin Woman, with Irene Fenwick (Hoffman-Foursquare)—"Good picture. Some very strong scenes. Good box-office attraction if properly advertised."—Joe Steuerle, Walnut Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The Submarine Eye (Williamson Brothers)—"Great picture. No business on account of a blizzard."—Joe Steuerle, Walnut Theater, Louisville, Ky.

The Garden of Allah (Selig)—"A fine production. Did poor business on account of bad weather."—J. Frank Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

Cupid's Rival, with Billy West (Standard Comedies)—"A fairly good comedy that will get the business, but don't play up the star's name for he is not well known."—Arthur LaForce, Happy Hour and Star Theaters, Two Harbors, Minn.

The Exhibitors' Good Will Offering

MORE THAN FOUR THOUSAND FILM CRITICISMS, based on box office values, were voluntarily CONTRIBUTED BY EXHIBITORS to MOTOGRAPHY'S pages during 1917. The exact number of these final decisions on picture value, 4,241, was divided among twenty producers' brands, besides 134 miscellaneous state rights productions. One of the big producers, the "high man" in the list, received 805 criticisms.

Fully to appreciate the enormous value of this work to the picture theater trade, it must be realized that every one of the 4,241 reports was supplied by exhibitors who had run the films they commented on in their own houses. Furthermore, EACH REPORT IS A TRUE MEASURE OF THE WORTH OF ITS FILM; not in artistry, nor in star prominence, nor in advertising claims, but IN BOX-OFFICE DOLLAR-PULLING POWER. And each and every criticism is a free good will offering, through MOTOGRAPHY'S pages, from exhibitor to exhibitor.

The movement for truth in advertising, for the renunciation of extravagant claims and the retirement of the overworked superlative, receives its greatest aid through this census of exhibitor experience. The press agent predicts, in clever and wholly credible promises, "what the picture WILL DO for you"; but the final, supreme, unassailable verdict is the report of the theater man who runs it and counts his admission tickets—and then tells us "What the Picture DID for ME!"

That is the only real test—what it has done, not what it may do. The exhibitor's criticism is not a dramatic review, it is a business report. It is a statement of facts. It is a summary of the results obtained in actual use.

Cynics and pessimists who have lost their faith in good will and the co-operative spirit should consider the human side of this big collection of mutual help contributions. For the only motive behind those thousands of exhibitor reports we have been permitted to print was that each exhibitor might help the other fellow to a better show. Surely 4,241 voluntary efforts to make the whole game better give ample proof of a good will spirit whose parallel would be hard to find in any other business on earth.

We cannot close this topic without a passing reference to the part MOTOGRAPHY itself plays in this remarkable interchange of exhibitors' reports. We could ask for no better demonstration of the good will built up by this exhibitors' trade journal during nine years of service than that its readers, without thought of recompense, should use its pages for their altruistic work of advising each other of the good pictures and warning against the bad ones. We have endeavored to assist the interchange by classifying each report, noting wherever possible the nature of the local patronage, that others may be guided to appropriate selections for their own type of audience.

The phrase "Service to the Exhibitor" has become a fetish among the publications catering to the picture industry, until the term has almost lost its meaning. But no service is possible that has greater value to the theater man than to spread before him the performance records of his own stock in trade, written by his fellow exhibitors.

"What the Picture Did for Me" is the greatest and most valuable trade paper service feature ever presented. And it owes its tremendous importance to the fact that it is operated not by MOTOGRAPHY'S editors, but by its thousands of exhibitor readers, who thus daily prove their good will to us and to each other.

Don't Write If You Are Satisfied

DOUBTLESS every exhibitor in the country, above the five cent class, has something to say about the film and ticket tax situation. Few of them are in a position to say it to a listener who can be of any help.

It is hardly fair to expect the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee to do all the actual work—hard work—of convincing Congress, and to guess at the wants of the exhibitors besides. As a committee, the Allied Exhibitors' five representatives have power; but as exhibitors, they have information only on their own comparatively few houses. Data on a mere handful of theaters, out of fifteen thousand or more, will not be convincing to Congress.

The committee will do the work, and do it with enthusiasm, if the exhibitors at large will spend three cents apiece for a postage stamp and tell just what it is they want and why they should have it. They should not expect their committee to dream it out.

Briefly, if any exhibitor believes the present war taxes are obscure or unduly oppressive or dangerous to business, his only possible chance for relief is to tell the committee why he believes so. But if he is entirely satisfied, and feels that the taxes as applied are just and right, he may be justified in ignoring the committee's appeal.

For those who are not satisfied, the committee's address is 407 Indiana Trust building, Indianapolis.

Nineteen Eighteen

THIS is one New Year's Eve when we cannot persuade ourselves to make complacent predictions. Our optimism is strong, as always. We believe 1918 can erect no barriers that the picture industry cannot victoriously surmount. We are certain that the picture itself has become a part of human life, no more to be repressed than the simple acts of reading and conversation. We know that the business of making and showing pictures is as stable and solid a part of civilization as the marketing of coal and iron; and that the fluctuations and alarms that sometime agitate the industry are not industrial at all, but merely signs of the intense human agency whose ambitions are so wholly devoted to it.

But the conventional wishes for a prosperous New Year sound a little too conventional today. There is no guide in experience to tell us what strange demands the coming months may reveal. For though the art will go on forever, the men who devote themselves to it will change and shift about and come and go.

There is no pessimism in the declaration that 1918 will witness the elimination of those producers and exhibitors, yes, and trade paper publishers, who cannot meet new and more tightly drawn conditions. On the contrary, there is in that very circumstance hope and optimism for the strong and worthy.

Already the strengthening of the industrial front line is presaged in rumors of combinations—rumors of the kind familiar enough through the past years, but always to be seriously received and considered. Some of these predicted activities are wholly logical and, therefore, to be welcomed.

Amendment of the new tax laws is, of course, an interesting possibility that will be decided before the new year is fairly started. Whatever the outcome, it is certain that admission prices will average higher than they did a year ago—which is as it should be. The fifteen cent ticket is the new standard.

MOTOGRAPHY will continue, more devotedly than ever, to render all the service it can to help tie the industry together by carrying the word of progress from one trade unit to another. There is no need to say how heartily and how sincerely it extends its best wishes to all those who work with the pictures, from the producing preident to the errand boy in its competitor's office.

Producer's Goal Is to Satisfy Exhibitor

TRIANGLE STATEMENT EXPLAINS HOW IT CAN AFFORD TO PAY REEL TAX

"THE great goal of the motion picture business today might be summed up in the single word, 'satisfaction,'" is the answer of the Triangle Distributing Corporation to a question as to what the organization is trying to accomplish.

Triangle is one of the storm centers of the controversy over the reel tax. A statement of its purposes is contained in the following:

"Activity in the motion picture business is like working in a fertile field, which in the rapidity of its crop rotation, has yielded such prolific returns that the harvesters have neglected everything except their harvesting. Rank weeds have grown up; the fertility has been reduced, and intensive cultivation has become an immediate necessity.

Economic Laws Rule Industry

"Of course there is a market for the product of this commercial soil. There always will be. But—and this is the point of the whole analogy—the consumer has set his own maximum price and his standards of quality. He knows what he wants, and he knows, by stern economic experience, just what he can afford to pay for it. Strangely enough, producers and distributors in general still cling to the theory that the motion picture industry is exempt from the operation of economic laws. When their best laid plans "gang aft agley," they blame the stupidity of the exhibitor, or government, or the ignorance of the public, instead of stripping themselves of conceit and examining the actual dollars and cents strength of their respective proposition. It is like the man who wanted an increase in salary before he did any increased work.

Must Satisfy Exhibitors

"It is not admitting a human weakness to say that 'satisfaction' almost invariably has some relation to money and profits. It is a known fact in and out of business. There is no profit to us unless the exhibitor profits by dealing with us, no matter what rental he may pay us at the time of any current transaction. If he doesn't come back, and keep on coming back, we lose. Our problem is, how to keep the exhibitor satisfied. What does he want? Is he reasonable in his expectations? Can we afford to give him more for his money?

"What are we doing to back up this analysis of trade conditions Well, we can not tell you everything that we are doing, but here are a few instances of actual accomplishments:

> "There are many signs of distinct improvement in ethics, in personnel, in spirit and in quality of product. Ahead, the New Year offers unlimited opportunities for greater improvement. Help Build!"—From an editorial in the December Triangle Magazine.

"We are paying the reel tax instead of passing it on to the already burdened exhibitor. 'How can you afford to pay this enormous assessment, when others are uniting to avoid it?' is a question put up to us daily.

"The answer is simple, and is best given by another question, 'How can the people of the United States afford to buy Liberty Bonds, pay increased prices for their necessities, and send their wage-earning sons to the battlefields?'

Meeting Needs of the Hour

"The country is at war, and it is no time for dodging individual or corporate responsibilities. We believe that the reel tax is meant for producers, manufacturers and importers, and with that conviction, we can't honestly say to the exhibitor, 'This is going to cut into my profits; you pay it.' It is our 'bit,' and we are glad to make any sacrifices necessary in order to meet the needs of the hour.

"It follows that we must be doing something to economize if we are taking this so-called philanthropic stand. We are. For five months we have had in operation a traffic department charged solely with the duty of cutting out transportation waste. It is part of the new Triangle service, not only to find the shortest distance between two points, but the cheapest way to cover that distance. We do not pocket all the savings which have been effected by this intelligent sort of business methods. Service to exhibitors has been improved both in prompter deliveries and smaller shipping costs.

Overhead Is Reduced

"Territories are now organized on a geographical and economic basis, not a personal one. The branch managers serve only the counties they can serve best, and no others, regardless of the temporary loss in receipts because of the readjustment of territorial lines. And every time an exhibitor kicks about the service he is not getting, something happens in the New York office of our traffic manager which doesn't stop until the complainant is satisfied. The result is greater co-ordination of effort and reduced overhead.

"Through the trade papers we are trying to tell exhibitors of the things we are doing in a quiet way to stabilize the industry. There has been no blowing of trumpets, because every betterment we make is as much for our own good as for the exhibitor. We both profit, and let the public in on the bargain, too.

"Take the seven-reel feature recently announced as a regular item on the monthly program. It goes out at no advance in prices, and is sure to increase box-office receipts. 'Because of a Woman,' the first multiple reel release on this plan, has been so favorably received that we expect the January special, 'I Love You,' to be a big success. Renewals of old contracts and a number of new first-run accounts in the larger cities attest the appreciation of showmen.

Trade-mark Represents Value

"The Triangle trade-mark at first stood for three branches of an industry built originally on individual personality and ability. Today it stands for concrete cash values secured by business organization and co-ordinated, controlled talent, and expressed by three symbols —quality, co-operation and dependability. The three spell satisfaction. We do not urge exhibitors to incorporate our trade-mark in everything they do. They will not fail if they do not use it in their advertising. Experience has convinced us, however, that the exhibitor who does use the Triangle symbol profits by it, simply because the Triangle program, through many ups and downs of the film business, has represented the sort of a varied entertainment that has converted thousands into movie fans.

"Stars? Yes, they come and go. We believe in stars provided their cost does not wreck a picture's chance for success. It is interesting to scan the pages of the trade papers and study the history of the high-salaried people who are rated among the leaders in the acting profession. Remarkable how many of them started with Triangle.

"Take this ad, for example. Fairbanks was featured in the first Triangle release, 'The Lamb,' and he made eleven other pictures before leaving us. That they are good pictures is evidenced by their long popularity. Right now we have a host of happy exhibitors cashing in on the re-issues of these pictures, with new prints, new paper, and so on, at a rental price which leaves a worthwhile profit. It is the same with Bill Hart's pictures. We are even told that the re-issues are so good that they are helping to sell the newer pictures these stars are making.

Make Product Marketable

"There is only one course to follow in producing any commodity, and that is the course which makes the product marketable. Exhibitors will not stand for low quality nor exorbitant prices. These problems have been met by putting in the field an organization of writers, directors and actors, each of whom is peculiarly qualified for his individual task. All the units are so harmonized that the right sort of plays are acted by people qualified to play the parts assigned them. We depend on the merit of combined efforts for our box-office value, and we get it. It's nothing very new, just a new application of the old axiom that no man is so good that he cannot be replaced.

"The year ahead promises a new era of constructive work. No doubt we shall see some plan worked out to better adjust the natural differences between the producers and exhibitors. Perhaps the movement of the latter to make the distributing field a part of their own work will gain considerable headway. Whatever the means of bringing it about, mutual confidence must have a chance to grow, if all elements are to prosper."

Builds Giant Ice Skating Arena for Picture

In the new Mabel Normand starring vehicle, "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy, there appears an "ice grotto," presumably on the dancing floor of a fashionable New York restaurant. For this effect there was built in the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J., a special tank in which were placed some 800 feet of ammonia piping to freeze over the water it contained. This is probably the first time that such an apparatus has been used in motion pictures.

Oh! U Boat

Klever Pictures, Inc., released on December 31st a timely comedy called "Oh! U Boat," featuring Victor Moore.

Mary MacLane in a scene from "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," a George K. Spoor ultra-feature.

Artistic Settings in Spoor Feature

In George K. Spoor's Ultra-Feature, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," Director Arthur Berthelet obtained after much scouting about the country, just the summer settings he desired. Such scenes as the country club at its mid-season activities, the lake surrounded by foliaged trees and flowering bushes are striking and artistically perfect.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me" is a correct reflection of the peculiar woman writer who has aroused the whole country by her remarkable writings. The picture interprets the sensational, sentimental and satirical high lights of six amazing romances in the life of Miss MacLane. Although the true names of the suitors are withheld, the stamp of sincerity and realism is there.

Work Day and Night to Finish Picture

Director W. S. VanDyke was forced to work his players night and day at the climax of his production of "Sadie Goes to Heaven," in order to assure ample time to supply Christmas week bookings.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," which was released on December 24, features little Mary McAlister, as Sadie, telling the story of her visit to the home of wealth. Pre-release showing of this Essanay Perfection picture netted many complimentary comments on its unusual fund of detail. The picture is adapted from the story that appeared in the Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Booking reports show evidence that not only little Mary's old-time exhibitor friends were eager to get this new picture but that many other exhibitors who have not yet exploited the little child actress are being converted to her box office power.

Miss Minter Recovers After Illness

Mary Miles Minter has returned to the American Film Company studios after recovering from a slight illness, and is putting the finishing touches to the fifth production under her present contract, entitled "Madamoiselle Tiptoe."

Director Henry King, who produced "The Mate of the Sally Ann," is directing the picture, which is based on the story by Arthur Berthelet.

Does Clever Work

Spottiswoode Aitken gives another one of his clever characterizations in "Madamoiselle Tiptoe," the latest Mary Miles Minter feature. Mr. Aitken drew many favorable comments for his work in "A Game of Wits," featuring Gail Kane. In the present picture he has an equally important part, suited to his capabilities.

Making Seven-Reeler

Director Jack Conway, whose last Triangle offering was "Because of a Woman," a seven-reel featuring Belle Bennett, is now working on "Little Red Decides," a screen adaptation of the American Magazine story of the same name, written by William M. McCoy.

"Biggest Year in History"—Sheehan

FOX OFFICIAL SEES WAR AS BENEFIT TO MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

"THE motion picture industry will have the biggest year in its history during 1918."

That is the opinion of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Sheehan does not believe the industry faces a crisis, or is in the slightest danger of having to be saved by mergers or combinations. The war, he thinks, will benefit rather than prove harmful to theaters which are showing pictures.

"I know," he says, "that a few persons are shivering from fright, but the experience of exhibitors in other countries—countries that have seen more of this war than we probably ever will hear about—does not justify such an attitude.

Pessimist Always Present

"There always is a pessimist present. Many theater managers, a few years ago, when motion pictures were just beginning to demonstrate their value, felt certain the spoken drama was doomed. Five and ten cent amusements, they were predicting, would put $2 amusements out of business. Nothing could live in the face of such competition.

"Since the war began, we have heard all manner of wild predictions. It would ruin business generally; it would bankrupt the nation. No government could stand the financial drain more than a few months. But the war has been in progress three years, business has gone ahead and none of the governments has yet applied for a receiver."

Position Is More Favorable

Mr. Sheehan's contention is that the motion picture business is more favorably placed when surrounded by conditions such as war produces than it is in times of great prosperity.

"The time never will come," he said, "when people will not require, and demand, and have, some sort of amusement. And even if they cannot spare $5 or $6 for two seats at a so-called legitimate theater, they certainly will not be compelled to save for many days to accumulate the price of a motion picture performance.

"As a matter of fact, if there is curtailment of expenditures for amusements the result is certain to be favorable to motion picture exhibitors. It will open to them a new class of patronage. It will bring them the custom of people who have been extravagant and now are beginning to save. And there will be no corresponding loss of present patronage. The people of this country will have to be pinched a great deal harder than they ever have been before they will unanimously vote the expenditure of from twenty to fifty cents an extravagance."

The Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Sheehan announces, is going ahead with plans of an elaborate nature for next year.

"We will spend more money for features in 1918 than we have ever spent before. We will have more stars, more directors and more companies than we have ever had. We will make bigger productions than we have ever made and on a scale more elaborate than anything ever undertaken in the history of the business.

"The 'Jack Spurlock—Prodigal' deal which we have just completed with George Horace Lorimer is an indication of our intention to go the limit in obtaining the right sort of material for our stars. The Saturday Evening Post editor's novel cost us more than any producer ever has paid for similar rights.

Plan Larger Prospects

"And we have in hand a number of other much bigger projects—one, for instance, already far enough under way to justify the statement that it will surpass anything of the sort we have ever undertaken. But our policy, you know, is to do our talking after we have tangible evidence to offer in support of our statements. You will remember we said very little about Standard Pictures until we had completed five or six productions and had spent over a million dollars on them. When we did talk, we had something very definite to talk about.

"And we are going to have more to talk about in 1918 than we had in 1917. We are demonstrating our faith by carrying our foreign campaign right into the war area and that faith is receiving justification on every delivery of European mail. We are preparing—we are, in fact, prepared—for the biggest year in the history of the motion picture industry."

Move Seven Comedy Companies

The removal of the Triangle-Keystone comedy players to the Culver City studio, from the old Majestic-Fine Arts plant on Sunset boulevard, Hollywood, has given the immense Triangle studio the appearance of a circus lot during the past few days. Seven companies, with their equipment, which filled several huge automobile trucks, were transported to their new home and installed on the largest stage in the world, which was recently built for their accommodations.

Success Rewards First Year's Efforts

GOLDWYN ENTERS UPON SECOND TWELVE MONTH WITH BRIGHT OUTLOOK

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation rounded out the first year of its existence a few days ago with more business on its books than had ever before been attained in the industry by an organization of its age. Entering now upon its second twelve months of constructive enlargment, the owners of Goldwyn foresee a further period of growth and prosperity for a company that has made much history both in the production and distribution of motion pictures.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, more than a year ago foresaw what he believed would be significant and revolutionary changes in the motion picture industry. He came in contact with exhibitors from all parts of America who complained lustily over the quality of productions then available and of the prevailing tendency to sacrifice everything to the existing "star system."

Mr. Goldfish persuaded Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Archibald Selwyn and their associates to join him; and the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation not only represents their combined talents and abilities, but a trade combination of their names in Goldwyn.

Release Eight Pictures

Although slightly more than twelve months old, Goldwyn is but one-third that old in a releasing sense, with eight Goldwyn Pictures thus far presented for public patronage. The first eight months of the company's history were devoted to organization and production. This time spent in advance preparation enabled Goldwyn to spring full-fledged into existence, with a number of completed productions on its shelves and completely eliminated rush work on productions to enable the makers to release well-rounded instead of hurriedly completed pictures.

Introduces Mary Garden

Co-incident with the attainment of its first birthday Goldwyn is releasing on December 30 throughout North America its greatest production and its most celebrated star—Mary Garden in "Thais" by Anatole France. This marks Mary Garden's first appearance on any screen and is the highest achievement technically and dramatically of the new company.

The Goldwyn productions thus far seen by audiences throughout the world are, in the order of their releases:

Sept. 9: Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo.

Mary Garden, as she appears in Goldwyn's "Thais."

Sept. 23: Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," by Margaret Mayo.

Oct. 7: Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb.

Oct. 21: Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," by Basil King.

Nov. 4: Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," by Mary Rider.

Nov. 18: Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn.

Dec. 2: Rex Beach's greatest story "The Auction Block."

Dec. 16: Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter.

Dec. 30: Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France.

In addition to these, Goldwyn has completed and shipped to its branches throughout North America the following productions, release dates for which have not been announced:

Madge Kennedy in "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" by George Weston.

Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy.

Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor," by Irvin S. Cobb and Edgar Selwyn.

Madge Kennedy has completed her work in "Our Little Wife" by Avery Hopwood; Mae Marsh has still another striking production in reserve, "The Beloved Traitor," by Frank L. Packard; Mabel Normand's production "Joan of Plattsburg," is now being revised to eliminate from it certain military material to which the government objected and will soon be completed.

Authors See Stories Filmed

In addition to these Goldwyn has completed still another picture with a famous star, about which no announcement has been made to date. Beginning with the current week Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and Mae Marsh each started work on new pictures.

Goldwyn in its first year established close relations with a score or more of America's most popular and successful authors and playwrights, who did not stop when they had sold their novels or manuscripts to the organization, but followed their stories into actual production to help impart to them the solicitous care and many refinements which have been apparent in all of the pictures thus far released under the Goldwyn imprint.

Invades United Kingdom

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation today operates offices in nineteen American cities; Goldwyn Pictures Ltd. of Canada operates offices in six cities of the Dominion; Goldwyn representatives have opened offices for the organization in Australian cities and at this moment England is witnessing the entry of the Goldwyn productions into the theaters of the United Kingdom.

In every sense Goldwyn is satisfied with the first year's achievements and with the business return therefrom. It is a well-adjusted, smoothly-organized mechanism capable of still bigger things and it forsees in the coming year a great improvement in business conditions and public patronage which will mean enlarged returns for exhibitors and itself.

Triangle Releases Two Features

Program for Week of December 30 Includes Modern Romance and Political Drama—New Comedies Offered

A MODERN romance of intense interest that centers aroung a gown conceived by a French designer, is the first feature that will be released by Triangle December 30. "Framing Framers," a story of the newspaper and political worlds, is scheduled to follow.

In "The Gown of Destiny," adapted from the story "Each According to His Gifts," by Earl Derr Biggers, which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, Triangle offers a picture that is said to be a distinct departure from the usual run of features.

The gown worn by Alma Rubens in this feature was designed by Hickson, Inc., Fifth avenue, New York. It exploits the bustle frock, incidentally the first silhouette to be introduced in America.

The cast appearing in "The Gown of Destiny" is a notable one and Alma Rubens again demonstrates that beauty is no handicap to a good actress. Herrera Tejedde, the well-known French actor, as the dapper designer, puts much feeling into the role and his ability to register enthusiasm and dejection stamps him as an actor of unusual ability. J. Barney Sherry, Lillian West and the other players constitute a well-balanced cast. "The Gown of Destiny" was picturized and directed by Lyn F. Reynolds.

"Framing Framers," the second release, is a comedy drama of the newspaper game and political graft, in which the "framers are framed." Charles Gunn and Laura Sears both add to their previous records in this picture and the rest of the cast is up to Triangle standard. "Framing Framers" was directed by Ferris Hartman and picturized by George D. Proctor. It was written by Mildred Considine.

In the Keystone comedy, "Blood and Thunder," also scheduled for release December 30th, Ray Griffith stars. D. W. Griffith, the famous producer, who saw "Blood and Thunder" at a pre-view, said it was one of the fastest comedies he had ever seen.

The one-reel Triangle Komedies "In Wrong Right" and "His Double Flivver," are included in the week's releases.

Old Time Actor Dies

Chas. Marriott, old-time actor and a pioneer in playing for the screen, died December 7th at Hollywood, California. Mr. Marriott had been with the Vitagraph Company for some months and was to have played in the first Nell Shipman-Alfred Whitman feature, "The Wild Strain," but was too ill to accept the engagement. Miss Shipman, hearing of the lack of sufficient funds to give Mr. Marriott the necessary care during his illness, enlisted the aid of the Hollywood film colony, who all know and respect Mr. Marriott, and every possible comfort and attention were provided for his last days.

Critic Gives "Manx-Man" Warm Praise

Alan Dale, veteran critic of the drama, hails George Loane Tucker's production of Hall Caine's "The Manx-Man" as "one of the finest films of the year." In a review of this Goldwyn-distributed picture, Mr. Dale says:

"I am glad I saw this picture. It is extremely long, but it makes you feel like Oliver Twist and want 'more.' With its beautiful views of the Isle of Man, and its wonderfully human Hall Caine story, 'The Manx-Man' must take its place as one of the finest films of the year. Altogether, 'The Manx-Man' is so fine that it is the positive duty of film lovers to see it. And in this case, duty will be combined with pleasure—which is not always the blend that we discover, is it?"

Makes Big Picture and Hires No "Extras"

Ira M. Lowry's great war romance, "For the Freedom of the World," distributed by Goldwyn, in which thousands of men appear in the battle scenes, was literally a picture without an extra. The Canadian Government contributed thousands of soldiers in training at the great camp in Valcartier and in various other parts of the Dominion, which relieved Mr. Lowry of the extra problem.

Bids for Public Favor with Clean Plays

Theodore Deitrich Launches New Company to Make Wholesome Pictures Abounding with Human Interest

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, who recently formed De Luxe Pictures, Inc., a $200,000 concern, which will make high-class features with Doris Kenyon as the star, has spent his entire life in the newspaper, magazine and motion picture fields. He believes that making motion pictures is much the same as publishing a newspaper or a magazine —that the requirements of the public are practically similar in each case. He reasons this way:

Years ago, the public was satisfied with a plain presentation of facts in their newspapers. Then came the day with the facts presented in beautiful word pictures and actual photographs with which to illustrate them. The public turned aside from the drear and desolate accounts of current events and welcomed the beautifully-garnished, human interest, heart-throbbing stories that today are the crowning feature of every newspaper. It is the same in motion pictures.

The public is satiated, Mr. Deitrich believes, with the blood and thunder, the so-called "thrills" and the impossible characters which dominate so many of the present day pictures. He believes it has had enough of nasty sex subjects and that the time is ripe for clean, wholesome, human interest stories enacted by characters whom we see in everyday life and not in the impossible situations in which the screen frequently places them. Mr. Deitrich declares that Miss Kenyon under the banner of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., will appear only in productions of this kind, and is satisfied that the motion picture going public will appreciate the human interest story just as the newspaper reader appreciates it.

Mr. Deitrich was born in Beaver, Pa., home of the late Senator Matthew Stanley Quay. Upon the advice of that astute man of affairs, he entered a country newspaper office at the age of eleven years as printer's "devil." Before his sixteenth birthday he was a journeyman printer, but he dreamed of better things. Immediately casting aside a journeyman's salary, he secured a position as a cub reporter at one-fourth the salary. Before he was twenty-five years old, he was managing editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, one of the greatest papers between New York and Chicago. For a number of years, he was dramatic, feature and editorial writer, and editorial executive in New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and other cities. He joined the Hearst organization fourteen years ago, remaining on the newspapers and magazines owned by William Randolph Hearst until the latter transferred him to the International Film Service when the great publisher entered the motion picture field.

Mr. Deitrich continued with the International until the formation of De Luxe Pictures, Inc. He believes that Miss Kenyon will eventually become the greatest emotional screen star the public has ever known.

But Jack Is Still a Young Fellow

Jack Brawn, manager of the property department for the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn, is rounding out his thirtieth year in the theatrical business. He started out in 1888 with Denman Thompson and has been continuously connected with the stage, either as an actor, manager or departmental executive ever since. During his long career he has been associated with such famous players as William H. Crane in "Father and the Boys," Frances Starr in "The Easiest Way," "The Case of Becky" and "The Secret." He was with Belasco for three years and during that time was an actor and stage manager for Miss Starr.

Early in his career he was a whistler with Hoyt & McKee in "A Trip to Chinatown" and four years later was again engaged by Denman Thompson for a part in "Our New Minister." For two years prior to going with Mr. Crane, Mr. Brawn was a member of Henry W. Savage's "College Widow" company and made the trip to London with it.

Mr. Brawn has been with the Vitagraph company for five years, the first two of which he played in pictures as a member of the Vitagraph stock company

Helps Exhibitor Get Publicity Benefits

To the vast amount of publicity secured by Goldwyn Pictures for Mary Garden's first photoplay, "Thais," prior to its release for exhibition throughout the world, the Goldwyn Corporation is adding the force of a continued national campaign of intensive advertising. While this stupendous effort will acquaint persons of all classes and conditions with the fact that an artist of international reputation is to be seen on the screen for the first time in her career, some of it will be lost unless each exhibitor of "Thais" diverts the awakened attention to his theater.

Goldwyn has issued a complete set of suggestions of advertising and showmanship to local exhibitors as a means of getting full benefit from national publicity converted into sales.

Black Paint Covers Studio Roof

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is trying an experiment in its studio at Fort Lee, N. J., which may bring an important change in methods of motion picture photography where the weather does not permit of sunlight work the year round. The glass roof of the Goldwyn studio has been painted black and all daylight excluded, making it unnecessary to cover the sets in which companies are working. Natural light, the cameramen say, only interferes with proper artificial lighting, and since they cannot have proper natural lighting at all times they prefer to have it wholly shut out.

Praise for Beach Film

"The Auction Block" continues to thrill hundreds of thousands throughout the country. Of it the Cleveland Leader says:

"We have yet to see a Rex Beach novel done over in the films that failed to please. We have yet to see one that failed to stir the emotions, rouse the enthusiasm or impress the spectator with its bigness and pulsating vitality. With a Rex Beach picture the play is distinctly the thing. That is the case in 'The Auction Block.' 'The Auction Block' and the conventional cream puff film play have nothing in common.

January Triangle Program Announced

Olive Thomas, Alma Rubens, J. Barney Sherry and Jack Richardson Are Featured in Plays of a Diversified Nature.

TRIANGLE will open the new year with a program of merit that includes a comedy drama with Olive Thomas, a big drama of the Navajo Indian country with Jack Richardson, a production of beauty featuring Alma Rubens, with scenes laid in Italy and France, and a tense drama of professional life with J. Barney Sherry, are among the features to be released in January. And there will be others, all with an interesting story to tell.

For the first week in January, Olive Thomas with Charles Gunn, is scheduled to appear in "Betty Takes a Hand," a pleasantly humorous, fast moving story written by Katherine Kavanaugh. For the second release of the week, Jack Richardson will appear in "Man Above the Law" with Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick supporting.

The second seven part feature to be produced under the new Triangle plan of a seven-reel picture every month, will be released January 13, under the title, "I Love You," with Alma Rubens as the star. For the second part of the week's program, "Law's Outlaw," featuring Roy Stewart, now recognized as one of the foremost delineators of western characters, will be released. The story was written by Ethel and James Dorrance.

For the week of January 20, "Evidence," a drama dealing with professional life and with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role, will be released. Jack Cunningham, of the Triangle scenario staff, wrote this play. Margery Wilson who has added new laurels to her achievements with every successive appearance will have the leading role in "Flames of Chance," adapted from the story, "Three Godsons of Jeanette Contreau," by Francis W. Sullivan, which recently appeared in The Ladies Home Journal.

For the last week in January, the first release will be "The Gun Woman," a brilliant western story. Texas Guinan, formerly of the Winter Garden, New York, has the title role.

To round out the month's program, Triangle has a Japanese production of exceptional beauty, "Her American Husband." The play is a reversal of the characters and situations in John Luther Long's famous "Madame Butterfly." Dainty Teddy Sampson appears in the leading feminine role as a beautiful Japanese girl and Darrell Foss has the leading male part. This is Miss Sampson's first appearance in Triangle features. Thomas Kurihara, the well-known Japanese actor, and Jack Abbe, also have prominent parts.

Starts New Picture

Picture Men Lose Fight

There will be no moving picture theater on Grand avenue, St. Paul, Minn. The lively fight which was waged between residents in the neighborhood of 1051 Grand avenue, who favored or disapproved of the attempt of Heilbron & Weiskopf to put a theater in this neighborhood, is over. The city council of St. Paul, by a vote of 4 to 3, decided against the picture theater promoters.

Productions Completed for 1918

Mutual Releases for First Two Months of New Year Are Finished—Schedule Is Announced for January

STUDIOS producing features for the Mutual Film Corporation have completed releases for the first two months of the new year and a schedule for January, 1918, has been announced.

Completed productions include pictures from east and west coast studios starring William Russell, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, Edna Goodrich, Olive Tell, Ann Murdock and Anita King.

Edna Goodrich as she appears in the Mutual star production "Her Second Husband."

The schedule for January includes:

December 31: Edna Goodrich in "Her Second Husband," a five-reel satire built on the extraordinary adventure of a young husband and wife who rush into divorce when "easy money" jars domestic tranquillity and find love again in a strange fashion.

January 7: Margarita Fischer in "Molly Go Get 'Em," a five-reel comedy drama of the experiences of an attractive and irresponsible young woman who chafes under parental efforts to keep her charms subdued until a rapidly aging sister manages to marry.

January 14: Ann Murdock in "The Impostor," a picturization of the Charles Frohman play which casts Miss Murdock in the role of a self-supporting, unsophisticated miss, whose trust in a well-meaning married man leads to complications, defiance of convention and stops just short of a scandal.

January 21: Mary Miles Minter in "Mlle. Tiptoe," wherein the adorable Miss Minter is cast as a charmingly enthusiastic reformer of things as they are, political and economic, and relates her adventures in trying to make the world better and easier.

January 28: William Russell in "In Bad," an adventure drama which reveals Mr. Russell's unusual abilities as an actor and an athlete to even greater advantage than they have heretofore been shown. Preview of "In Bad" has resulted in a declaration that it is easily the best thing Mr. Russell has done and trade and newspaper critics used superlatives in their reviews of his latest release, "New York Luck."

Other productions completed at the Mutual studios include "The Girl and the Judge," starring Miss Olive Tell, star in "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," both Frohman plays. "The Girl and the Judge" was written by Clyde Fitch. Miss Murdock has finished "My Wife," scheduled for February release, and "The Richest Girl." William Russell is at work now on "Polo Jack." Miss Minter's forthcoming release is well under way, although it has not been given a title.

Studio managers and directors of production, at work on pictures for Mutual release, are under strict orders to spare neither energy nor money in maintaining the standard of production which has been established in recent Mutual releases.

Billie Rhodes appears January 1, in a hilarious Strand comedy, "Her Awful Fix," which will bring many a laugh from below the diaphragm. The story concerns Mary, who rejects the matrimonial advances of a young doctor to marry Tom. On her wedding day she becomes quarantined in her chum's house when the young doctor pronounces a case of prickly heat to be smallpox. The complications that ensue are exhiliarating and amusing, but all turns out happily when an older doctor gives a true diagnosis.

The latest Mutual Weekly is replete with topics that are timely, covering incidents and events of international interest, keeping pace with the kaleidoscopic changes that are making world history.

Earle Williams Goes to Los Angeles

Earle Williams, Vitagraph star, started for California, his native state, last Thursday. He will be engaged in making pictures there for some months. Mr. Williams headed a party of six which included Miss Grace Darmond, who will be featured opposite him in Blue Ribbon features; Tom Mills, director; his assistant, Frank Heath, and Fred Held, their cameraman. Miss Darmond's mother was also in the party.

The party was scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles Christmas morning, having their Christmas dinner with members of the Vitagraph company now working at the company's plant in Hollywood. The trip was made via Chicago and Omaha.

This is the first time Mr. Williams has been to his home state in more than five years.

Two Join Colors

Two more stars will be added to the service flag at the Triangle Culver City studios this week. J. R. McGlone, who worked in the employment bureau, has enlisted in the United States cavalry. Perry Evenvold, who has been Director Reggie Morris' cinematographer for more than a year, has joined the marines.

"His Own People," Latest Blue Ribbon

Vitagraph Offers Final Feature of the Year with Harry Morey and Gladys Leslie in Leading Roles

"HIS OWN PEOPLE," featuring Harry Morey with Gladys Leslie, is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the Blue Ribbon feature release for the week beginning December 31. The picture was produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle.

This, the last feature of the year for the Vitagraph program, is declared by President Smith to be one of the finest pictures ever made by his company. The action is laid in an Irish village, a town in Connemara on Lough Corrib, and Harry Morey, as the village blacksmith, is said to have done one of the finest pieces of work in his entire screen career. The story is strong and unusual, the cast one of the best balanced seen in Vitagraph pictures and the picture is mechanically perfect.

"His Own People" serves to introduce little Gladys Leslie, "the girl with the million-dollar smile," as a Vitagraph star and her work, the Vitagraph announcement states, places her among the front rank of screen artists. Others prominent in the cast are William Dunn, Arthur Donaldson and Betty Blythe.

Director Earle, noted for his work in "Within the Law" and other big Vitagraph productions, has introduced a number of very fine touches, particularly animal stuff. For one thing, he has used a fuzzy-faced little Irish terrior in a prominent role, and in addition, he used pigs, chickens, ducks, donkeys, parrots and other animals to give the picture a touch of local color.

The story, written by William Addison Lathrop, is a melodrama with a fine vein of native Irish humor running all through it.

Lucas Directs Bluebirds

Wilfred Lucas, one of the most skillful directors in the photoplay industry, has joined the directing staff of the Bluebird studios at Universal City, Cal., and will start shortly upon his first Bluebird photoplay, which will feature Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury.

"Vengeance—and the Woman" Released

With an advance advertising campaign, nation-wide in extent, to introduce it to the public, "Vengeance—and the Woman," the latest Vitagraph serial, was released to exhibitors on December 24. According to a statement by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, this fifteen-episode serial, which follows into theaters immediately upon the conclusion of the fifteenth episode of "The Fighting Trail," has exceeded even the smashing records made by its predecessors. The first two episodes of "Vengeance—and the Woman" are reviewed in this issue of Motography.

Use Films to Teach Military Tactics

SCHOOLS HAVE OPPORTUNITY TO TRAIN STUDENTS BY MEANS OF PICTURES

THE motion picture screen is to play a far greater part in the present world war than even its most optimistic supporter would have ventured to predict. Not only is the screen to be used to register the historical events taking place on the other side but it is to be used for the intensive training of soldiers, of turning the rawest of recruits into finished soldiers.

After all other methods of direct instruction of recruits have failed of the desired results the United States government has turned to the screen to bring the recruits to that degree of efficiency that will enable them to enter first line trenches after a few weeks of post graduate course in the direct military school of instruction.

Seek Efficient Training

For several months government officials, members of the War College and staff officers of the army have been seeking some method by which large bodies of men might be taught military tactics and evolutions by one instructor at the same time.

More than thirty plans were suggested and rejected as impracticable. Almost at the moment when the officials in charge of the training of the immense army composed of absolutely raw material had decided that there was no substitute for the old drill ground methods of instruction of man by man, squad by squad and company by company, Leslie W. Brennan, a Utica, N. Y., financier, advanced the idea that properly taken motion pictures would solve the problem.

The suggestion by Mr. Brennan who knows nothing of the technique of the screen, at first was met with skepticism, so much so in fact that Mr. Brennan offered to personally bear the entire expense of proving that his suggestion not only was not impossible but was plausable and practical.

Use West Point Models

Secretary of War Baker, impressed by the earnestness of Mr. Brennan, was partially convinced. He issued orders that the West Point plebs and competent officers be placed at the disposal of Mr. Brennan who immediately went to West Point, accompanied by an expert camera man and a motion picture director.

Assisted by Captain Matthew Tomlinson, instructor of the plebs, the men were posed in the proper positions and the pictures were taken. They cover practically everything it is necessary for a soldier to know. Starting with the Manual of Arms, the pictures go through the School of the Soldier, School of the Squad, School of the Company, Arm Signalling, Semaphore, Trench Work and Bomb and Grenade practice.

Impresses War College

Upon the completion of the pictures they were shown to the members of the War College at Washington. The members of the War College were so impressed that they immediately assigned Captains Ellis and Gary, co-authors of the Plattsburg Manual, to use the Brennan pictures as a basis and enlarge upon them in making prints to be used to teach the recruits in the cantonments of the country.

Captains Ellis and Gary, again using the West Point Cadets, enlarged on the pictures by showing the improper method of performing the movements. These additions by Captains Ellis and Gary have caused a wide discussion among the educators of the country, many of them declaring that it is not wise to show improper methods as the wrong manner of executing the movements may become impressed upon the recruits who may execute movements in the wrong rather than in the correct way.

Hastens Soldier-Making

As a result of the success in working out the idea suggested by Mr. Brennan it is declared that the next batch of recruits called into service will learn their military lessons in from sixty to ninety days less than the green men who preceded them into the cantonments.

Not only will the military tactics films be used in the cantonments but prints of the original Brennan pictures will be available for newly formed military companies, State Guards, Home Defense Leagues, Y. M. C. A.'s, colleges and public schools.

Government officials who are behind the universal military training idea praise the West Point pictures, declaring that these films solve the problem caused by the lack of military instructors and also solve financial difficulties surrounding a military education.

In many cities throughout the United States the authorities have been anxious to start a course of military training in the public schools. In many instances

"Over There" Music Tax Waived

Following up permission to use his stirring war song, "Over There," as the musical theme for the Select Pictures Corporation's war drama, "Over There," George M. Cohan has further evidenced his generosity by granting the use of the music free of tax to any theater presenting the picture on its program.

This is confirmed in a letter to Select Pictures from Mr. Cohan's publishers, Leo Feist, Inc.:

Gentlemen:

Leo Feist, Inc., confirms the permission already given to you by Mr. George Cohan, author and composer of the musical composition, "Over There," to use the music of that song as incidental music to the exhibition of your motion picture entitled "Over There."

Leo Feist, Inc.,
(Signed) E. F. Bitner, General Manager.

"Over There" is a six-reel photodrama produced by the Charles Richman Pictures Corporation with Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson in the stellar roles.

Anna Q. Nilsson, star of "Over There," a Select release.

the desire has been put aside because military instructors were not available.

The West Point films, it is pointed out, overcome these difficulties as several hundred children may receive military instruction at the same time and without the assistance of an experienced drill master. As a result it is expected that many municipalities will obtain projection machines for use in several of the larger schools and will use the pictures to make the students proficient in military knowledge.

Choose Original Story For Film

Yorke-Metro Starts Making "Broadway Bill" with Harold Lockwood, a Departure From Usual Custom

DEPARTING from the usual custom of choosing a printed work as the basis for a story, Yorke-Metro announces that as a starring vehicle for Harold Lockwood to follow his current Metro release, "The Avenging Trail," it has selected an original story by Fred J. Balshofer and is now engaged in producing it under Mr. Balshofer's direction.

The title of the story is "Broadway Bill." It is a semi-society drama, with part of the action taking place in the fast society circles of New York and Palm Beach and the remainder laid in the timberlands of Maine. Harold Lockwood plays Broadway Bill, a young man of wild proclivities. For the sake of a girl, he decides to mend his ways and regain his dissipated strength. He leaves for a lumber camp in the Maine woods owned by a friend and while working out his rehabilitation he stumbles upon a thieving scheme to defraud the camp's owner. His adventure in thwarting it develop some big and unusual situations in photo-playwriting while the love angle in the story runs into surprising and interesting channels.

Another Western Play for Edith Storey

Motion picture rights to Charles A. Taylor's famous western melodrama "Yosemite" have been acquired by Metro as a starring vehicle for the athletic star Edith Storey. The author himself will adapt the play for the screen and all the characteristic western action and incidents which made this melodrama a success on the stage will be transported to the screen just as the author originally wrote them.

This is the second stage play that Metro has secured recently for Edith Storey, the first being "The Claim" by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare which was picturized by June Mathis, and which will immediately precede "Yosemite" in production.

Farnum Is Resting

William Farnum, who has been resting after making his William Farnum de luxe production "Les Miserables" for William Fox, spent Christmas at his home in Sag Harbor, N. Y.

On December 26 Mr. Farnum planned to be up and doing, for he leaves on that day for California where he will make another de luxe picture for Mr. Fox.

Triangle Cowboy Chases Real Bandits

Director Cliff Smith and Bill Patton, Triangle cowboy, pursued three bandits in an automobile when they were escaping with $10,000 taken from the Culver City Bank last week.

"With Patton on the running-board, armed with a '45, I opened my car to the limit and we got almost close enough to risk a shot at one time, but their car had the most speed," said Smith.

"As we approached the car tracks I was so intent on watching the quarry that I failed to look for a street car. It was there, however, as I learned to my sorrow, for it rammed against the tonneau, caving in the rear end of my machine. How Patton clung on, is beyond me, for we were traveling at top speed.

"We kept right on, in spite of the accident, but were soon forced to abandon the chase, as my motor was injured in the crash." Smith and Patton were able to furnish the officers with the license number on the fugitive car.

Fred Baumann, Joe Delfino and W. L. Bryant, all Triangle employes, were among those held up and robbed when the three automobile bandits entered the bank.

National Association Accomplishes Much Good

REVIEW OF YEAR'S WORK SHOWS MANIFOLD BENEFIT RESULTING FROM LABORS

CALLED UPON time and again to perform herculean tasks in the interests of the industry, and nearly always coming out with colors flying, the National Association of the Motion Pic will enter the new year confident of outdoing the great work it has accomplished during 1917. The year now rapidly drawing to a close will always be regarded as the most critical in the history of the industry. Besieged on all sides by enemies, manufacturers, exchangemen and exhibitors—in fact, every branch of the business—have fought shoulder to shoulder under the banner of the N. A. M. P. I. and the good that has been accomplished is unbounded.

Censorship, taxation and all inimical legislation was defeated through the untiring work of the members of the Censorship committee. The heavy impost placed on films by congress was placed over the objections and good work of the organization, but it is possible that before 1918 is very old, changes will be made in the measure which will considerably lighten the war burden the motion picture industry now totters under.

Gives Government Support

Even while engaged in its most strenuous fights against a common enemy, all branches of the industry found time to rally to the support of the government in carrying out its war aims. At this very minute exhibitors, manufacturers, exchanges, directors, and photo players are engaged in furthering the war interests of the United States through the medium of the film and the screen. It was largely through the efforts of motion picture men that both the Liberty Loans proved successes.

The screen has been of incalculable value to Herbert S. Hoover in his food conservation campaign. In fact, government propaganda of all kinds is being thrown on the screen largely through the efforts of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in co-operation with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

While it is true that the combined efforts of the biggest men in the industry failed to prevent the great split of the exhibitors at the Chicago convention, nevertheless, right now the National Association has brought the rival factions together and it is not beyond hope that the Exhibitors' League and the American Association will be merged as one powerful unit.

Starting back in January the officers and committeemen of the National Association have been kept on a perpetual jump. When, soon after the New Year, word was received that various bills, covering taxation, Sunday closing and censorship were to be brought up in several state capitols, the strength of the National Association was fully mobilized and battle lines effectively drawn. Bills were introduced simultaneously in some states providing for the opening of motion picture theaters on Sunday, and a most notable victory was achieved in the State of Indiana, where the theaters are now open through the passage of a bill introduced at the instance of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Indiana and which was signed by Governor Goodrich.

Sunday Opening in Prospect

A favorable report for the Sunday Opening Bill in New Jersey was lost through the absence of one vote at a committee meeting, through circumstances beyond human control.

In Connecticut the "blue laws" were amended by a bill which passed the General Assembly by a large majority but which was subsequently vetoed by Governor Holcomb.

While state wide Sunday opening was defeated in New York nevertheless splendid work along educational lines was accomplished and it is believed that there is a good chance of passing such a measure at the forthcoming session of the legislature.

Through the adoption of a joint resolution of the New York legislature an investigation of the motion picture industry, covering a period of several months, was conducted by a legislative committee, the chairman being Assemblyman Heber E. Wheeler, a co-introducer of the distasteful Christman-Wheeler censorship bill.

The association waged an aggressive fight against the Wheeler Committee's report which if enacted would have entailed an expense upon the film interests in the state of New York of at least $1,000,000 and made necessary the complete re-adjustment of the business throughout the Empire state. While the committee's report was passed by the Senate and Assembly, it was referred to the Judiciary Committee of the upper house, from which the bill was never reported.

Defeat Censorship Bills

The association assisted in a large degree in securing the defeat of taxation and other obnoxious bills before the judiciary general committee in Pennsylvania, one of which would have entailed an expense of $750,000 a year upon the manufacturers and distributers. None of these bills was reported out of committee, though it was freely predicted that the taxation bill would be passed for revenue purposes.

Mae Marsh in a scene from Goldwyn's "The Cinderella Man."

It was largely through the valuable assistance rendered by exhibitors that the Committee on Censorship, headed by David Wark Griffith, was enabled to bring about the defeat of censorship bills in thirty-one states.

A News Film association was organized with Jack Cohn of Universal as chairman.

The association co-operated with several detective agencies in bringing to justice a number of film thieves who caused much loss to the industry. Plans are now under way providing for the establishment of a film theft bureau, through the efforts of which thousands of dollars worth of film, it is expected, will be returned to the lawful owners.

Early in the year the association went on record as being opposed to the production of objectionable pictures through the adoption of a resolution which was highly commended and received editorial space in the press.

A committee on children's pictures was created which issued a folder containing a list of photoplays recommended for presentation at children's performances. A plan of co-operation has been put into effect with the International Sunday School Board, comprising five million boys and girls, reports of which would indicate that much good has been accomplished.

Get Films Into Mails

Splendid accomplishments have been obtained by the standing committees during the past year, this being particularly true in regard to the Transportation and Insurance committees. The admission to parcel post of motion picture film for transportation in the mails was effected through an order issued by the second Assistant Postmaster General at Washington just a year ago, acting upon the direct request of this committee representing the industry.

The Transportation committee successfully co-operated with the traffic managers of the American, Adams, National and Wells Fargo companies and this plan has been productive of much good to the entire industry.

Boost Liberty Loan

In the first Liberty Loan campaign the association issued 30,000 slides and 8,006 Liberty Loan trailers, bringing forth a letter of praise from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo. A war council consisting of eighty members of the association was appointed by President William A. Brady at the personal and direct request of President Wilson. A National Committee was also named, with one member from each state, to assist the federal authorities in the dissemination of information through the 17,750 motion picture theaters in the United States.

At the Chicago annual meeting which was continued in New York, William A. Brady was again elected president of the association and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary. Arrangements were made for the holding of two expositions in 1918. The first will take place in New York at Grand Central Palace, February 2 to 10, while the other will be held in Boston in July, during the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. The profits will be equally divided between the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and will be used to further develop and extend the interests of the two great organizations.

The membership of the National Association at the end of the first year comprises 79 companies, classified as follows: Distributors 10, producers 47, supply and equipment 19, publications 3, also 135 individual members.

Unable to Skate—Gladys Brockwell Hunts

Gladys Brockwell, who is now appearing in William Fox's photoplay "For Liberty," finds it hard just now to enjoy her favorite sport of skating. For three years she has been living in Los Angeles making beautiful pictures for Mr. Fox. But ice is only found in refrigerators in Los Angeles and Miss Brockwell yearns for a Central or Van Cortland Park, New York City. For outdoor exercise during this winter Miss Brockwell has taken to hunting.

Doctor Prescribes "Go to Movies"

Pursuing its purpose to advance the propaganda for a "Go-to-the-Movie Week" among exhibitors throughout the country, the Universal has consulted with Dr. Maurice Rosenberg, a prominent New York physician, and he has issued a prescription in regulation form and drug store style. These "doctor's orders" have been printed as window cards by Universal and are being shipped to every exhibitor of moving pictures in the United States.

Dr. Rosenberg's formula carries the physician's picture to give it authenticity and has a line for each of the following recommendations printed in reproduction of the doctor's handwriting:

"Talk cheerfully. Avoid arguments. Stop fretting. Smile. Get out of yourself. Go to the movies at least twice a week."

Crosses Continent Twice Within Month

Twice crossing the continent in less than a month, H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, has departed for New York from the Culver City, Cal., studio to complete plans for production activity in the western plant unparalleled in the history of the film industry.

While in the east, Mr. Davis will arrange for the purchase and production, by a recently formed syndicate, of a series of famous plays which will be screened in multiple-reel features. The first of these plays, upon which work will soon be started, is "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rand Kennedy.

Mr. Davis expects to return to Los Angeles within a few weeks.

Wallace McDonald Is Triangle Player

Wallace McDonald, well-known leading man who, until recently, played important parts with a moving picture concern in the east, has just arrived in Los Angeles from New York and has been added to the large playing forces at the Triangle Culver City studios.

Harmony Reigns in United Industry

EXHIBITORS AND DISTRIBUTORS JOIN HANDS FOR CONCERTED ACTION

AS the result of meetings which were held in New York during the past week between the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee and a similar committee from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, it is authoritatively reported that harmony and unity was established and the two bodies agreed on a definite plan of campaign to be pursued in obtaining the necessary remedial legislation from Congress during this session.

This combined committee is to be known as the Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Industry. It is made up as follows: Walter W. Irvin, P. A. Powers, Gabriel L. Hess, Ricord Gradwell, Arthur S. Friend, Frank Rembusch, H. B. Varner, John J. O'Donnell, Ernest H. Horstmann and Lee A. Ochs. The following committee on publicity was also appointed: Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Frank Rembusch and Lee A. Ochs.

The two committees were enabled to comprehend that success could only be achieved by means of a united industry and after some discussion it was determined that the two committees could concentrate their efforts along the same lines, and the plan of campaign as finally decided upon was eminently satisfactory.

The duties of the publicity committee that was appointed will be largely that of collecting and collating information of a statistical nature for the benefit of the legislative committee. In order to bring this to the attention of the exhibitors of the country the committee has taken full pages of advertising in all of the trade papers calling upon exhibitors to supply the detailed and accurate information as to how the war taxes have affected the business of their individual theaters.

The advertisement is addressed to all motion picture exhibitors and says:

"The undersigned committee of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America elected by the joint convention of all exhibitor organizations held at Washington, D. C., December 11 and 12, hereby request the fullest co-operation and assistance of every motion picture exhibitor in America.

"We are charged with the duty of gathering the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is affecting every motion picture theater, with a view of securing through united effort a re-adjustment of the war exise taxes on motion picture theaters and film presentation to Congress.

"Therefore we respectfully request each and every exhibitor to fill out the following blank, giving the full facts and figures available, the experience of each theater, and forward immediately by mail to Frank Rembusch, secretary, Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee, Indianapolis, Ind."

Following are the questions which exhibitors are requested to answer:

"How does the business of your theater for the month of November, 1916, compare with the month of November, 1917?

"Have you suffered a comparative loss and to what do you attribute same?

"Did the tax affect your business and to what extent?

"General remarks."

In filling out this blank exhibitors were requested to be absolutely frank and honest. No attempt is being made in collecting this information to disclose business secrets in any way.

Miss Young Donates Studio as Barracks

Clara Kimball Young has been keeping open house for Uncle Sam during the past week, and the big studio at New Rochelle where she makes her Select Pictures, has taken on the appearance of an army barracks.

When a detachment of troops ordered to Fort Slocum arrived in New Rochelle ahead of their schedule the other day, they found quarters at the fort too congested to accommodate them, and the townspeople were called on to provide billets. Miss Young placed her studio at the disposal of their commanding officer with the result that about fifty of the men have been using it as sleeping quarters.

New Laughs in Big V Comedies

New laughs and thrills are promised in the last two Big V Comedies on the 1917 program, completed at Vitagraph's Hollywood studio: "Dummies and Deception," on December 24, and "Stowaways and Strategy," on December 31. In this last named comedy, Director J. A. Howe took his company to sea for a couple of weeks and the actors risked their necks high above the Pacific, with masts instead of skyscrapers to leap and climb about on. Down the funnels, up and over the sides tackled on dry land, crew and passengers standing aghast at their ingenuity and daring. Montgomery and Rock are the stowaways and Director Howe, who wrote the comedy, makes them earn their money keeping aided and abetted by Lucille Hutton.

"Dummies and Deceptions," written and directed by Henry Kernan, centers about the strange adventures of a $1,000 bill, which husband hides in an old coat, which in turn wife sells to an old clothes man. Jack Dill, Caroline Rankin and Mr. Kernan furnish the fun, which is fast and without let-up, and they are ably supported by the Big V's famous beauty squad.

Alice Joyce Begins Play

Alice Joyce, star of many big Vitagraph productions, has begun work on a new Blue Ribbon feature, to be entitled "The Song of the Soul."

Buys "The Knife" For Screen Presentation

Select Will Star Alice Brady in One of the Season's Broadway Successes—Written by Eugene Walter.

SELECT PICTURES has acquired another big Broadway success for one of its stars. "The Knife," which was one of the past season's greatest hits and which was the attraction chosen to open the New Bijou Theater, has been purchased for Miss Alice Brady and will be her next production.

As in the case of "The House of Glass," bought a couple of weeks ago for Clara Kimball Young, competition was exceedingly brisk among the film companies for motion picture rights. Select's acquisition of the picture rights to this play represents lavish expenditure.

"The Knife" is another tremendously gripping play from the pen of Eugene Walter, author of "The Easiest Way" and "Paid in Full."

Production has already been started on "The Knife" and the star with her director, Robert G. Vignola, and part of her company have just returned from a flying trip to Florida where the opening scenes of the story were filmed. Aside from Mr. Vignola and his assistant, William J. Scully, Miss Brady was accompanied South by her leading man, Frank Morgan, Johnnie Walker, who plays the juvenile role, Anne Cornwall, Helen Lackaye, Myra Brook and the photographer, H. L. Physioc.

"Broadway Love" Shows Lightless Street

With Broadway going dark and the nation headed for prohibition, there will probably be several changes in the plans for photoplay plots before long. The Bluebird people have anticipated one phase of the changed conditions in producing "Broadway Love," the release set for Jan. 21 with Dorothy Phillips the star. This story of W. Carey Wonderly's will be shown in its many scenes of night life on New York's Main street to reflect the gloomy conditions of a lightless Broadway. It will be either Sunday or Thursday evening in all of the street and cabaret scenes that abound throughout the progress of the story.

It is believed that "Broadway Love" will be the first photoplay produced especially to show night life in New York under the latest conditions of coal economy.

Want to Go to Africa?

High class motion picture directors are wanted for production work in South Africa. The information is given out by Max Schlesinger, the American representative of the African Films Production, Limited. Mr. Schlesinger's offices are at 10 Wall street, New York City, and personal applications should be made to him at that address.

Title Is Changed

A change has been made in the title of Jewel Carmen's first starring vehicle for William Fox. The drama will be called "The Kingdom of Love." Frank Lloyd is directing it.

Essanay Pictures Are Making Good

Essanay's latest pictures are proving popular with both exhibitors and patrons, according to reports from throughout the country, and have been especially well treated by critics in newspapers and trade journals.

Little Mary McAlister again has lived up to her box office drawing power in "The Kill-Joy" and continues a stellar attraction in "Young Mother Hubbard" and "Pants."

Taylor Holmes' latest picture, a comedy drama, "The Small Town Guy," in which he portrays the role of a rube, has been received with favor by patrons, exhibitors say, and the famous comedian is gaining new friends with each picture. Demands also are numerous for Mr. Holmes' earlier releases, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "Fools for Luck" and "Two Bit Seats."

"Gift o' Gab," a comedy drama of college life, featuring Jack Gardner and Helen Ferguson, has proved a success.

Open New "School for Acting"

Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, have started a school of acting, in which the color line is not drawn. Already they have thirty pupils, of whom four are girls of jet hue. Just how long the school will last and what will be accomplished is problematic. The idea of launching out as teachers of historionism came during the filming of a new picture, just after the Lees finished "Troublemakers." About forty children were hired to act as foundlings. The youngsters caused more or less trouble and confusion and it was to remedy these difficulties that Jane and Katherine began their institution.

Jane vows that she has made a star of Edna May Peterson, four years old and the color of chocolate. Edna May is willing to take her word for it.

Russell at Work on "Polo Jack"

William Russell will soon start work on the final of his present series of six pictures, entitled "Polo Jack," another Charles Turner Dazey story which promises to excel "The Sea Master," and "New York Luck," also by Mr. Dazey and recently produced under Edward Sloman's direction.

The screen adaptation of "Polo Jack" is the work of James E. Hungerford, well-known author engaged recently by the American Film Company.

Miss Francelia Billington will again play the leading feminine role opposite Mr. Russell, but the remainder of the supporting cast is yet to be selected.

Fox Sees 1918 a Year of Achievement

PRODUCER LOOKS FOR MARKED ADVANCE IN PICTURE IDEALS

BY WILLIAM FOX

Spectacular achievement and advancement will mark the motion picture art in 1918, in my opinion. There will be a spirit of persistent betterment—a striving for the attainment of higher ideals.

Greater stories than ever before will be told on the screen; the themes will be closer to the heart of the American public and the action of the photoplays will be more human. Productions, while not more lavish, will depict actual occurrences in a more convincing way than ever before.

Learns from Pictures

America will learn from the motion picture camera the progressive story of the world war. I believe, too, that our national cause will be greatly assisted by the motion picture, due to the fact that the American branch of the industry is united behind President Wilson.

During the next twelve months I propose to take the motion picture patrons through the library of classical literature, as well as the popular writings, including farce and melodrama. Producers should not decry the lack of material when there remains the work of Victor Hugo, Dumas, Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Balzac, De Maupassant, Daudet, Bulwer Lytton and all the renowned American writers to draw upon.

American Brains Get Chance

I hope to develop playwrights by giving the young American brains of both men and women the opportunity to write original stories for my scenarios. The photoplaywright will be paid double the previous prices for original scenarios during 1918.

During the next twelve months the writer for the screen will receive a well earned recognition. The creation of his brain will be exploited under his name, instead of giving all the credit to a star actor or actress in the picture. The only way to develop big brains and imagination is to give them public recognition in addition to liberal payment.

Give Relief from Distress

Cheerfulness is contagious and a large percentage of the plays during the next year will be light comedies, farces, etc., as a relief from the daily news from the war-torn countries.

The great film play of the future will not necessarily be the spectacular. It will be a straightforward story, naturally acted, staged with newly invented lighting effects and directed without exaggeration. That character of story will appeal to every clean human mind.

Sees Censorship's Demise

Censorship by a single-handed controller of thought and intellectuality will die in the coming year.

No person on earth is qualified to pass first and final judgment on any subject, whether it be in law courts or in the legislation of the Government. And much less should motion picture censorship be intrusted to one man for first and final decision, whether that man be intellectual and broad minded or whether that man be stupid, arrogant and narrow minded.

Russia rebelled against censorship and the Czar. So, too, will the American people rebel against the Censor Czar, whether it be of the press or the motion picture.

I feel that my 1917 pictures, "A Daughter of the Gods," "The Honor System," "A Tale of Two Cities," and "Romeo and Juliet," have evidenced the advance in the motion picture art.

Children's pictures such as "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Treasure Island," have been exceedingly well received by school teachers, women's clubs, the press and others interested in the better class of pictures.

During 1918 I will present Victor Hugo's immortal masterpiece, "Les Miserables"; William Farnum will appear in the role Jean Valjean. I consider this production a classic.

Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" is another picture to be seen throughout the United States during 1918.

"Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellermann will inaugurate genuine underwater photography, which I know will be acceptable to the American public.

"Du Barry," "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," and a host of other fine novels will be issued by my company.

I also have ready for presentation "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," the most charming picture of its type I have ever seen.

We have a children's fairy tale made in Japan which I am sure will point the way to advanced picturization of foreign atmosphere.

Invades Southern Continent

During 1918 I shall send producing companies to Brazil and Argentine. This will serve to show the glorious scenery and the development of the Pan-American countries.

Arrangements have been made by which I shall film fifty-two extraordinary productions, known as Standard Pictures; fifty-two feature plays, running on the screen from one hour to seventy-five minutes, and twenty-six comedies. In addition to these, we shall stage a few films which will show the occasion for the entry of America into the world war.

List of Fox Stars

Under my management during the year 1918 will be Theda Bara, William Farnum, Annette Kellermann, George Walsh, Jewel Carmen, Virginia Pearson, Tom Mix, June Caprice, Sonia Markova, Jane and Katherine Lee, Francis Carpenter and Virginia Corbin, Gertrude Messinger and Georgie Stone, Gladys Brockwell and others.

Fox distribution offices encircle the globe. Exchanges and branches are to be found in every civilized country in the world. The Fox organization was the first American film company to lead the way into foreign fields.

Aviator Wales "Drops In" for Visit

Former American Film Company Employe Flies to Santa Barbara and Takes Bill Russell for a "Spin"

"THERE'S no telling," said William Russell, when Lieut. Edward Wales, formerly with the American Film Company at Santa Barbara, dropped in one morning on a flying visit. "There's no telling, you know—I may want to aviate a little myself sometime. Just for instance, lieutenant, what the dickens is this arrangement here for?"

"Just a minute," said the young air navigator, "It's like this. First you——."

And William Russell, who knows a lot about the screen, but little about an airship, was given his first lesson in operating one of the greyhounds of the air that Lieutenant Wales can manipulate with the ease of long practice.

Mr. Russell took a few trial flights about the place; but you could tell that he sort of wanted to hang around as near the ground as possible.

"Don't worry," reassured Wales, "If you fly high and anything happens and you get a drop, you know, the distance 'll never bother you. Half the time they are dead before they strike the ground at all. So don't be afraid if we seem to hit the high places."

"I guess it must be time for me to go home for dinner," protested Russell.

So the trial flights ended and Russell spent the rest of the time in examining every bolt in the airplane.

Starts New Year with Four Strong Plays

Vitagraph Offers Quartette of Blue Ribbon Features for January Based on Stories of Literary Merit

GREATER Vitagraph will start the New Year with an even stronger offering of Blue Ribbon features than it closes 1917 with, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. Four strong plays have been listed for the month of January and these bring to the exhibitors many of the Vitagraph favorities, among them Earle Williams, Corinne Griffith, Nell Shipman, Evart Overton, Alfred Whitman, Edward Earle, Miriam Miles and Betty Howe.

President Smith declares that the outstanding feature of the January program is the excellence of story presented in each picture.

"Without real stories," said Mr. Smith, the best stars and the best productions that a company can put out fail in their primary object—entertainment—and unless the public is entertained, the motion picture industry is bound to come to a standstill. Thus, it is up to the producers to provide their stars with the best stories available. With Vitagraph this has long been a fixed policy and I feel safe in the statement that no company has on its list of contributors a better or more extensive company of fine writers than has this."

The list of productions as announced by President Smith follows:

January 7—"The Blind Adventure," featuring Edward Earle and Betty Howe.

January 14—"The Wild Strain," featuring Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman.

January 21—"The Menace," featuring Corinne Griffith with Evart Overton.

January 28—"A Mother's Sin," featuring Earle Williams.

Commands Army Without Raising Voice

He commanded an army of 5,000. He wore no uniform and he never raised his voice. The man was J. Gordon Edwards, who directed "Cleopatra" and who makes all of Theda Bara's productions.

Most motion picture directors are inordinately fond of epaulets, puttees, megaphones and other trappings so dear to the heart of men who like glitter and pomp. Mr. Edwards wears puttees only when astride a horse, as he rides about giving directions for a great "mob" scene. Only once during the entire time that he was handling the tremendous crowds in "Cleopatra" was Mr. Edwards seen to use a megaphone—in one of the big naval battle "shots"—and he spoke hardly above a conversational tone even then.

"The coolest man I ever saw directing such a gigantic production," was the tribute of Alfred Cohn, managing editor of Photoplay Magazine.

Vitagraph Helps U. S. Win Recruits

In co-operation with the United States Army department of ordnance, Greater Vitagraph is sending out a trailer urging mechanics to enlist in the service of the government. The trailer is being attached to the Blue Ribbon feature, "For France," a patriotic five-reel subject in which Edward Earle and Betty Howe are featured. This picture, which has aroused audiences to heights of enthusiasm wherever shown, was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady and made under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, who since has been called to the National Army. It was filmed at Centreport, L. I., where, under the direction of regular army officers and veterans of the fighting in France, an exact duplicate of the Marne battlefield was built. More than a thousand troops of the regular army, most of which are now believed to be in France with the first American army, were used in this picture.

Feature Production for Miss Fischer

Margarita Fischer, American Film Company star, has finished her second feature production, entitled "Molly Go Get 'Em," under the supervision of Director Lloyd Ingraham. The story by Beatrice Van was adapted to the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. It is the second of a new line of comedy drama written expressly for the new American star. Miss Van also wrote Miss Fischer's first story produced under the working title of "A Daughter of Joan."

After a short vacation, the production of "High Heels," the third of the new comedy dramas, will be commenced. Helen Starr wrote the story and James E. Hungerford is responsible for the screen adaptation.

New Rice Story Filmed

"Calvary Alley," the latest novel by Alice Hegan Rice, whose famous story, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," has become a veritable classic of its kind, has been chosen as the next Paramount picture starring the dainty Ann Pennington.

Triangle Finishes Two New Stories

Features Are Begun, Embracing Ladies' Home Journal and Collier's Weekly Subjects, in Rapid Fire Schedule

WITH two pictures completed and two new subjects begun, the Triangle Culver City studio continues to keep pace with the exceptional production schedule set by General Manager H. O. Davis, and several dramas of exceptional merit are now in the preliminary stages of production. The scenario department is busy on the screen adaptations of some well known magazine stories and novels by popular authors, and the staff of authors is also working on several promising original photoplays.

Director Frank Borzage has just put the finishing touches on his latest Triangle offering, "The Gun Woman," featuring Texas Guinan. Supporting Miss Guinan are several well known Triangle players including Ed Brady and Francis McDonald. In the closing scenes Director Borzage worked with a bevy of Triangle beauties as dance hall girls and all of the cowboys from the Hartville ranch as western atmosphere when "The Gun Woman's" saloon and gambling hall was "shot." The picture is now in the hands of the film editors.

Director Cliff Smith has finished the latest offering starring the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart, who scored a decided hit in his latest western release, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton." Stewart's new vehicle is "The Law's Outlaw." Fritzie Ridgeway again supports him in this drama of western life.

A new subject on which Director Smith has started work and in which Stewart will be featured, is the screen adaptation of Randall Parish's well-known novel, "Keith of the Border." An exceptionally large cast will support Stewart in this picture. The opening shots are being made with the star in typical western atmosphere. As yet the complete cast has not been announced.

Following "Keith of the Border," the cowboy favorite will appear in the screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel, "Boss of the Lazy Y," declared by Alvin J. Neitz, continuity expert on western subjects, to be the greatest two-gun man story he ever handled. Stewart plays the first four reels as an unshaven roughneck, bursting forth as a well-groomed gentleman in the closing canto.

Director Thomas Heffron has started work on the screen adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's crook comedy, "The Hopper," which appeared recently in Collier's Weekly. In this drama William V. Mong, cast in the title role, is shown as a reformed safe-blower who, through a strange trick of fate, is forced into a kidnaping and robbery. Mong's supporting cast includes Irene Hunt, Peaches Jackson, the four-year-old child star, Walt Whitman, George Hernandez, Eugene Corey, Lillian West and Louis Durham.

Other directors who have practically completed their latest Triangle pictures are Jack Dillon, E. Mason Hopper, Raymond Wells and Gilbert P. Hamilton. Directors Jack Conway, Walter Edwards and Frank Borzage are waiting for new stories.

Director Dillon is working with Olive Thomas on the final scenes for the star's fifth Triangle picture, "Limousine Life," from Ida M. Evans' magazine story of the same name.

George C. Bertholon, who, since the formation of Goldwyn Pictures, has been an assistant director at the Fort Lee studio, has been made assistant to Aubrey M. Kennedy, director of productions.

Marie Dressler Writes Her Own Scenario

Word comes from the Los Angeles studios of the Dressler Producing Corporation that Marie Dressler has completed her second comedy for Goldwyn release, entitled "Fired." It is in two reels.

Reports from cities and towns in which "The Scrub-Lady," her first Goldwyn comedy, has been shown indicate that Miss Dressler has lost none of the great public which used to flock to see her before she gave up the speaking stage for the motion picture screen.

Miss Dressler believes that the satisfactory completion of her second comedy marks her entrance into the ranks of successful scenario writers.

"I wrote the story of 'Fired' all by myself," she says proudly, "and, if I do say it as shouldn't, it strikes me as pretty blamed funny."

Hunt Club Ball Is Film Feature

An elaborate hunt club ball is one of the many features in the Metro production of Shannon Fife's story "Red, White and Blue Blood." This picture starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, was adapted by June Mathis and directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The hunt club ball was held in a spacious setting, representing the ball room of a fashionable club house. Scores of players danced in the scenes. Mr. Bushman and the principal men members of the cast wore the stylish "pink" hunting jackets with sky blue facing, and silk knickerbockers. The rest of the players were also fashionably dressed.

Exhibitor Is Pleased with Two Features

The following letter from Thomas S. Daley, manager of the Casino Theater, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, dated November 10, was received by the Goldwyn Pictures home office in New York:

"Enclosed please find a copy of a weekly program that I am publishing for your first run house in Eastern Canada, the Casino Theater, of this city. Believe me, if 'Polly' and 'Baby Mine' are a criterion of what to expect from your studios in future releases, it will not require much printer's ink to put them across. The name 'Goldwyn' will suffice."

Dearholt Joins Bluebird

Following an engagement of more than two years with the American Film Company, Ashton Dearholt lately joined the Bluebird forces and is playing a leading role opposite Carmel Myers in "The Green Seal," which is being produced as a program feature under the direction of Stuart Paton.

Elephant Is Star

"Too Much Elephant," the current Selburn comedy, released by General Film Company, offers clever holiday entertainment. This is the second of the series of comedies featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby. Their co-star is a highly trained elephant.

Forecasts Decline of Star System

PRODUCER BELIEVES NEW YEAR WILL SEE CHANGE IN INDUSTRY

BY HERBERT BRENON

I HAVE always been very much opposed to the star system.

When I speak of the star system I mean the centralization of all effort and expenditure on the star to the exclusion of everything else.

In the making of pictures I am a firm believer in the story first, last and all the time. I believe that for the development of a screen story as with everything else, the very best material should be obtained not only for the highest place, but for the most insignificant as well.

In selecting a cast for production, I do not look for big names. To me talent and suitability are far more important factors. If, however, an artist of world wide reputation is best fitted to a certain type of role, and his name is indissolubly connected with a certain part, I waive the policy of no star, and welcome the appearance of the name of that artist in connection with my production.

Some Stars Necessary

Take, for instance, the case of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, or Otis Skinner. Who can bring to mind the production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" without conjuring up the mental vision of Sir Johnston in his beautiful performance of the Stranger? Or again, is it possible to think of "Kismet" without thinking of Otis Skinner in the role of the beggar Hajj? These two artists are part of their characters in these two dramas. They have created and developed these characters until they absolutely become essential to the presentation of the play. It is impossible to separate one from the other.

No matter how great the drawing power of a star, however, it is absolutely fatal to sacrifice the production as a whole. That to me is the great argument against the star system, and really the only one.

When the time comes that it is necessary to sacrifice the supporting company, and cut down on the sets, etc., then it is time to cut down on the star. Otherwise someone is bound to suffer and in nine cases out of ten it is the exhibitor; and as the exhibitor is the rock upon which the whole motion picture business is founded, it is obvious that to tax him beyond his strength is disastrous.

The star system is dwindling. It is fast disappearing on the stage and its popularity is diminishing on the screen. The great trouble at the present time is that producers are underestimating the intelligence of their audiences.

Motion picture audiences are becoming more exacting and more discriminating every day.

Drama Will Survive

The tendency of 1918, far from being stars and more stars, will be towards eliminating them to a vast degree; not that a Douglas Fairbanks, a Marguerite Clark or an Elsie Ferguson will ever disappear from the realms of filmdom. Exceptional talent such as these great artists possess will ever be welcomed on the screen, but curls and baby doll faces will be relegated to the background, and the drama will come into its own.

A great artist and a great story is an unbeatable combination. But a great artist should not be expected to waste his substance on the desert air. One of the saddest sights to be seen on the screen today is that of a true artist struggling with a poor play.

Many producers think that by exploiting a big name, they can afford to let the subject slip into the background. I wonder if they realize how they are ruining their own prospects.

Why Business is Bad

How often do we hear those who should be interested in the motion picture say, "Well I used to go all the time, but I don't any more. You see such silly pictures, and it's such waste of time. I would rather sit at home and read a book which is really worth while than be bored to death at a moving picture theater."

Doesn't it seem a pity? Don't these producers see the injustice that they are casting on their profession? Don't they realize the ultimate harm that they are doing to themselves and to the industry as a whole?

Jack Stewart, one of the best known exchange managers in the South, was married in Memphis, Tenn., on November 28, to Miss Gertrude Morris, a belle of Memphis. Mr. Stewart is manager of the Triangle offices in New Orleans.

Offers New Seven Part Feature

Triangle Produces "I Love You," Containing Many Unusual Features—Walter Edwards Directs Production

FOLLOWING the releasing of the first Triangle seven-reel production, "Because of a Woman," with Belle Bennett on December 16, the next seven-part feature will be "I Love You," starring Alma Rubens, scheduled for release January 13. The seven-reel pictures are a part of the new Triangle service recently announced, that of supplying a seven-reel feature on each month's program without extra cost to the exhibitor.

In producing "I Love You," Director Walter Edwards has endeavored to produce one of the most elaborate pictures yet featured on the Triangle program. The scenes throughout are said to be distinctly striking and as many of them are laid in France and Italy, the ingenuity of the Triangle scenic artists at the Triangle studio was taxed to the utmost.

In one case the manuscript called for a Venetian scene and Director Edwards had two palaces and the Grand Canal of Venice reproduced, from which especially brilliant night effects were made. A street carnival was also taken. Quaint old houses with thatched roofs, the kind to be seen in Italy, were built especially at the Hartville ranch studio. The construction of these buildings resulted in a natural effect being secured and more than "local color."

Other features of great attractiveness that were used in making this picture, included two relics of the days of the padres in Southern California. One was a team of oxen, the property of the Triangle Hartville studio and an old mission bell, formerly used in the days now long gone, by Fathers to call the Indians to worship.

The cast selected for "I Love You," includes besides Alma Rubens, Wheeler Oakman, one of the best known leading men in the country, and Francis McDonald, also a well-known heavy. Both Mr. McDonald and Mr. Oakman are new to Triangle pictures. Others in the cast are Frederick Vroom, Lilliam Langdon and John Lince.

Frohman Play Is Christmas Release

Mutual Offers "Her Sister," Starring Olive Tell—Ethel Barrymore Was Star of Stage Production

MUTUAL'S Christmas offering will be "Her Sister," a Charles Frohman play in picture starring the Charles Frohman actress, Miss Olive Tell, whose work in "The Unforeseen," established the quality of her screen work and her value at the box office. "Her Sister" is releasesd December 24.

"Her Sister" is a picture adaptation of the Broadway success in which Miss Ethel Barrymore scored a sensational hit. Miss Tell is admirably suited to the part of Eleanor Alderson. She is supported by David Powell and a cast of Frohman players.

This picture was made at the Empire Long Island studios under the direction of John B. O'Brien, and affords Miss Tell an opportunity of displaying her diversified talents.

Director O'Brien has provided a throne-room scene for her as "Isis," the fortune-teller, of voluptuous splendor, which is a masterpiece of stage setting.

In the supporting cast is David Powell, who won high praise for his work in a difficult role in "The Unforeseen," Eileen Dennes, Anita Rothe, Mrs. Clarat-Bracy, Harriett Thompson and Martha Dean.

In the concluding chapter of "The Lost Express," the "Return of the Lost Express," released December 24, is cleared up the mystery of the missing train.

Helen, after a thrilling series of adventures, in which all previous "stunts" are put in the shade, discovers the train and drives it back to the main track. The picture is brought to a tremendous climax in the spectacular destruction of an entire town by fire, and a hair-raising rescue from the flames by Helen.

Billie Rhodes in the Strand comedy, "Mary's Boomerang," takes the part of a girl who attempts to prove that her chum's husband is a flirt, gets them all mixed up in a family mess, which almost leads to a divorce, but finally emerges from the affairs a sadder but wiser girl.

"Oneta," a super-horse with almost human intelligence, is a co-star with George Ovey in the Cub comedy, "Jerry's Best Friend." This equine does stunts that are amazing, and rescues Jerry from a band of cattle-thieves and outlaws.

Mutual Weekly is full of topics of timely interest, covering a diversity of subjects that are pertinent. It is released Monday, December 24.

Use 40,000 Feet of Negative Stock

It is significant of the care with which Goldwyn Pictures are made that no less than 1,087 separate scenes were photographed for the making of Mae Marsh's third starring vehicle, "The Cindrella Man" released December 16. As each scene is usually photographed twice, or in two "takes," to guard against mishaps, this means that a total of 2,074 scenes were photographed, using approximately 40,000 feet of film. About 780 scenes among those taken were eliminated, leaving about 307 to be shown on the screen.

"Blue Jeans" Showing Proves Reunion

Private Exhibition of Metro Feature Brings Together Great Gathering of Theatrical Personages

METRO Pictures Corporation gave a private pre-view of its special production de luxe, "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana, at Wurlitzer Hall on Friday afternoon, December 14. The showing was attended by persons vitally interested in the history of the stage production of Joseph's Arthur's famous old melodrama, which has been adapted by June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor and directed by John H. Collins. These included actors and actresses, managers, press agents, advance agents, and others associated with "Blue Jeans" during the many years of its history.

"Blue Jeans" was originally produced at the old Fourteenth Street Theater in 1890, with Robert Hilliard, Jennie Yeamans, George Fawcett and other well known people in the cast.. Ben Teal was stage manager, and at one time or another practically every advance man in the profession, and a great many players, have been identified with "Blue Jeans."

Robert Hilliard, the first to play the leading masculine role of Perry Bascom, was present at the screen performance to watch the work of his nephew, Robert Walker, in the part he originated. Mabel Taliaferro, now a Metro star, who made her debut in "Blue Jeans" in the part of the baby, was also present.

Finery Designer Helps to Make Picture

Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn picture, directed by George Loane Tucker, which revolves around a fashionable modiste's shop, is going to have the atmosphere of the real thing. To make the atmosphere genuine, Goldwyn has engaged Hickson, the famous Fifth avenue creator of delightful things feminine, to supply costumes and mannequins to wear them.

The new picture will give Miss Normand the opportunity to wear some of the fetchingest apparel she has ever been arrayed in for a motion picture. Not the least fetching article is a nightgown its artistic creator has chosen to dub "The Vampire," imagined and brought into being especially for Mabel Normand.

Foreign Exhibitors Praise "The Spy"

William Fox Production Is Accorded Favorable Comment at Trade Showings in Great Britain

THE generally favorable reviews and the reports of big business on "The Spy" are resulting, according to the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation, in many inquiries being made regarding the picture by exhibitors and agencies in territory outside the United States.

Advices from London this week are to the effect that the picture received markedly favorably comment on the occasion of its recent presentation at British trade showings. Interest, of course, is heightened by the fact that experiences paralleling those pictured in the film story have been of common occurrence in England during the last three years. The same, however, is true of other capitals and important cities; in all of these the agents of the contenders in the present world war long have been busily at work seeking information and data which might be of military value.

The universal appeal of the picture is declared to hinge on this very point. "The Spy," according to William Fox, is primarily a disclosure of the methods of secret service workers. It is a chapter from current history. And the enterprises that are being carried along, under ground, in Washington and Berlin and London and Paris are being duplicated very largely, not only in the metropolises of the nations at war, but also throughout the neutral world.

The story of a condition of this sort in any part of the globe today, it is contended, is in effect a story of conditions in all parts of the globe. And it is just as much a matter of importance for the people of neutral nations to protect themselves against plotters as it is for warring nations to do the same thing.

It is unimportant to the spirit of the production whether Dustin Farnum, who plays the leading role, takes the part of an American or of an Englishman, a Frenchman, a Mexican, a Brazilian or an Austrian; in any case the appeal is the same—to national self-preservation.

The Fox management is confident that "The Spy" will prove just as big a success in other parts of the world as it has proved in the United States and at the British trade shows. An international campaign on behalf of the picture now is being outlined and meanwhile the foreign department is closing with buyers for territory remaining open.

Tell Us What Pictures Are Doing for You

The following letter is addressed to the exhibitors of the country through Motography. Let us tell the theater owners of the nation how the pictures YOU show are succeeding.

"Brother Exhibitor:

"I have been playing pictures ever since they were made, with all kinds of experience with all kinds of exchanges. At this time, when business is a little dull and everyone hustling for business, often many exchanges turn down old customers because they see a few temporary new ones in sight. It is a source of great pleasure to me to note that the Mutual Film Exchange, the Great Vitagraph, Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay companies not only put out as good pictures as are made, but they always give you a fair, square deal, and are honorable. Such companies are worthy of all the business that you can give hem. Try and see.

Exposition Space Selling Fast

Success of Grand Central Palace Show Is Assured as Contracts Are Signed by Big Companies

CONSIDERABLE progress has been made during the past fortnight in securing contracts for space allotment for the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace, New York, February 2 to 9, 1918. The exposition will be held under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and will occupy three entire floors.

Twenty-two companies already have taken space and negotiations are pending with nearly one hundred others. Contracts signed thus far are for larger individual spaces than has been the case at any similar exposition of the past and all of the present entrants plan to make comprehensive attractive displays that will be shows in themselves—not mere cubbyhole exhibits. Indeed the plans for this big show are not being based upon any precedent of the past, but will embrace many new ideas in promoting an exposition to draw the public in great numbers.

Among the largest companies exhibiting are the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Artcraft Pictures Corporation, Paramount Pictures Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., Goldwyn Picture Corporation, Vitagraph Company of America, Fox Film Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Co., World Film Corporation, Frohman Amusement Corporation, Wharton Releasing Corporation, and Triangle Film Corporation.

Brabin Goes West

Charles J. Brabin, Metro director, is en route to the Pacific coast, where he will alternate with John H. Collins in the direction of Viola Dana at the Hollywood Studios in Metro pictures which are supervised by B. A. Rolfe.

Editor Praises Triangle Advertising

The Photoplay Journal of Cincinnati, Ohio, in its issue of December 7, 1917, published the following editorial in reference to the Triangle advertisements directed to the exhibitors, that have recently appeared in the motion picture trade papers.

"Did you notice that Triangle advertisement in the papers? If exhibitors are reading the moving picture advertisements they no doubt have noticed that the Triangle ad is one of the most convincing articles that was ever published. Its tone is one of the most friendly messages that ever reached exhibitors' ears. It is a 'straight from the shoulder' talk and we believe should attract every exhibitors' attention.

"This might be a poor way of writing an editorial, but if an honest writer would read ads as well as news of trade papers, he will soon agree with us that the writer of this particular Triangle ad as well as the Triangle Distributing Corporation deserve credit that is due them, and they are bound to win their battle in the moving picture industry, because every line of this ad has a true message that could not have been delivered to exhibitors in more plainer language.

"Finally, ads of this kind are what every exhibitor is waiting to hear and some more messages of the same quality will more than encourage the managers of the moving picture houses, and will enable them to work in harmony with the producers. Triangle is bound to grow."

Defies Zero Weather to Finish Play

In order to hasten the date of her departure for California, Constance Talmadge, Select star, has been working steadily through zero temperature in the lightest of summer apparel. Her next picture, "The Studio Girl," calls for settings along the bleak Gloucester coast, and with time pressing fast on their heels, Miss Talmadge and her director, Charles Giblyn, have rushed production ahead without waiting for warmer days.

Last Saturday word was received that an exceedingly fine spell of weather had descended on Gloucester, and the Constance Talmadge Company took the night train to Boston. However, the frickle temperature had dropped between sleeping and walking hours to 14 degrees and the players reached town in a snowstorm. Sunday was a day of gloom, but Monday the thermometer climbed from 16 degrees at seven o'clock in the morning to 30 degrees at ten, and the day was saved. The final scenes were shot in record time and the entire party returned to New York that night.

"The Studio Girl" has been adapted for the screen by Paul West from the sparkling comedy, "The Runaway," by Pierre Veber and Henri de Gorsse, and will be distributed through Select exchanges.

Closes Year's Releases

Metro will close its release chart for the year on December 31, when it will release Harold Lockwood's latest production, "The Avenging Trail," a Metro wonderplay adapted by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo from Henry Oyens' novel, "Gaston Olaf," and staged under the direction of Francis Ford.

Gets Remarkable Moonlight Scene

Director George Loan Tucker Secures Realistic Night Photographic Effect in Goldwyn Picture

THE realistic night effects secured in Goldwyn pictures are varied in Mae Marsh's forthcoming vehicle, "The Cinderella Man" by a photographic novelty of the highest order, devised and introduced by George Loane Tucker. The scene is on the water in the bay of Naples, Italy, at night. It is just a short, atmospheric note in the action, but it affords a thrill in giving the effect of the moon passing from under a cloud.

The scene does not show the moon. Mr. Tucker contends that there is much more to be gained by suggestion than by representation, so all that is seen is just the light of the moon, bathing everything in the picture. First the scene is toned deep blue with the moon under the cloud, and then suddenly, as the moon comes out, everything is illumined by a bright light.

In the continuity of "The Cinderella Man," which was written by Director Tucker, may be found the explanation of how the effect was secured.

"Tone the scene blue," reads the direction; "and let three feet run black-and-white." It is very simple when one knows how it is done, but it is highly successful on the screen in indicating the shifting moonlight.

Another novel effect of lighting occurs in the same play. It is a scene in Marjorie Caner's bedroom that opens with what is known technically as a "fade-in." That is to say, out of the darkness the scene gradually appears. This is accomplished by adjusting the opening before the camera lens so that more and more light is admitted. Usually, the hard edges of the opening are seen in the picture, but not so here.

Director Tucker solved the difficulty by gradually strengthening the light from the great Cooper-Hewitts that illuminated the scene. The result is that the fade-in is perfect. The tinting method was employed here, the first four feet running black and white and the rest being colored.

Mutual Closes Memphis Exchange

The latest announcement in the Tennessee exchange field is that the Mutual Film Corporation will close its Memphis office. It is proposed to wind up the affairs of the exchange within the next week or ten days.

Sales Manager Joins Aviation Corps

Gordon Laurence, sales promotion manager for the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, has received orders to proceed to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. There he will receive preliminary instruction in the theory of flying, the mechanics of airplane engines and other branches of aviation, after which he will begin practical training for his work in the service of Uncle Sam. He has been slated for provisional commission in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps.

National Association Is Growing

New Members of N. A. of M. P. I. Are Reported at First Meeting of New Executive Committee

THE members of the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, as recently appointed for the ensuing year by President William A. Brady, met for the first time on Monday afternoon and transacted considerable routine business.

The meeting was presided over by Chairman Walter W. Irwin of Greater Vitagraph, with the following members in attendance: President William A. Brady, World Film; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; P. A. Powers, Universal; Arthur S. Friend, Paramount-Artcraft-Famous Players; William A. Johnston, General Division; Louis F. Blumenthal and Louis L. Levine.

The following officials representing producing and distributing companies of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, members of the Association were also in attendance by invitation: W. R. Sheehan, Fox Film Corp.; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corporation, Felix Feist, World Film Corporation and William Wright, Kalem Company.

Reports of several committees were read, indicating wide-spread activities on behalf of the various divisions of the organization which they represent showing good results accomplished in every direction.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott reported the formation of a new branch comprising members eligible as Class C producers and the following companies actively assisting in the organization of this branch of which Joseph A. Golden of Crystal is chairman, with L. Abrams of Craftsman as secretary: Biograph Co., Craftsmen Film Laboratories, Crystal Film Co., Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., Erbograph Co., Kalem Company, Evans Film Mfg. Co. and Paragon Films, Inc.

That the National Association is making splendid progress in enrolling new members was shown by the election of the following companies and individuals to membership: Ogden Pictures Corporation, Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc., Arthur H. Jacobs Photoplay Company, Craftsmen Film Laboratories, Biograph Co., Paragon Films, Inc., Greater N. Y. Slide Co., Carl Anderson, Studio Director; H. C. Segal, State Rights Buyer, and Albert H. Cormier in the General Division.

The committee went on record in advocating the appointment of Grant W. Anson as commissioner of licenses for New York City through a letter which is to be addressed to Mayor-elect Hylan by President Brady, endorsing Mr. Anson's candidacy for this important post in the new administration.

It was decided to issue a call for the quarterly meeting of the board of directors to be held at the headquarters of the National Association in the Times Building on Friday, December 14 at eleven o'clock.

Pathe Gets Thompson

Pathe announces that Frederick Thompson, maker of what is generally known as Marguerite Clark's best picture, "The Goose Girl," and many other successes, and further distinguished as the first legitimate stage director to go into motion pictures, has been engaged to direct Bessie Love.

War Makes Public More Critical

Head of Producing Company Says Betterment of Industry Will Be the Result of World Conflict

"THE conditions now existing in the motion picture business, on account of war, will eventually result in the betterment of the entire industry," says Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft.

"We have been a profligate nation, and much of the nation's wealth has gone to waste in the past. The big publicity propaganda launched by the government to conserve the nation's resources has shed considerable light on loop-holes of extravagance, which are being closed up.

"In war times more than any other time, the public must have the relaxation of amusement, to lighten the tensity of the great conflict in which our own troops are now taking part. The daily papers teem with news of war, and there is hardly a man, woman or child in the United States who does not give some thought, daily, to the European maelstrom.

"The people of England went through the same experience, and it was found that poor plays and poor pictures were disregarded by the public, while the better attractions did increased business.

"The public has become discriminating, and following the resolutions they have adopted they are demanding their money's worth in amusements as well as in commodities and food. The exhibitor who in the past has been able to operate successfully owing to the good nature and extravagance of his patrons, by showing inferior pictures, is now face to face with a serious problem.

"The American public has become thrifty, and demands so much for so much, but it will continue to patronize its favorite amusement when properly presented. I firmly believe that as time goes on it will mean longer runs of good pictures, and unprecedented prosperity for the exhibitor who takes advantage of the situation and carefully avoids mediocre films.

"In short, the public would rather pay twice as much for a good picture and feel that it has been given its money's worth, than to waste a smaller price of admission on an uninteresting subject."

"Morgan's Raiders," Is Bluebird Offering

Violet Mersereau, star of Bluebirds, will Appear February 4, next, in a picture that reflects war—but not the present strife. "Morgan's Raiders" is the new title, illuminating and self-explanatory, of Bess Meredyth's story and scenario from which Wilfred Lucas worked in directing Miss Mersereau's latest Bluebird. The initial title was "The Wild Cat," and the picture has been thus referred to in previous mention, but "Morgan's Raiders" has been decided upon as its permanent caption for distribution.

Previous to her appearance in "Morgan's Raiders," Miss Marsereau will appear as the star of Bluebird's December 31 attraction (New Year's week) playing "The Girl by the Roadside," screen version of Varick Vanardy's novel of the same title, scenarioized by John C. Brownell and directed by Theodore Marston with Allen Edwards leading man for Miss Mersereau. "The Girl by the Roadside" is being pre-released the week of December 16-22 at the Broadway Theater, New York.

Another feature that has been fixed for the Bluebird program is at present titled "The Catamount," in which Franklyn Farnum will appear week starting January 28, next.

Will Distribute Films In Latin America

The completion of a new deal involving the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, in the West Indies and Central America, has been announced. A new organization has been formed, headed by five of the leading business men of Havana, Cuba, which will control the distribution of every Paramount and Artcraft picture produced.

The territory to be covered by these pictures in the new deal includes all of Cuba, with main offices of the new company in Havana, all of Venezuela, all of Porto Rica, with head offices in San Juan, all the other islands of the West Indies and a large part of Central America.

In this territory are more than 1,000 theaters; Porto Rica has 65 motion picture houses controlled by the new company. There are 300 in Cuba, 20 in San Domingo and the others scattered throughout the rest of the territory. This will bring the Paramount and Artcraft productions before a new audience of over 15,000,000 people in this territory.

O. A. Hornsby, a banker in the West Indies, is the president of the new company.

Hart-Fairbanks Re-issues Are Popular

Triangle announced recently that the Hart and Fairbanks' re-issues were daily proving more popular and through comment received from exhibitors it has been learned that the box office value of these pictures has been much greater than anticipated. The statement follows:

"The Triangle re-issues of Hart and Fairbanks' features have brought forth considerable unsolicited comment of a most favorable nature, from exhibitors throughout the country. Concerning 'Double Trouble,' featuring Douglas Fairbanks, re-issued under date of September 2, a prominent exhibitor of Spokane, Wash., said: 'A fine comedy, especially for those who read the book, and an excellent re-issue.' The manager of the Empress Theater at Owensboro, Ky., in referring to the Hart re-issue, 'The Aryan,' stated: 'This re-issue attracted well and many came to see it again. An excellent box office attraction.'"

Played Sweethearts—Now Married

An interesting romance came to light a couple of days ago in the Clara Kimball Young studio at New Rochelle when Miss Claire Whitney and John Sunderland, both members of Miss Young's staff of players, slipped quietly away and were married.

Mr. Sunderland is a flight officer in the English aviation corps and came to this country recently on leave. He joined Miss Young's company for the production of "Shirley Kaye," playing the part of the young English earl who falls in love with the western financier's daughter. The latter role was Miss Whitney's and it needed only a few rehearsals under Director Emile Chantard, to convince the two that their make believe love was destined to live beyond the influence of "Shirley Kaye." As Mr. Sunderland's leave of absence had very nearly expired, the wedding was planned hurriedly and the young couple left for a brief honeymoon before the date of his sailing.

Offers "The Heart of a Lion"

William Fox releases another Standard Picture December 16. It will be a William Farnum production, "The Heart of a Lion," based on Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor."

The story, which has been read by thousands of moving picture patrons, is called by the author "a tale of the Canadian Rockies," and has been closely followed by Director Frank Lloyd in his screen version. Most of the opening scenes, laid on a farm, were taken on Mr. Farnum's country place on Long Island, several of the old country town characters introduced in the picture being friends and neighbors of the actor.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

"Empty Pockets" Ready for Screen

Brenon Production Is Cut to Six Reels and Turned Over to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Release

"EMPTY POCKETS," Herbert Brenon's latest production, is soon to be released. Assembled, cut to six reels and titled, the film has been turned over to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the members of which viewed the first showing with enthusiasm. In every way, they say, the picture comes up to the high standard that Mr. Brenon has always maintained.

For his first production as an independent producer, he has chosen an author of the calibre of Rupert Hughes, and a notable cast which also speaks for itself.

"Empty Pockets," according to all accounts, comes up to the Brenon standard in every respect—subject, cast and production. Practicaly everyone who takes part in this production has had stage experience, as well as having been tried and found worthy on the screen.

Barbara Castleton's advent into screendom took place a little over a year ago, after a limited experience on the stage. Her rise into the higher circles of the film world has been a quick one and a remarkable one. She began from the bottom and worked up.

Her first experience was obtained in a small part for Herbert Brenon in "A Daughter of the Gods," and take it from Miss Castleton, she owes much of her success to Mr. Brenon's encouragement in the beginning.

Bert Lytell, who made so successful a debut in "The Lone Wolf," takes the part of the young doctor. His stage experience has been a long one. His career on the screen was hailed with enthusiasm by both press and public, and he immediately took his place amongst the favorites of the film fans.

Ketty Galanta also made her debut under the Brenon banner as Anna in "The Fall of the Romanoffs." A dancer by training and a screen actress by choice, she is fast collecting a following of her own. In "Empty Pockets" she plays the role of Maryla. Her activities of late have been arduous, appearing in "Chu Chin Chow" at night and acting for the camera at the Brenon studios by day.

Susanne Willa, who will be seen as Red Ida, has appeared in many Pathe productions.

Peggy Betts, too, has made successful appearances both on the screen and on the stage.

A scene from Empty Pockets, in which Malcolm Williams and Ketty Galanta appear.

Malcolm Williams needs no introduction. He has long been a favorite throughout the country. He will be seen in the role of Perry Merithew.

Gives Petrova Film Its Initial Showing

During he presentation of "Daughter of Destiny," the initial release starring Madame Olga Petrova, Managing Director Samuel L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, arranged an especially elaborate program for the week of December 23. An unusually beautiful series of lighting effects was arranged as an introduction to the Petrova production. The Rialto director has expressed himself as keenly delighted with the results achieved by the Polish star in "Daughter of Destiny" and as a mark of his appreciation personally supervised every detail relative to the presentation of the Petrova production at his famous playhouse.

Start Sales Drive for "Mother"

A vigorous country-wide sales drive has been inaugurated for the George Loane Tucker production, "Mother," by the departure from New Yok this week of Herbert Lubin, Harry G. Kosch, and M. R. Fink, all of whom are connected with General Enterprises, Inc., controlling the territorial distribution for the six-part state right offering.

Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., left New York Monday afternoon for Chicago, on the first leg of an extensive sales trip in the interests of the McClure production, "Mother," which will carry him across the continent to California. Mr. Lubin has established headquarters at the Sherman House, Chicago, and arrangements have been completed whereby "Mother" will receive a special screening in the ball-room of the big hotel on Wednesday, December 19. As an innovation for the state right buyers of the middle West territory, the General Enterprises, Inc., executive has engaged the services of two prominent soloists, together with a leading orchestra of Chicago, and the assembled guests will be entertained by a musical program as a prelude to the screening of "Mother" in the ball-room.

Elizabeth Risdon, star of "Mother," at present playing a leading role in "Misalliance," the William Faversham stage production of George Bernard Shaw's famous drama, is routed to play Chicago this week and Mr. Lubin has taken advantage of the coincidence to have the young star appear at the special screening.

Miss Grant Undertakes New Characterization

Valentine Grant, who is supporting Walker Whiteside in Sidney Olcott's new production, "The Belgian," has created a long line of provincial characters—all wholesome, healthy, clean-minded girls. Miss Grant's creations include Irish, French, Russian, Dutch and Belgian, and all of these characterizations have been notable artistic achievements because of her intimate knowledge of the daily life of these people.

During her career on the screen, to which she came from the concert platform, she has travelled to many foreign countries, the Occident as well as the Orient, and as a result her cosmopolitan experience has given her a first-hand knowledge of habits and customs.

Many of the pictures in which she has appeared and featured by the Famous Players and produced under the personal direction of Sidney Olcott, have proven exceedingly popular with the big picture-going public which comprise the women and young girls, her quaint characterizations appeal to them.

In "The Belgian" Miss Grant has added an entirely new characterization to her many roles, and is not at a loss for her next character, as she is now studying a certain type of an American girl that has never been portrayed on the screen.

Noted Artist Helps Film Publicity Plan

Ernest Shipman has engaged Gosta Carell, famous Swedish portrait painter and illustrator, to put the real art punch into the publicity campaign for the Shorty Hamilton series of feature productions

The demand for these five-reel comedy features continues brisk, and Manager Shipman is being constantly congratulated on the high standard attained in their production by the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company of Los Angeles, California.

Actress Makes Screen Debut

Edith Day, who is featured with Lillian Walker in "The Grain of Dust," the Crest photo-drama picturized from David Graham Phillips' highly successful novel, "The Grain of Dust," is a newcomer in the motion picture field, who has established herself in this, her first film production, as a pronounced success in the motion picture field. Miss Day has a future to be reckoned with.

U. S. Exhibitors Covers the World

Under Guidance of Frank G. Hall, President, New Organization Makes Rapid Strides in Three Months

HAVING sprung into being only three months ago and in that period expanded into a distributing organization covering the world, with three special attractions already on the market and others in course of preparation, the success of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is a tribute to the energy and business acumen of Frank G. Hall, its organizer.

In record time he completed his sales forces to cover the domestic field with special representatives stationed in independent exchanges in every large city in the United States, after which he contracted with the film of Robertson-Cole of New York and London, one of the largest importing concerns in the world, to distribute U. S. output in the foreign territory.

Today the U. S. is in direct communication with exhibitors all over the globe and has set such a high standard in its first group of pictures, embracing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian," that it has established itself in the front rank of the independent distributing concerns.

Mr. Hall's success as a state rights operator in New Jersey impelled him to expand his efforts to the world market. A year ago he organized the Civilization Film Corporation in the commonwealth across the Hudson through which he marketed such productions as "Civilization," "Joan the Woman," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "The Garden of Allah," "Beware of Strangers," "On Trial," "The Bar Sinister" and others.

The growing demand among exhibitors of his state for special productions to show at intervals in their theaters for the purpose of stimulating business impressed Mr. Hall with the need for a concern that specialized in such productions in the world market. The outcome was the formulation of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, founded for the purpose of renting to the exhibitor direct big attractions, possessing exceptional advertising qualities. At present it is the intention of Mr. Hall and his associates in the Booking Corporation to distribute about twelve such productions a year.

Exploits Public Defender

HARRY RAVER'S three-star production, "The Public Defender," just purchased from the United States and Canada by Renowned Pictures Corporation, will soon reach the exhibitor and his public by means of the zone plan of distribution which has been decided the quickest and best means of nation-wide circulation, particularly as Mr. Raver's former customers, representing the largest and most important independent exchanges in this country are prepared to launch a distribution campaign in keeping with the theme and scope of "The Public Defender."

Sol Lesser, speaking about the production, said: "It is the best feature I have seen for the past two weeks, and during that time I have sat through many screen showings of the market's offerings."

Frank Keenan, as the hard-as-nails prosecuting attorney of the Raver production, Robert Edeson, who interprets the public defender, and Alma Hanlon, who portrays the tried-and-true friend of the accused, should prove box office magnets of the highest caliber.

Supporting these stars a long list of stage and screen favorites are seen in the picture. As an indication of the favor with which "The Public Defender" has been received by prominent professional men who witnessed the invitation showing of the picture at the Hotel Astor grand ball room, Rabbi Grossman of Congregation Rudolph Sholem, New York, says: "I witnessed with great pleasure your motion picture, "The Public Defender." The subject with which it deals I am convinced, is of the most importance and one that deserves the endorsement of all men who believe in the rule of justice. The picture is intense in its story, heart-moving in its appeal and very convincing in its presentation. You have rendered a genuine service to the community and the nation."

Foursquare Business Is Good in West

From Denver comes encouraging news concerning the initial bookings of Foursquare Pictures of Denver, of which Ben S. Cohen is vice-president and general manager. Installed in the main floor offices of Foursquare, Mr. Cohen is in an enviable position to be easily accessible to exhibitors in his territory who are seeking superior product.

Splendid first run bookings of "The Bar Sinister," "One Hour," "The Frnige of Society" and "The Great White Trail" have already been contracted for, with abundant mid-winter business in sight for other Foursquare features.

Rivoli a House of Luxury

Rothapfel Edifice, Considered Most Beautiful in New York, Is Christened December 27—Seats Nearly 2,500 Persons

THE opening of the Rivoli, the most luxurious playhouse of its kind ever built and expected to divide immediately with The Rialto the honor of being the world's foremost temple of the motion picture, was announced this week for Thursday evening, December 27.

The building, its appointments, the entertainment to be offered, and every feature embodied in it combine to make The Rivoli a triumph for what has come to be known as "the Rothapfel idea." The destinies of the new institution will be directed by S. L. Rothapfel, originator of that innovation in stage amusement which rescued the motion picture from its side-show surroundings and made it the most popular form of entertainment in America today.

Seating about 2,500 and costing more than $500,000, The Rivoli leaves nothing to be desired in the way of equipment to furnish entertainment and comfort for its patrons. The lighting effects, which will come as a genuine revelation, have been designed by Mr. Rothapfel to lend subtle aid in bringing out the full effectiveness of both film and music.

A perfume plant has been installed which will lend "atmosphere" to the various phases of the entertainment, by enlisting the stimulus of a third sense. The stage settings and scenic effects, from the Lee Lash Studios, are a work of wizardry.

For the opening of the theater the stage setting was known as "The Conservatory of Jewels." It consisted of a dome within a dome, each studded with crystal gems, patterned after the Tower of Jewels at the Panama Pacific Exposition. These flash with kaleidoscopic effect when the vari-colored lights play on them, creating remarkable scenes of beauty.

Russle B. Smith and R. E. Hall, engineers, built The Rivoli from plans worked out by Thomas W. Lamb. Already the theater has taken rank as the most beautiful amusement edifice in New York, both inside and out, and it is constructed in such a manner that wide passageways will permit of the emptying of the house in a comparatively few seconds.

Moss Theater Undergoes Transformation

B. S. Moss' rejuvenated Jefferson Theater, New York, has undergone alterations to the tune of $100,000. The last dab of the painter and the carpenter's last tap were done Saturday, December 22. All traces of the workmen's scaffolds have been removed and the Jefferson now stands as a palatial and modern theater.

South American Exhibitors Use Display

Owner of Theater in Brazil Takes Advantage of Paper for Decorating Front of House for Feature Productions

AMERICAN exhibitors who have only a vague idea of the manner in which theater managers in other countries handle productions, or who have been led to believe that the art of obtaining publicity is understood only in the United States, would be interested in the series of photographs the Fox Film Corporation is receiving from its branches in South America.

Some striking photographs have come from the Cinema Pathe in Rio de Janiero, Brazil. At the times these were taken, the house was showing "The Beast," starring George Walsh and Anna Luther, and "The Love Thief." The theater has a three-story front and most of this is covered with lithographs and painted signs on which the name of the production featured stands out so prominently, and is so many times repeated, that there is no possibility of anyone who comes within view of the building forming any misconception regarding the attraction.

The display is arranged to catch the eyes both of persons passing along the sidewalk in front of the theater and those who may see the building from a distance. And, as indicative of what the source of a production means to theater patrons in Rio de Janiero, over and through the blaze of advertising runs the announcement that these are Fox films.

"Ladrao de Amor," "George Walsh" and "Brutalidade" are given big display, but it is worth while also, even in far-away Brazil, that the public be assured in large lettering of the fact that there is a sterling mark on the silver which the Cinema Pathe offers. Production, plus star, plus producer, plus theater—that is the order of values as fixed by the management of this successful house.

Need Entertainment—Not Amusement

President Arthur Cohen of the Ontario Exhibitors' Association took the trouble a few days ago to outline a few of the developments in Canadian moving picture circles during the past year, particularly where they seemed to be affected by the war. As Canada is now in her fourth year of hostilities, the present situation here may indicate what may be in front of the American people.

"With long casualty lists in the papers every day," declared Mr. Cohen, "this is no time for amusements in the ordinary sense of the word. The people must have a diversion, however, in the way of an entertainment. We would go crazy if we could not entertain ourselves at this stage of the war.

"It is being proved that moving pictures are supplying the entertainment for the people at home and the soldiers across the sea as well. This is no time to be hilarious but it is perfectly reasonable to go to a picture show to be entertained. I would call a screen ball an amusement and you will not see one in Toronto under the auspices of the Exhibitors' Association with my approval until the war is over. It is not right for us to dance and be merry while blood is being shed for our cause. But moving pictures form the proper diversion under the circumstances."

Changes Theater Name and Policy

The name of the Savoy Theater in Duluth, Minn., was changed on December 24 to the Empress. A new electric sign has been installed, the front of the house has been re-decorated and the policy of the theater has been changed.

Hereafter, according to an announcement by A. E. Ableson, manager for the W. M. Abrahamson Theater Company, Inc., feature photo-plays will be presented in conjunction with tabloid musical comedies. The shows will change twice a week, and the pictures three times.

On every Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Vitagraph features will be the attraction. On each Thursday and Friday, the new Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," will headline the picture program. On Saturdays and Sundays the management will offer Triangle features, together with two-reel Mack Sennett comedies. This double-header feature program will be presented at bargain prices, matinees 15c, nights 20c, these prices to include the government admission war tax.

Camp Fire Scene Is Lobby Decoration

A lobby display which may be duplicated by exhibitors booking Metro's "Draft 258" was erected by Manager Charles Englebrecht of the Regent Theater in Arlington, N. J., where the patriotic production played a two days' run to big business.

The spirit of patriotism dominated this display. At one side of the lobby, the floor was covered with sand and a regulation army tent erected. In front of the tent were placed a bench, stacked guns and a tripod with a pot hanging over a pile of wood, which was lighted with a red electric light to give the effect of a fire. Brush wood was scattered at one side and a very good idea of a typical tent home of "our boys" in camp at home and abroad was presented. The properties used may easily be borrowed for the occasion at small cost.

The lobby was tastefully decorated with American flags and red, white and blue bunting. Stills from the production were displayed on a lobby display stand. The entire display was commendable because of its fitness and dignity. There was no careless stringing of screaming three-sheets and sensational placards in the lobby, but just enough of suitable display to serve its purpose and maintain the sense of dignity of a theater in a fashionable suburban town.

Norma Talmadge Starts New Play

Norma Talmadge will shortly commence work on a new production, the present title of which is "By Right of Purchase." This picture will be made at Miss Talmadge's own studio and with her own company; it will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck and distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

Work on "By Right of Purchase" has been held up for a brief interval to give Miss Talmadge a short breathing spell after her strenuous performance in "Ghosts of Yesterday," adapted by Mildred Considine from the phenomenal drama, "Two Women," by the well-known novelist and dramatist, Rupert Hughes.

"The Devil Stone"

A RAPID change from a fisherwoman to an ultra-fashionable being is one of the extravagant feats which "The Devil Stone" allows Geraldine Farrar to accomplish in this picture, which is absolutely devoid of human interest. Perhaps one doesn't expect to find heart interest in a detective or mystery picture, but if this offering aims at being in either category it misses fire, for there is no suspense, and it certainly fails to mystify. Thus Geraldine Farrar is left as the one power of attraction, and she is not seen to good advantage.

As a sum-up it would be difficult to classify this picture as it attempts a wee bit of almost everything—in a highly congested manner. It takes a fling at mysticism, hints at reincarnation, employs a scientific detective and withal would be profound—but only succeeds in being dull. Too many plots have spoiled the soup.

Two features stand out as being pleasing, the beautiful scenery in the first part of the picture, and the excellent acting of Tully Marshall, who portrays the miser, Silas Martin. Mr. Marshall gives a performance which is in every way commendable and his work gives to the picture its one artistic touch.

Geraldine Farrar is cold throughout and fails to win sympathy. She is seen to best advantage in love scenes and there are few of these in "The Devil Stone." A splendid cast, as far as reputations are concerned, gives her support, including Wallace Reid, Hobart Bosworth, James Neill and Mabel Van Buren. The scenario was prepared by Jeanie Macpherson from the story by Beatrice DeMille and Leighton Osmun.

The story: Marcia Manot, a fishermaiden, finds a gorgeous emerald which fancy tells her at one time belonged to a Norse queen and is the "Devil Stone," a harbinger of bad luck.

Silas Martin, a miser, and owner of the fisheries, sees the stone, and wishing to obtain possession of it, marries the girl. In New York he steals the stone, has it appraised at three million dollars, and starts action for divorce against his wife, using as a means his young manager, Guy Sterling, who greatly admires Marcia.

Marcia, discovering the loss of her jewel, employs a detective, Robert Judson, who suspects that Silas is the thief. Later, when Marcia finds the emerald in her husband's possession, she attempts to recover it, and in the ensuing struggle she kills Silas in self-defense. At the coroner's inquest she is acquitted, but Judson, investigating matters further, finds proof that she is guilty. He, however, generously overlooks the fact because of his high regard for her.

Marcia and Sterling have been united at the death of Silas and there is evidence of peace at last reigning in Marcia's life, as she has returned the evil stone to a priest.

"The Girl by the Roadside"

Violet Mersereau in Bluebird Play with Mystery Flavor. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MISS MERSEREAU plays a grown-up role throughout this story. There is more plot and more action in this picture than in many of the vehicles she has had previously. As a whole it is rather a different type from her usual pictures, although the star's acting is done in her well-known manner. Somehow we have come to expect Miss Mersereau to appear as a harum-scarum child or young girl, and many of her admirers will think this more sedate role less amusing.

The plot, which has a mystery element, is not as clearly worked out as it might be. It is nicely photographed, the sets are good and the acting satisfactory. It is a good average offering and while not so humorous as preceding Mersereau plays, will succed in attracting and entertaining the star's admirers.

Theodore Marston directed the play from the story by Varick Vanardy, arranged for the screen by John C. Brownell. In the supporting cast of players are Allen Edwards, who plays the hero, Ann Andrews, pleasing in a small part, Cecil Owen, Robert F. Hill, Royal Byron, Kenneth Hall and Sam B. Minter.

The story: Judith (Miss Mersereau) travels with her brother and his wife. She knows little of their business. One day she goes riding and is thrown from her horse. Her ankle is sprained and she is helpless, when she is discovered by Boone Pendleton, who takes her to his hunting lodge nearby. A storm comes up and they remain in the lodge all night.

In the morning a group of policemen arrive to arrest Judith. She escapes from them and goes back to her hotel. She is told that her brother and his wife have been put in jail. She goes to them and they give her directions about a mysterious package. She continues to elude the police although she does not know why they want her or what her brother has done.

The brother and his wife escape from prison. Boone, who has fallen in love with Judith, succeeds in finding her again. After much excitement we learn that the brother and his wife were counterfeiters but that Judith is innocent. The guilty ones escape after promising to live better lives and Judith and Boone are married.

The police were searching for them.

"The Struggle Everlasting"

Produced by Harry Rapf. Directed by James Kirkwood. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

WHEN Harry Rapf, producer of "The Struggle Everlasting," selected Sunday night as the time to give a private showing of this allegorical picture depicting the everyday battle of the combined influences of body, soul, and mind, he chose a most appropriate time. Most of those who were invited and who battled their way into Shubert's Forty-fourth Street Theater, filling it to overflowing and who were not familiar with the story, which is an adaptation of the same play produced many years ago by the late Henry B. Harris, were probably surprised as the action of the picture moved forward.

Instead of seeing an average entertaining picture, they were handed one of the strongest sermons on morality which has ever been preached. Billy Sunday, with all his oratorical fire and brimstone, would have a hard time carrying as much conviction in driving home his point as did this sermon in celluloid.

One of the remarks overheard at the end of the performance graphically describes it: "It was better than going to church."

"The Struggle Everlasting" is just another instance showing that a good story well directed and clearly told will grip an audience throughout its length without reverting to either slapstick horse play or other time worn trick screen devices of sending thrills through the spines of the fans. Especially is the picture of interest to parents who have children about ready to go out into the world to fight life's battle on their own responsibilities.

All of the temptations which invariably present themselves to human nature are plainly disclosed and not only are the pleasures to be derived from one's gratifying the senses shown, but also follows the price which must be paid. All of those lures which the average parent tries deeply to impress upon youth are brought out in a most forceful manner and in such a way that the most modest of prudes could offer no objection.

"The Struggle Everlasting" is a picture which should be shown from every hamlet to the largest metropolis. It is a picture that sends one home thinking along lines which will undoubtedly be profitable to them.

The story: "Mind" and "Soul," played respectfully by Milton Sills and Irving Cummings, are two college youths who have been grinding hard through their college years. "Mind" decides to go into the mountains for rest. "Soul" warns him that idle brains and idle hands will bring him into contact with "Body" unless he is very careful. "Mind" doubts this wisdom and goes into the mountains. While there, the inevitable happens. He meets "Body" in the person of Florence Reed.

"Body," up until this time, has known no contact with the world outside of her mountain fastness. Before the influence of "Soul" who has followed "Mind" into the mountains has a chance to warn him of the danger, "Mind" becomes enamoured of "Body." "Body" has been ekeing a living from the revenue returned from an illicit moonshine still. At this point, a revenue officer, in the person of Wellington Plater, a college trainer of athletics, whose father owns an inn in the college town, arrives. Instead of arresting "Body" for operating the still, he, too, becomes enraptured of her charms. "Body" is induced to leave her mountain abode and become bar-maid in the inn of the college town. From this point of the picture on through until the end, the story vividly shows how utterly unable are "Body" and "Mind" to cope with life's temptations without the guiding influence of "Soul." "Body" rises from the lowly position of bar-maid to the possessor of all of the power which can be wielded by a beautiful, unscrupulous woman. Actors, musicians, champion pugilists, aristocrats, and bankers are snared and wrecked. Each one is warned by "Worldly Wise," played by Edwin N. Hoyt, that the only end is ruin, but true to life, each has to live it through and only learn from experience that the warning was true. Whenever "Soul" is able to get a foothold, immediately the force of that power is seen, but unfortunately the effect is short-lived, as "Soul" must, of necessity, bend his efforts elsewhere.

In the end, however, after "Body" has seen the havoc and wreckage she has left trailing in her wake, and is made to realize by "Soul" that she must look into the future, she then sees herself as the result will be and seeks solace in the grace offered by the infinite power of God.

Under the able direction of James Kirkwood, a well selected cast makes this story, by Edwin Milton Royle, a very entertaining and appealing picture. That poverty, degradation, and sadness are all caused by immorality could not be as forcefully driven home by words from the mouths of a thousand preachers as does this super-modern morality production, "The Struggle Everlasting," show them to be.

"Diamonds and Pearls"

THE title of this picture is suggestive of its caliber. As Kitty Gordon's name is usually associated with regal beauty and beautiful gowns, the combination of title and star should prove a drawing card of unusual allurement to feminine patrons especially, and those addicted to the sensational.

"Diamonds and Pearls" is melodrama. It is built along conventional lines, concerns conventional people and will appeal to the same.

Kitty Gordon is seen as a beautiful, greedy woman who marries for money, turns thief to pay her gambling debts, causes the suicide of one man and the near-death of another, and shows a glimmer of intelligence by trying to kill herself at the end of the picture. The role is an unsympathetic one and a bit inconsistent. Miss Gordon acts with dignity and entirely without feeling. The cast, which is highly competent, includes Milton Sills, George McQuarry, Kitty Johnson and Curtis Cooksey. George Archainbaud directed the picture, which doesn't prove as entertaining as recent World Film releases.

The story: Violetta D'Arcy determines to marry for money, although she loves and is loved by Jack Harrington. Jack has left his father's home to make his way in the world alone, not approving of his father's business methods.

Violetta meets Robert Van Ellstrom, a millionaire, and marries him. She becomes the social rage of the north, wildly extravagant and irresponsible, in spite of the fact that her husband begs her to retrench during war times. Finding that she cannot meet her gambling debts, and knowing her husband will give her no more money for the present, she pawns her sister-in-law's pearls, feeling sure that Margaret will not wear them until her "coming-out" party.

However, the date set for the party is near at hand, and Violetta must have money. She accepts the offer of Mr. Harrington to buy his way into society, and invites him with his wife, to a week-end party at her home.

Harrington becomes infatuated with her and when she asks for money to obtain the pearls from the pawn-broker he gives it to her readily. He then stipulates that she must be more to him than a friend or he will tell her husband all.

Van Ellstrom overhears this conversation and asks Harrington to explain. Harrington draws a revolver and attempts to shoot at him when Jack, who happens to be on the scene, intervenes and receives the bullet. Believing he has killed his son, Harrington shoots himself. Jack, however, is only slightly wounded.

Realizing the terrible mistake she has made, Violetta wanders to the lake, but faints before she can throw herself in. Her husband finds her and forgives her in regulation movie style.

"Her Second Husband"

Latest Edna Goodrich-Mutual Star Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is something of a comedy-drama, or perhaps we might better call it a light society drama, for the humor is not a very prominent element, though the story is frivolous in type. It concerns the quarrel which separates a young married couple, their divorce, a rather unusual second courtship and their re-marriage. While the plot itself in many ways seems "much ado about nothing," the story is nicely handled so far as acting, settings and photography are concerned. Miss Goodrich becomes a clothes model during a portion of her picture career, and introduces many interesting costumes.

While the picture is not remarkable, its star is well liked in most localities and it will prove a good average entertainment if the audience is not too critical.

Dell Henderson directed the play. William B. Davidson plays opposite the star. Richard R. Neill, Miriam Folger, Bert Busby and Grace Heehan are in the cast. The release date is December 31.

The story: John Kirby, a broker, to further his Wall street operations, insists that his wife entertain persons who repel her by their vulgar ways.

Affairs are brought to a crisis when Richard Stone, one of Kirby's clients, brings Celeste Valdane, a coarse, ill-bred woman, to the Kirby home. Helen rebels at acting as hostess to such persons. After a quarrel, she and her husband agree to separate.

Divorced, Helen is forced to earn her own livelihood. and becomes a stenographer, accepting a position as stenographer in Stone's office. When Stone forces his attentions on her, Helen leaves and secures a position as a suit model.

Hoping for a reconciliation, John determines to find Helen. One evening he agrees to act as escort to a girl to a masked ball. By a strange coincidence, Helen is the girl he is to escort. John is in ignorance of her identity, but Helen learns that it is John who will accompany her. At the ball Helen does not unmask, and John is puzzled by certain characteristics that remind him of his wife.

Shortly after the night of the ball John learns that it was his wife with whom he danced, and, enlisting the good offices of a friend, he so contrives that Helen is beguiled into a motor car, and himself disguised as the chauffeur. When they reach a lonely part of a country road, an apparent breakdown occurs, the chauffeur orders her to alight, and led by him, they arrive at the home of a justice of the peace, where Helen acquires "Her Second Husband."

"Vengeance Is Mine"

Mrs. Vernon Castle in Her Fourth Pathe Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS fourth Pathe feature starring Irene Castle compares favorably with the others in the series. It is made in something the same style—that is with plenty of action, a dash of mystery and an opportunity for the star to wear a variety of clever costumes and engage in athletic stunts. This time for good measure we have a dancing scene. The sets in the picture are very pleasing. The photography is clear and the scenes pretty. Although the picture contains tragedy and crime, the general effect, due to the rapid action and the lightness and daintiness of the pictures themselves, is of brightness and vivacity.

The picture can be advertised confidently in any locality in which the preceding features have been well received. We believe that it will appeal to neighborhood and small town audiences especially, in which there are a number of women, for they will like to study Mrs. Castle's costumes and will enjoy the society atmosphere in which the play is laid.

Frank Crane directed the picture. John A. Moroso wrote the tale. Elliott Dexter, Frank Sheridan and Helene Chadwick lead in the supporting cast.

The story: Paula (Mrs. Castle) sets out to avenge her father's death. He had committed suicide after his bank was ruined by a group of unprincipled financiers. She is introduced to society under an assumed name and manages to meet and learn something of the tricks of the men who ruined her father. Before she can do anything against them, they learn who she is and she is obliged to leave. She next becomes a cabaret dancer, since her fortune is gone, and in this capacity again meets one of the men. Intoxicated, he tells her where she can find evidence of her father's innocence. Paula enters the Van Brunt city home and secures the letter which would free her father's name. Van Brunt's wife, about to run away with another man, is found by Paula, who convinces the former of the error of her ways. Paula escapes with the letter but on a second thought she returns saying that Vengeance is not in her hands. Van Brunt commits suicide and Doctor Smith, who is interested in Paula, disowns his own father, thus bringing punishment to the man higher up.

"Love Letters"

EXCELLENT treatment of a time-worn theme has made a meritorious production of this Thomas H. Ince picture, "Love Letters." The hue and cry for new plots would immediately subside if more old ones could be thus remolded in such charming fashion. Although there is probably not a new situation throughout the picture, you are never once reminded of the fact and the problems are thrashed out so artistically that comparisons do not recur to your mind. It is in every way a production worthy of attention and one which will send all grades of intelligence away satisfied.

The general outlines of the picture are not so different from Dorothy Dalton's, "The Price Mark," although this feature is in every way superior. The story is of a young girl who attempts to obtain some indiscreet love letters which were written before her marriage to a despicable faddist posing as a teacher of Oriental cults. In a struggle for the letters she believes she has killed the man, but a faithful servant confesses to having dealt the death blow after she

These familiar incidents have been harmoniously blended into an offering in which star, author and director have shown understanding and discretion in the development of their respective duties. The story doesn't fail to be interesting and the details have all been worked out so that the accomplished while is a finished product with no rough edges.

The settings and lighting effects are lovely although some of the sets are a bit confusing. The scenes take place in two adjoining country homes and it is sometimes difficult to discern whether the characters are coming out of one or going into the other. This hurts the action slightly, as it occurs at a very crucial point in the story.

Dorothy Dalton was never seen to better advantage than as Eileen Rodney. She gives a portrayal which is forceful and appealing and which shows proof of individuality, an asset which many screen performers lack. The supporting cast is entirely competent and includes William Conklin, Thurston Hall, Dorcas Mathews, Hayward Mack and William Hoffman.

The story: Raymond Moreland exercises a peculiar fascination over Eileen Rodney. This man poses as an exponent of Oriental creeds and cults and uses this fad as a means to attract women who are ever ready to fall in love with him. Eileen indiscreetly writes him incriminating love-letters and then, when she is made aware of his despicable nature, she marries her guardian who has always loved her.

After a year of wedded happiness Moreland again appears upon the scene with threats of exposing the wife if she will not come to his house the following night for the letters. Eileen goes, and in the inevitable struggle which ensues, she hits him over the head with a candlestick and makes her escape. The next morning she learns that Moreland has been murdered.

Her husband, who is the district attorney, begins to search for the woman in the case. Eileen is distracted until she decides to throw herself upon her husband's mercy, and confess everything to him. The husband forgives her, and then it develops that Moreland's gardener really dealt the blow which caused his master's death.

"In Bad"

William Russell in American-Mutual Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a snappy comedy drama, with swift action from start to finish, original situations, a good bit of humor and good acting. It is going to make a decided hit in most theaters which run it. It is Russell at his best, aided not a little, both in fun-making and action, by "Bull" Montana. It is a comedy which approaches farce and it is always funny and interesting. If your patrons like speedy action, they can't complain that this does not suit them. If your patrons are Russell admirers or if they like this type of rapid farce comedy, this is sure-fire. You can boost it in your advertising.

Edward Sloman directed the feature. Francelia Billington, Harvey Clark, Fred Smith, Lucile Ward and Carl Stockdale complete the cast of players. The locations are interesting and well chosen. The photography is of course very good, as is the American Film custom. Many of the lighting effects are clever. The settings are fine.

The story: The plot concerns a harum-scarum young man named Monte, whose best friend is his ex-prize fighter trainer, Lefty Ned. Ned is a crook but Monte does not know this. Monte's rich aunt promises him a fortune if he will settle down and marry, but he does not seem inclined to do this until he meets Victoria. He falls in love at once but as he is always meeting her under unconventional circumstances, she has a poor opinion of him. At last he and Lefty Ned are arrested for theft at his aunt's reception. Of course Monte was innocent, but he was "in bad" very deeply with Victoria.

The rich aunt and a party of friends, including Victoria, go on an expedition into Mexico searching for Aztec treasure. A crook, a friend of Lefty Ned's, leads the party, posing as an expert. When the treasure is discovered, the crook and his men prepare to take it themselves and imprison the rest of the party in a tunnel. But Monte, who had followed Victoria, arrives on the scene in time to overcome the crooks and release the prisoners. And Victoria changes her opinion about Monte.

numerous incidents which are sure-fire winners for realism. A runaway, which is stopped by a boy only after one of the horses has fallen upon him, is guaranteed to cause a gasp and approbation from those who witness it.

The costumes throughout the picture belong to some past period, and there seems to be no reason why they should not have been modern.

Mary Anderson is charming as the heroine, and others who do very satisfactory work are Alfred Whitman, Otto Lederer, and R. Bradbury. Frederick Upham Adams is responsible for the story of this picture. William Wolbert attended to the direction.

The story: John Burt is in love with Jessie Garden, and when he overhears Arthur Morris making scurrilous remarks about her he attempts to give him the thrashing he deserves. In the scuffle, however, Morris takes out a revolver, and when Burt attempts to take it away from him, the revolver is discharged and Morris is wounded.

Thinking he is responsible for the man's death, Burt goes to the west, having in his possession a chart of an abandoned mine given to him by his father. He makes a fortune and then sends his partner east to ascertain if Morris is dead or alive and to inquire about Jessie.

The partner finds Jessie engaged to marry Morris, and he himself, falling an easy victim to her charms, forgets to speak for his friend and proceeds to win her for himself.

Burt arrives upon the scene, discovers that Jessie is about to marry Morris to save her father from ruin, and wins the girl all over again, after killing Morris in a fight at the club where there were witnesses to the fact that it was in self-defense.

"Vengeance and the Woman"

First Two Episodes of Vitagraph Serial with William Duncan and Carol Halloway. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THE first two epistles of this new serial, written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and featuring William Duncan and Carol Halloway, shows promise of being as entertaining as its predecessor, "The Fighting Trail."

It is a story of the great west and contains Indians, outlaws and cowboys midst all the vivid western atmosphere and excitement, with which they are identified. There is plenty of daring riding and skilful gun-play and melodramatic scenes which are net only thrilling but terrifying. William Duncan and Carol Halloway work with a courage that is amazing and their efforts should make the serial a wonderful success. This is a sensational picture and should bring patrons back for more.

The story concerns Henry Blake and his wife Bessie. Blake has been the means of having a desperado known as "Black Jack" sent to the penitentiary with a fifteen-years' sentence. "Black Jack" makes a threat to have revenge upon Blake, and soon after escapes from prison.

With the help of Comanche Pete, an Indian outlaw, he secures horses and turns a locomotive loose which is to crash into a train upon which Blake is traveling. Blake sees the impending danger and jumps from the train just as the two engines collide.

Hearing that Black Jack is at large, Blake hurries home to find his home in flames and his wife missing. Bessie, who has been captured by the outlaws, makes a sensational escape but is lassoed off her horse by Comanche Pete, who throws his lariat from a high cliff under which she is riding. She is seen suspended in the air at the finish of this episode.

"Bucking Broadway"

Harry Carey in a Butterfly Western Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picture opens with some unusually fine ranch and mountain scenes. The beauty of the outdoor views, excellently photographed, and the exciting episodes of western life, the taming of ranch horses, for instance, are the best features in this offering. The story offers some unusual situations, for instance the race through crowded city streets of a band of mounted cowboys, and the free-for-all fight at the roof-garden, but its plot will not bear close analysis. If your people look for consistency, they won't find it in this, but if they like rapid action for its own sake, and applaud a good fight and last minute rescues, they will enjoy this to their hearts' content. A group of youngsters who want excitement will appreciate this picture.

The story: Cheyenne Harry, a ranch foreman, falls in love with the daughter of his boss. He gives her a small heart which he has carved, and breaking it in two, tells her to send him the other half if she is ever in trouble. Her father, a little reluctantly, consents to their marriage.

To the ranch comes Captain Thornton to buy horses for the British government. The boys try to frame the Captain, giving him the "outlaw" horse to ride, but he masters the animal easily and wins Molly's admiration. He lays siege to her heart and manages to oust the cowpuncher from her thoughts. Harry and Molly's father wake one morning to find that she has gone away with the Captain.

In the city, Molly soon finds that the Captain's intentions are not honorable. She makes him send her to a boarding house, until they are married. She is troubled and sends the trinket to Harry. As soon as he receives it he sets out for the city.

Captain Thornton sees that he cannot detain Molly in the city much longer without making a bluff to marry her. He gives a dinner that night to announce their engagement.

In the meantime Harry's pals, the cowboys, have arrived at the stockyards with the shipment of horses, and Harry knows that they are there. A woman to whom he has confided his story is having supper on the roof garden, and sees and recognizes Molly. She at once phones to Cheyenne. He calls his pals and then he rushes up to the roof, and engages the entire party in a desperate battle. The men fight all over the supper tables, and the arrival of the cowboys, just in time, saves the day. Thornton is knocked out, and his pals are ducked in the fountain, while Cheyenne and Molly are cheered by the victors.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven"

Mary McAlister in Essanay-Perfection Release, Kleine System. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

TAKE a lively youngster from a poor home and let her, accompanied by her dog, romp through a millionaire's house and there is likely to be some fun and excitement. That is the situation in Mary McAlister's latest five-reel feature and the fun and the excitement follow. Sadie, played by Miss Mary, thought she had arrived in heaven and accordingly took possession of the place. Comedy predominates throughout the picture. It is unforced and not overdrawn. Much depends upon the personality of the star in this sort of a play and the talented little star has plenty of personality. She is as clever and natural as ever, and makes Sadie an amusing little rascal, playing the role with vigor and plenty of "pep." Her boxing match with the heir of the house, her roller-skating and her bathing experiences are sure to be enjoyed by the average neighborhood audiences. The youngsters will like this play and it is a good special for a matinee.

Russell McDermott has a small but important role and shows a sense of humor in playing it. The grown-ups in the cast include Jenny St. George, Frankie Raymond, Rodney LaRocque, Kathryn Kennedy and Bobby Bolder. George Washington Square, the dog for which Sadie left heaven, plays his part very nicely. A magazine story by Dana Burnet served as the basis for the play.

The story: Little six-year-old Sadie O'Malley, a child of the tenement district, has a vision of heaven awakened within her by the teaching of a settlement worker; so when she sees a handsome limousine in front of the settlement laundry near her home she thinks it is a heavenly chariot, climbs into a clothes hamper in the interior of the car and is whisked away to the home of Mrs. Welland Riche.

The latter personage has left earlier in the day on a trip so when Sadie and her dog, George Washington Square, who has been her companion in the hamper trip, are dumped down the clothes chute of the Riche home while concealed in the basket, they find easy access to the upper regions of the mansion and then, indeed, Sadie thinks she is in heaven.

Sadie soon is discovered by the servants, but they believe she is just another of Mrs. Riche's fads when she tells them she is there to stay. Believing Mrs. Riche as desiring that the best of care be given the child, Sadie is dressed in rich garments and is very much at home until Mrs. Rich returns unexpectedly.

When the servants' explanations have been made, Mrs. Riche in the meantime having been won over by the child's beauty and sweet manners, decides Sadie may remain. But the tenement child's happiness is shortlived when George Washington Square appears upon the scene. Mrs. Riche orders that the pup be removed and tells Sadie that, instead she can play with the Riche collection of Poms.

Not so for Sadie. She informs the wealthy matron that she wouldn't give up George Washington Square for all the heavens that ever was and that if G. W. S. cannot remain she will go. So hugging her doggie close to her she returns to her worried mother with the explanation: "I have been to heaven but they sent me home because they didn't like my dog."

Traveling Picture Show for Troops

A traveling moving picture show, in the form of a specially built automobile, is the latest acquisition of the Netherlands soldier. It has been invented with a view to bringing cheer into the monotonous and hard life of the troops engaged in guarding the frontiers of Holland during the winter. A cyclist theatrical company was already in existence, pedaling from one detachment to the other to give its performances.

The new movie car resembles an ordinary military freight automobile. Arrived on the spot where the performance is to be given, the automobile is stationed in front of the hall into which electric power is conveyed by means of a long wire that is carried with all other requisites in the car.

All that has to be seen to locally is the provision of a suitable hall. The staff comprises driver, electrician, pianist and movie operator, for whom comfortable accommodation is provided in the car.

Booked for Long Runs

"The Planter," the seven reel spectacle based on Herman Whitaker's popular and sensational novel, has been playing to five to seven day runs in the big houses of the larger cities on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Exhibitors who have played the Mutual special declare that it possesses rare box office value based on the popularity of the novel, the fame of the author and the popularity of the star, Tyrone Power.

After a run of a week at the Central theater at St. Louis, "The Planter" was rebooked for four days and did a record business. It played four days at the Strand theater at Seattle, five days at the Bijou theater at Atlantic City, ran all Thanksgiving week at the Boston theater, Boston, played for five days at the Royal theater, Des Moines, and five days at the Strand theater in Duluth.

Eric Campbell Dies in Auto Crash

Eric Campbell, the big fellow over whom Charlie Chaplin has triumphed a dozen times, was killed last week in an automobile collision in Los Angeles, Cal. Miss Jean Crosby, a motion picture actress, and Harold Schneider, a scenario writer, who were in Campbell's car, were injured, and W. A. Hollenbeck, who was alone in the other car, suffered a broken leg. He assisted, however, in extricating Campbell's body, which was buried under his machine. Campbell leaves a wife in San Francisco, who is the sister of Mrs. William Corey, the wife of the steel magnate. Campbell is perhaps best known for his acting the role of the tough extraordinary in "Easy Street," the film in which Chaplin burlesqued a policeman.

Goldwyn Casting Department Moves

Following the resignation of Adolph Klauber as casting director, Goldwyn's casting department has been moved from the New York offices at 16 East Forty-second street to the studio at Fort Lee, where all applicants will be received in future. Mr. Klauber severed his connection with Goldwyn to devote his time to personal interests.

Secures French Drama for Screen

"Split Reel" Notes For Theater Men

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

New Theater Is Opened

The Federal Amusement Company of which Marks Browarsky is president, has opened a new moving picture theater at Center Avenue and Roberts street, in Philadelphia. The new house is known as the Center Square, and is one of the largest and best equipped places of amusement in the hill district of the Quaker city. The house has a capacity of 800, and is provided with exceptional means of egress for emergencies. An enormous pipe organ will supplement a first class orchestra. The theater stage has been built with a view making it possible to present speaking drama at a later date.

Sunday Law Slips

Notwithstanding the fact that the twin cities, Decatur and Albany, Alabama, have been promised "quiet Sundays," the promise has not fully materialized in the past few weeks. On last Sunday the sheriff of the county granted the various places of business which have been keeping open a temporary respite, including drug stores. The sheriff served a late notice to the effect that he would not begin rigid enforcement of the "blue laws" for the present, declaring that some of the shop owners, merchants and concessionists might not have been sufficiently notified.

Manager a Telegrapher

Lowell V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick Theater in Minneapolis, Minn., is expecting a call to the colors at any time, and to fit himself for his duties in the signal corps, he is brushing up on telegraph lore. When Mr. Calvert was a telegraph operator, he used the Continental code, but as the government prescribes the use of Morse code in its dispatches, Mr. Calvert is practicing with a sending key and sounder to perfect his knowledge of dots and dashes.

Manager Gets New Job

E. R. Saether, manager of the Strand, Bijou, and Marinette theaters in Marinette, Mich., has gone to Chicago to supervise the booking of films for the chain of theaters owned by Fitzpatrick and McElroy. T. J. Aelick of Chicago, an experienced moving picture theater manager, has succeeded Mr. Saether in Marinette.

May Rebuild Burned Theater

Out of the ashes of the Strand Theater of Spokane, Wash., which was destroyed by fire recently, likely there will arise a new and more pretentious play house. This theater, located on First avenue, was a historical land-mark of the city. It had been devoted to the legitimate, then to vaudeville, later to burlesque, and finally to moving pictures. James McConnahy had been managing it as a picture house since last July. The loss caused by the fire is estimated $55,000.

Gives Grand Opera

The Strand Theater of New York will introduce a new novelty in the entertainments after the holidays and Manager Edel is busily engaged selecting material and singers for the rather pretentious addition which will consist of a weekly presentation of condensed versions of grand opera. The first opera to be presented is "Carmen." Not only has Mr. Edel engaged a cast of high class opera stars to sing the various roles, but special sets of scenery are being painted for the various operatic productions.

Opens Remodeled House

Joseph Saperstein has opened the remodeled Hippodrome Theater in Bridgeport, Conn. The house was done over in artistic style and it now stands as one of the most beautiful moving picture edifices in the state. The house seats 1,500 persons and is modern in its equipment and decoration in every respect.

Pays Tax for Family

W. H. Deeth, manager of the American Theater in Minneapolis, has discovered that he must give the government several payments of two cents each for the times his wife and son attended his theater. He found that the members of his family were not "employes of the theater or city officials on official business" and he paid the tax cheerfully.

Remodels From Ground Up

When Emmett L. Booth of the Star Theater in Flint, Mich., determined to remodel his theater, he started at the ground and rebuilt the entire structure. The building is completed and has been formally opened. The newest equipment was installed, and the finishings of the entire house were made modern in every respect.

Manager Goes to War

Joseph Rubenstein, manager of the Broadway-Strand theater in Chicago, has enlisted in the Radio service of the United States Army. He will leave shortly for Harvard University to receive final training. For a number of years Mr. Rubenstein has been connected with the motion picture business, in Chicago and Milwaukee.

Fire Loss Is $20,000

The Gem Theater of Jefferson City, Mo., has been destroyed by fire, with a loss of $20,000. This theater was one of the largest moving picture and vaudeville houses in central Missouri. A. E. Longnecker, owner of the theater building, has not announced whether the house will be rebuilt.

Labor Trouble Ends

The labor difficulties between moving picture operators and stage hands and the Cummings Amusement Company of Oshkosh, Wis., has been settled, and the striking employes have returned to work. A compromise agreement was reached by Roy Cummings, owner of the Amusement Company.

Invites Public Inside

Through the medium of the public press Charles Branham, of the Strand Theater, Minneapolis; James Keough, of the New Lyric, and William Koch, of the New Aster, made it known that they had put winter doors on their entrances and invited the public to "come in out of the cold."

New Manager Takes Charge

Carl Ray, formerly the owner of the Amuse Theater in Cheyenne, Wyo., has returned to Cheyenne. He has purchased M. C. Gerhart's interest in the Amuse and assumed personal charge of the management. Since last March Mr. Ray has been in Los Angeles.

Plan New Picture House

A report from Gillette, Wyo., states that plans are being formed for the opening of a new moving picture theater in that city. Ben Morgan is to be the manager of the new enterprise. Chairs and other fixtures have arrived ready to be installed in the new picture house.

Reopens After Repairs

The Crown Theater in Chicago was re-opened on Christmas Day after being closed down for a week for alterations. An entire change of interior embellishments cost the management of the theater in the neighborhood of $6,000.

House Changes Hands

The Burchard Opera House of Burchard, Neb., has become the property of L. Borden, and Albert Urich, Jr. The house has been equipped for the presentation of moving pictures.

FACTS ABOUT FILM FOLK—YOU MAY CLIP AND PRINT THEM

An entire day was given over to the "bath room" scenes of "Sadie Goes to Heaven," Essanay's latest Mary McAlister picture, and the temperature of the studio was kept up to 90 degrees throughout the day, so that Mary would not catch cold, to say nothing of the dog who was thrown into the tub as well.

Virginia Valli, supporting Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," played good fairy to a number of little Chicago children during the Christmas holidays.

Downtown Los Angeles got a thrill the other day when Rock and Montgomery, working in a Big V comedy release for Greater Vitagraph, made a sixteen-foot jump from the top of one office building to another. Traffic was suspended and crowds in the street and windows gave the daring comedians a cheer as they repeated the hazardous stunt. This scene will appear particularly thrilling because of the fact that the second building and the one on which they landed had a breakaway wall, so that from the camera it appears that the jump is made directly against a brick wall, which, however, gives away as the men reach it. The sixth story of the building was used so the height from the sidewalk could be registered.

Wesley Ruggles, Vitagraph director, has donned the khaki and now is one of the Yaphank boys. Mr. Ruggles was called in the draft, but obtained a respite to finish a picture he was making for Vitagraph, entitled, "The Blind Adventure." Then he waited around a few weeks and, as he received no peremptory order to report at Camp Upton, went to the studio and directed a one-reel Vitagraph Comedy, entitled "He Had to Camouflage."

Charles Bryant, leading man for Nazimova in her initial Metro photodrama, "Revelation," was also cast in the same capacity with the star in her first motion picture production, "War Brides." In "Revelation," Bryant is seen as an American artist who falls in love with the favorite model of the Parisian Latin quarter.

A replica of a section of the cabin of the big steamship, "Mauretania," was built on rockers in the Metro studio for scenes in "Red, White and Blue Blood," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Director Brabin staged his scenes while the "ship rode the waves" in realistic fashion.

Would anyone think to look at the natty, well-groomed Carlyle Blackwell, as the hero of one of the World-Pictures Brady-Made, that once upon a time he made a living singing ballads in cafes or any old places where they would let him? Or that he went around the country for awhile riding on the bumpers, on the roof, or down on the wheel trucks? Well, he did, and they ran him out of one town in Texas because he did not look good to the sheriff. In that same town now, Blackwell is the biggest of all the movie star favorites.

Mary Garden, soon to appear in "Thais," was born in Aberdeen, Scotland. Her father came to America with his family in 1881, settling first in Montreal and later in Chicago and Milwaukee. Mary Garden displayed unusual talent for music at an early age. She began taking violin lessons when she was eight years old. She began to study singing under Mme. Robinson-Duffe, a Chicago teacher, and in 1897 was sent to Paris. Through the influence of Sibyl Sanderson, the American singer, she became a member of the Opera Comique staff, in 1900, and was assigned to learn the title role, as understudy to Mlle. Riotton, in Charpentier's "Louise." One day, Mlle. Riotton was indisposed, and Miss

Garden was given the part. It was the opportunity she had long waited for. She completely captivated her audience and made such a profound and instantaneous success that the composer, who was present, insisted that she sing the part regularly thereafter. She continued to sing "Louise" for two hundred nights, during which she firmly established herself in the favor of a large portion of the opera-loving public in Paris.

Little Mary McAlister, six-year-old Essanay star, dons a pair of boxing gloves and hands a knockout to her boy opponent in her latest comedy-drama, "Sadie Goes to Heaven."

Additional fame has come to "Teddy," the famous Great Dane of the Mack Sennett comedies. Mary Pickford recently borrowed him for some scenes in her newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Maris," and with the consent of Mr. Sennett, Teddy made a trip to Santa Barbara and went temporarily on the Pickford payroll.

Someone asked Billie Burke, who is now at work on "Eve's Daughter" for Paramount, under James Kirkwood, how she liked the picture and things in general, as far as she had gone. "Fine," responded Miss Burke, demurely, "but you never can tell what will happen when two red-heads get together." Mr. Kirkwood has sandy hair and everyone knows the glory of Billie Burke's red-gold tresses.

In the production of the new Douglas Fairbanks picture, "A Modern Musketeer," the company of players traveled many miles into the uninhabited regions of the west in order to get scenes that have never before been presented in a photoplay. Upon conclusion of the scenes staged at the Grand Canyon of Arizona, the entire company journeyed to the Canyon Du Chelley, ninety miles from Gallup, N. M., making a long trip over the plains on pack mules. The principal motive for the trip to the Canyon Du Chelley was because of the cliff dwellings, inhabited three thousand years ago by the pigmy race of people. Permission to stage part of his photoplay here was given to Douglas Fairbanks by Indian Commissioner Sells at Washington, D. C. At the bottom of a cliff twelve hundred feet high, the Fairbanks' players pitched their tents and lived the life of the primitive for over a week, living on wild game shot after the day's screening was through.

Two Chinese giants are being sought by the Triangle Culver City studio for five scenes at the opening of Director Thomas Heffron's new picture, "The Hopper," from Meredith Nicholson's story by the same name which appeared recently in Colliers' Weekly. These opening scenes are in China in the year A. D. 1457 and a Chinese pottery artist is also called for.

Over two thousand Russian, German and United States uniforms and Russian student and peasant costumes were used in costuming the players in "The Legion of Death," a Metro production starring Edith Storey. June Mathis wrote and Tod Browning directed this timely feature.

Goldwyn Pictures is claiming a genuine theme novelty in its new Madge Kennedy starring vehicle, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" from the best-seller book of the same name by George Weston. This play has no less than six leading men, all having important parts of almost equal value, playing opposite the star, Madge Kennedy. The nature of the story demands that Miss Kennedy shall have a series of amazing adventures in search of a man worthy of her love.

One of the largest studio scenes on record was constructed for Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn Picture, "Dodging a Million," from the story by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy. It represents the foyer and reception hall of a big New York hotel. Ninety-five feet long and fifty feet wide, it covered almost two-thirds the length of the great Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J. To make the "long shots," Director George Loane Tucker and Cameraman Ollie Marsh had to stand in the cold on a gallery built out from the studio door while the scores of extra people and the star worked in the cozy warmth within.

Latest News of Chicago

The first two of the new Paralta features, "A Man's Man," starring Warren Kerrigan, and "Madame Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, were screened for exhibitors and the trade press at the Selig projection room, Thursday, December 20.

"Mother," the six-reel McClure feature, which the Allen Film Company is handling in this territory, was given a special presentation Wednesday morning at the Ziegfeld Theater. This picture was made under the direction of George Loane Tucker in this picturesque Dartmoor country in England. It features Elizabeth Risdon in the title role. Miss Risdon won many friends in "The Man-Man." Her acting in this is remarkable and the feature as a whole is exceptionally fine.

George Periolat is in Chicago. He dropped in at the American Film Company office, out at 6227 Broadway, one morning for a chat, all dressed up in a brand new suit of California gray that looked a bit chilly in the teeth of a Chicago snow storm. Mr. Periolat is looking fine and is going to a couple of months off and appear at theaters in which his pictures are showing. George is going to tell how he thinks out his great character make-ups.

Fred W. Hartmann, who has been in New York for about six weeks for the purpose of aiding William Hilkemier in disposing of the space for the Motion Picture Exhibition to be held in the Grand Central Palace in February, left on Saturday for Chicago, where he will continue his activities for the exposition, obtaining contracts from the Chicago producers.

The Crown Theater, 4013 West Twenty-sixth street, was closed until December 24 for repairs and alterations.

"The Dream Doll," an Essanay Perfection picture, released on December 10, is reported to be realizing a big holiday week run throughout the country. It is enacted almost entirely by fourteen inch dolls by a secret process that enables them to do all but really talk.

Taylor Holmes' earlier Essanay productions, "The Small Town Guy" and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," continue to fill houses throughout all Kleine districts. The accumulative ecect of the publicity given Mr. Holmes seems steadily to increase the public demand for this famous stage comedian.

Two important changes have been made in the local film world. F. M. Brockell, manager of the Goldwyn branch, and prior to that associate manager of the Central Film Company, has returned to Paramount, and on January becomes manager of the Chicago office under the direction of Max Goldstine.

Two years ago a young fellow from San Francisco applied to Aaron Jones for a "job." Jones put him to work at $15 a week in the Central Film Company. He showed some sales ability, and in short time was promoted to that department. As a film salesman he piled business up so rapidly that his salary jumped out of all proportion to the short time he was in the game. He is Sidney Goldman, and has just been appointed manager of the Goldwyn Film Corporation, Chicago office, succeeding Mr. Brockwell. And with the news of his appointment comes the announcement that Miss Hazel Levin will retire from her position with Jones, Linick & Schaefer, which she has held for nine years, and becomes Mrs. Sidney Goldman, March 1, 1918.

Government Enforces Lightless Night Rule

TURNS DOWN PLEAS OF VAUDEVILLE AND PICTURE THEATER MEN

All theaters will be held to a strict compliance with the order issued recently by the Federal Fuel Administration putting into effect "lightless nights" on two nights of each week—Sunday and Thursday—as part of the scheme for conserving the fuel supply.

This was made plain at the office of Fuel Administrator Garfield when it was announced that the requests of vaudeville managers throughout the country to allow them exemption from the order had been refused. These managers felt that since they had been doing their share for the war, allowing their stages to be used by thousands of four-minute men, Red Cross and other patriotic speakers, they might be granted exemption.

Denies Vaudeville Managers' Request

In denying the request of the vaudeville theater managers, Dr. Garfield stated that the refusal would apply to all other theaters of the country and that the "lightless night" order will be strictly enforced in every city.

Dr. Garfield said that the only specific protest against the strict enforcement of the "lightless nights" ordered on Sundays and Thursdays that had reached the United States Fuel Administration was that which came from the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, which declared that the strict enforcement of such an order would work great hardship on their theaters in the various cities of the country.

Patriotic Service No Excuse

Asking that an exception be made in their favor, they instanced various patriotic services rendered by these theaters in various ways, specifically mentioning the fact that they had generously given up their stages to the uses of the various four-minute men and had allowed solicitations from among their audiences for Liberty bonds, Red Cross subscriptions and other patriotic endeavors.

In answer to their appeal, Dr. Garfield, the fuel administrator, said:

"Although appreciating the patriotic services rendered by vaudeville houses to the country, we cannot permit exception in your favor allowing excessive use of fuel-generated power. War demands for coal are largely in excess of increased production. It is unfair to the public to allow display advertising. We rely upon your patriotic co-operation to induce your members to comply loyally with our ruling."

In reply to requests that motion picture theaters be exempt from the order the Fuel Administration wrote to J. L. Friedman.

Moving Picture Theaters Obey

"Although appreciating co-operation by motion picture houses, the shortage of fuel renders necessary its conservation by eliminating superfluous lighting. We believe that any deviation from the order would result in its purpose being defeated and consequently must advise that your compliance with the terms of the order is compulsory."

Dr. Garfield announced that reports to the United States Fuel Administration from New York, Chicago, San Francisco and other large cities indicate the "lightless nights" order will be strictly observed according to the rules. "The public utilities companies," said Dr. Garfield, "supplying electric current and gas for lighting, almost without exception, have signified their willingness to recognize the spirit of the order and go even beyond the legal requirements in conserving coal. The same thing is true of the men who provide the signs for advertising purposes and whose patriotic financial loss is self-evident.

Penalty Provided for Violation

"But the Fuel Administration has no intention of permitting any company or individual in any city or town anywhere in the country to burn lights in violation of the order without penalty. This is just as true of Washington as of any other city. Thursday night will be the first week day night when the 'lightless night' order will be in effect."

In Washington officials of the United States Fuel Administration and the District of Columbia Administration, accompanied by Major Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of police, have planned a whirlwind tour of the city. Immediate action is expected where violations are found.

Los Angeles Has Film Censor

Passing an ordinance creating the position of film commissioner, without whose approval no film may be exhibited in Los Angeles, the city council of Los Angeles has re-established film censorship there. The new commissioner will receive $175 a month.

A license fee of 25 cents is to be charged for each film inspected, this money to be used to defray expenses of the new department.

ARTCRAFT

REACHING FOR THE MOON, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"A good picture but not as good as his earlier productions. Fairbanks does very well anything he undertakes, and this feature is no exception. Good comedy. Business good but it could have been bigger."—A. E. Ableson, Zelda Theater, Duluth, Minn.

The Narrow Trail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"One of Hart's best. We were sorry the weather was so bad that more could not have seen it."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"The greatest picture I ever ran. A sure-fire masterpiece with two favorite stars. Gorgeous costumes and settings."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Mysterious Miss Terry, with Billie Burke (Artcraft)—"A pleasing picture. A drawing card with this star. I was surprised that she came back so strongly after Gloria's Romance."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Down to Earth, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Doug is the best drawing card for us. This picture is not as good as some in the past. Fairbanks is getting too much the Bushman attitude of 'I am the whole show.' "—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"A picture for young and old. Mary was just made for this picture. Direction and detail very good. A sure winner any place."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Seven Keys to Baldpate, with George M. Cohan (Artcraft)—"The star, coupled with the story, plus the settings, makes this a very good picture for real enjoyment."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Mr. Opp, with Arthur Hoyt (Bluebird)—"The poorest Bluebird I have ever run."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Mr. Opp, with Arthur Hoyt (Bluebird)—"Personally I would say this is very good. It appealed to me strongly. Divided opinions among the patrons, however, as usual. One must see it from the start to enjoy it."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Charmer, with Ella Hall (Bluebird)—"Although Ella Hall has little drawing power, the picture taken as a whole is very good. I am a firm believer in the story first. Bluebird heads the list in the story."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp, with the Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"We had to hire extra help to count the coin taken in with this on Christmas Day. Doubled prices and did a terrific business."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

When a Man Sees Red, with William Farnum (Fox)—"Although the story is not pleasing, the acting of Farnum and the rest of the cast makes the picture very good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

A Rich Man's Plaything, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"The title is misleading. The picture is fair. No matter what part this star takes, she is dressed in the height of fashion."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

A Rich Man's Plaything, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"Where did they get that title? The picture isn't as bad as the title."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A wonderful, timely picture. Played two days of bad weather to fair crowds."—Frank Dietlein, Jr., Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"Played this two days at advanced prices. I don't know whether Farnum made the picture or the picture made Farnum. A good picture and very timely. Gruesome near the end but it needs this to drive the story home."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Scarlet Pimpernel, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A costume play which did not please. Story and picture good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Yankee Way, with George Walsh (Fox)—"Everyone went out of the house pleased with this picture. We would like to see more like it."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Yankee Way, with George Walsh (Fox)—"A clever story of the romantic kind, which pleases. Walsh is getting better, some think better than Fairbanks. A cracker-jack comedy."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Conscience, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—"A very good picture. One must see it from the start and concentrate attention to the end to enjoy it."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Thou Shalt Not Steal, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"A poor title with no drawing power, but a fine picture. Different from the usual run. It will keep the audience guessing and will please them."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

This Is the Life, with George Walsh (Fox)—"An excellent picture for entertainment. It makes one have no regrets or nightmares. Walsh is coming fast."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Jack and the Bean Stalk, with the Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"A big, wonderful production. Played to the biggest business we ever had."—Frank Dietlein, Jr., Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Wife Number Two, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"A poor picture."—F. J. Kempkes, Lyric Theater, Crete, Nebr.

Every Girl's Dream, with June Caprice (Fox)—"Nowhere near up to Fox standard. Why do they keep on making costume plays?"—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

North of 53, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"Picture good. Star well liked. Good business."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

GOLDWYN

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Goldwyn)—"A great picture. Should pack them in anywhere."—F. R. Smith, Bijou Theater, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Three days' big business. We will book a return."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A very good picture. We had nice business on it. The only trouble is that they ask too much for this class of pictures."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Patrons were dissatisfied. Poor business."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"Poor business. Patrons disappointed."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"A very good picture, but with a little too much war stuff for the present time. The star is liked."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

The Manxman, with Elizabeth Risdon (Goldwyn)—"A beautiful production but too long for the amount of action. The author of the book gives the picture drawing power."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

Fighting Odds, with Maxine Elliott (Goldwyn)—"Just an average program picture. Pay no more for this than you do for any other program and charge the usual admission."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Best ever. A great picture. Big business and everybody pleased."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Dandy good comedy and well liked by patrons. Brought capacity business."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

KLEINE

Skinner's Baby, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"The weakest of the three 'Skinner' pictures."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

One Touch of Nature, with John Drew Bennett (Edison-K. E. S. E.)—"Dandy comedy-drama. Boost it with your base-ball fans. They will enjoy it. Good ball scenes."—Faul and Overton, Lyric Theater, Winchester, Ill.

METRO

More Truth Than Poetry, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—"Way below the Metro standard."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. D.

Sidney Drew Comedies (Metro)—"These comedies always please as they are clean and their dry humor coupled with every-day events in every home gives a change from the slapstick comedy."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Under Handicap, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"A good picture but rather long. Could be cut down."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Lifted Veil, with Ethel Barrymore (Metro)—"The usual Metro quality. Not great but just consistent."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

MUTUAL

The Runaway, with Julia Sanderson (Mutual)—"A very good picture. A few favorable comments. Business poor."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Frame-up, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Extra good, with plenty of pep and action. Fairbanks will have to speed up to beat this one."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Check-Mate, with Jackie Saunders (Horheimer-Mutual)—"One of the best comedy-dramas I have had in my house for some time. Why not have more pictures like this one?"—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up, with Margarita Fischer (Mutual)—"Everybody was delighted with this.

A refreshing, pleasing picture. Good on any day for all classes of people."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

PARAMOUNT

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"It would be better for the box-office if 'Bab' were omitted from the title of these pictures. The feature is good, one the whole family will enjoy."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Hungry Heart, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"An excellent offering. Business poor on account of Christmas season."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Antics of Ann, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—"A fine comedy-drama. Drew a record Sunday night house for us."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Trouble Buster, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"A very good one indeed. Pleased a very nice crowd. This can be shown anywhere and it will satisfy."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Exile, with Mme. Petrova (Paramount)—"One of the few poor Paramount pictures. It's a shame to take money for this one."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Countess Charming, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—"Seemed to please all. While the novelty of Eltinge's feminine impersonations drew, much credit for the success of the picture must be given to the usual fine Lasky production, which is about perfect."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Country Hero, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"This comedy will put 'Fatty' up in the front row again. As good a comedy as he ever made and he has made some good ones. Keep up the good work."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Mice and Men, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"I don't know where they got the title but they certainly got the picture where they know how to make them. Plenty of clean comedy to make it go over in any crowd. Intensely interesting throughout the entire six reels. Don't be afraid to book it and advertise it big. It will make good."—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

David Garrick, with Dustin Farnum (Paramount)—"An old time love story. Splendid picture of its kind. Photography good. Star and cast splendid. If you want an old-time, clean love story, you will find it in this. And it is not lacking in comedy."—J. F. Hickenbottom, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Paramount - Bray Pictographs (Paramount)—"These one-reel subjects are great. My people like them. The cartoons can't be beat."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Fatty at Coney Island, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"My patrons don't care what kind of a play it is, just so there's 'Fatty' in it."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Each Pearl a Tear, with Fanny Ward (Paramount)—"I can't say enough about the star. Her work is almost perfect. She is well liked by all. A good picture with good drawing power, well liked by the audience."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Bottle Imp, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"My people do not care for this type of picture."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Goose Girl, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Good but far from being the star's best. Miss Clark is a winner. Book two or three of her pictures and you will continue."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Valentine Girl, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Very good. Pleased everyone. Fair business in the week before Christmas."—F. J. Kempkes, Lyric Theater, Crete, Nebr.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A better than average release. Pleased generally. Business only fair on a two-day run. The price paid for this prevented any profit."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—My patrons care very little for plays of this nature. I regard it as a poor Vivian Martin picture."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

His Wedding Night, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"No matter what 'Fatty' does, he makes them laugh. Picture not as good as those in the past."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Clever Mrs. Carfax, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—"A good picture. Eltinge is great. Patrons well pleased. This is better than his first picture."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

PATHE

Miss Captain Kiddo, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"First of the 'Little Mary Sunshine' pictures under the new company which I have run, and it is a failure compared with her older ones."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Tears and Smiles, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"A very well liked picture. This little star is wonderful and is rapidly achieving popularity with us. She always brings good business for the Kensington Theater."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

France in Arms (Pathe)—"A very fine and instructive picture. Every American should see it. Don't be afraid to boost it."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Iron Heart, with Edwin Arden (Pathe)—"A very good picture. Pleased everyone."—F. J. Kempkes, Lyric Theater, Crete, Nebr.

SELECT

Poppy, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"A good picture but the print was in wretched condition, which injured the picture on the second day."—F. R. Smith, Bijou Theater, Fond du Lac, Wis.

The Price She Paid, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"A fair picture but it did not draw."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Mont.

The Silent Master, with Robert Warwick (Selznick)—"A very good picture in every way."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Magda, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"This did not draw. The story is slow and without much action."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

TRIANGLE

For Valor, with Winifred Allen (Triangle)—"A fair picture. Did not draw well."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Pinch Hitter, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"The second repeat to big business."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Disciple, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Two days to bigger business than at the first showing."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Girl of the Timber Claims, with Constance Talmadge (Triangle)—"Story good. Patrons well pleased. Business good."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

A Daughter of the Poor, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"Not up to the Triangle standard. Too slow. Business only fair."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Sweetheart of the Doomed, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"Picture great, to poor business on account of a Lyceum course number. Story has the present war as a background."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Triangle Single Reel Comedies (Triangle)—"Very ordinary. In many instances we take them off after the first run. Triangle can do better work than these show." —Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Idolators, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A somewhat over-done 'vamp' story. The public is tired of this kind of pipe dream. A good picture, however, of this type."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Flame of the Yukon, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"Played it two days in the worst kind of weather at advanced prices. The best picture of this type made. True in every way to that country and that time."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Devil Dodger, with Roy Stewart (Triangle) —"This picture did not please. Too close to The Flame of the Yukon. We have been overbooked with this western bar-room and dance-hall type."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Regenerates, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)— "Better than average business for December 21 and 22." —A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Madcap Madge, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)— "An exceptionally good picture. Our audience spoke well of this new little star. She can't be beat. Picture is full of action and was liked by big and little, old and young. It went over like a whirl-wind. Don't be afraid to advertise this for the star is great."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Millionaire Vagrant, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A very good picture with many unexpected twists in the story, and plenty of punch and action. This star is well liked in this vicinity and received much applause. Don't be afraid to book this."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Paws of the Bear, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A very good production. This star does great work. He holds your interest from start to finish. This is a good box-office picture. The Triangle program can always be depended upon to give you an average run of good pictures."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Man Hater, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle) —"This is sure some picture. Miss Bessie can't be beat. This pleased all classes of people. The acting is very good. Patrons like this kind of picture, with lots of laughs and very interesting from start to finish."—Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Maternal Instinct, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"A wonderful picture. You will have no complaints on this one. The star is fine and went over big."— Mrs. George Volk, Kensington Theater, Buffalo, N. M.

VITAGRAPH

A Prince in a Pawn-shop, with Barney Barnard (Vitagraph)—"Splendid drama. Everyone well pleased. Especially appeals to Jewish people."—Faul and Overton, Lyric Theater, Winchester, Ill.

Dead-shot Baker, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"This would have been a good picture a few years ago but is a poor one now. One reason why it did not go here is that this town knows what the west is."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Soldiers of Chance, with Evart Overton (Vitagraph)—"The poorest picture I have used in months. Vitagraph must have made this years ago and slipped it in when no one was looking. Story poor, and inconsistent. Acting poor. Not up to Vitagraph standard."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

WORLD

The Guardian, with Carlyle Blackwell (World)— "Very good. World pictures are always good."—F. J. Kempkes, Lyric Theater, Crete, Nebr.

Souls Adrift, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"One of the best pictures of the season, as good as most specials."—F. J. Kempkes, Lyric Theater, Crete, Nebr.

Tides of Fate, with Alexandria Carlisle (World)—

"A poor picture for a World. Fair business due to advertising World Pictures as always good."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Tenth Case, with June Elvidge (World)—"Not for children. Drew well for us. The star is well liked in our locality. The picture shows that circumstantial evidence is right in nine cases out of ten but this is the tenth case, in which it was wrong."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

The Spoilers, with William Farnum (Selig)—"Film in very poor condition."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Spoilers, with William Farnum (Selig)—"Print in bad shape. Not much business. This is its third time here."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Eyes of the World (Clune)—"We played this at seventy-five cents top price a year ago. This time it did fair business for one day at twenty-five cents."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea (Universal)—"Picture has big drawing power and did big business but was not well liked."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

Even as You and I (Universal)—"Very good picture but a little too deep for the general public here."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

The Whip (Paragon)—"A great picture. Big business and patrons wanted a return date."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

The Whip (Paragon)—"A special feature in eight reels. Plenty of thrills, train wreck, auto accident and an exciting horse race. A big attraction."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle-class neighborhood.

The Cold Deck, with W. S. Hart (Ince)—"The best Hart picture ever produced. Star does a little of everything. Big business."—Raymond Robbins, Orpheum Theater, Glasgow, Montana.

Neptune's Daughter, with Annette Kellermann (Universal)—"This was some picture for an old one. Film in good condition. Big business."—Frank Dietlein, Jr., Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Who Leads the National Army? (Triangle)—"A good one-reeler that went over big."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Deemster, with Derwent Hall Caine (Mirror)—"Played four days to average business in July. Repeated two days in December to increased business."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

SERIALS AND SERIES

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter five. This episode lacks punch and the action is not as fast as in other chapters. Business is good and improving."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Fatal Ring, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"Draws good business. Pearl White is popular."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Ford Weekly (Ford Motor Co.)—"A pleasing single reel offering. Fits into a program nicely where you want variety. Is loaned free of charge. It keeps away from advertising the Ford cars much more than one would think a reel of this kind would do."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, Chicago.—In middle-class neighborhood.

Franklin Directs Jewell Carmen

C. M. Franklin now is directing Miss Jewel Carmen in a new William Fox production. Work was begun this week at Hollywood, Cal. Miss Carmen's first production as a star, "The Kingdom of Love," released December 23, was made under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who directed the William Farnum de luxe production, "Les Miserables," now being shown at the Lyric Theater, New York. Mr. Franklin, with his brother, S. A. Franklin, has been confined since his association with Fox principally to the direction of the Francis Carpenter-Virginia Lee Corbin and the Georgie Stone-Gertrude Messinger companies, making such productions as "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and pictures based on the story of "The Mikado" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." Francis Carpenter and Gertrude Messinger are included in the cast of the new Carmen production.

Comedian Sprains Ankle

Arthur Bates, playing in one-reel Essanay comedies, sprained his ankle while performing some rapid action recently and is unable to work for a week or so.

Urges Public to Attend Theaters

The New York American is lending the weight of its influence to a plan to educate the public to pay its share of the federal war tax as levied through the medium of motion picture theater admissions. On this subject "The Buying American" has this to say on the matter:

Whenever we're forced to pay more for things we've always bought at a fixed price human nature "takes it out" on the seller.

When the U. S. Government said: "You must pay a penny or two more for your movies after November 1," the movie fan's first thought was a protest. Most of us forgot that the movie man doesn't get the extra price. Uncle Sam has started a new business—the business of peace insurance. He needs capital and he's getting it by taking us all into partnership—giving us an opportunity to share in the profits.

So we shouldn't hold a grudge against the movie man and we shouldn't go less often to the movies. They're worth the added cent or two, anyway, and always have been. We've paid less than we should just because the movie man hasn't asked us more.

Where can we get so much entertainment for so small an outlay as at the movies? Where do we see and learn so much? And now that a part of our movie investment will be used to overthrow autocracy we ought to go oftener than ever.

To be known as a movie fan will henceforth be the badge of patriotism, the mark of loyalty. We are serving our country when we go to the movies now. We are helping to win the war. With this thought uppermost we shall pay our war penny gladly, go frequently, and wish the movie man well, remembering that he isn't profiting by the tax, but that we are.

There's another reason why we ought to go to the movies more: They are getting better every day. We're seeing a bigger money's worth. Better actors, better plays, better theaters, more film per show—at no added cost to us except the war tax.

The movies have done more for us than we can ever do for them. They have brought the theater to our doors and accommodated it to our pockets. They have made its best exponents familiar to us—artists like Bernhardt and Sothern. They have whisked us around the world, shown us history in the making, broadened our viewpoint, helped us forget, enlivened the grind.

Shall we, then, begrudge Uncle Sam his movie tax? Not a bit! Let's be glad the movies are making it easier to win, doing their bit to make the world forever safe for democracy. Let's remember every time we take in a movie that we're helping to provide clothing, food, munitions for the boys at the front.

Over 10,000,000 persons, so they say, go to the movies every day. That means 10,000,000 pennies ($100,000) a day for the war chest—to bring nearer the day "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again."

Who gets the war tax? You do—for it's spent to insure your peace, to protect your interests, to help end the war.

So let's go to the movies.

Advance Demand for Walthall Play

Paralta Plays, Inc., announces that the third Paralta Play to be distributed to exhibitors through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, will be "His Robe of Honor" in which Henry B. Walthall will be seen as the star. There is a considerable advance demand for this production which like the first two Paralta Plays, J. Warren Kerrigan in Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man" and Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who?", is from the pen of well known novelists. "His Robe of Honor" was written by Ethel and James Dorrance.

The Indispensable Picture

WHEN President Wilson, on December 17, 1917, created the "Division of Foreign Picture Service," he conferred upon the motion picture art an acknowledgment of essentiality that will be envied by many an industry self-regarded as more important. The picture business is so calloused to compliment and so wrapt in its own devices that it is not thrilled by its advantage over other kinds of human acticity.

A Vanderlip, lecturing on thrift from the platform of a private car or behind a seven dollar banquet plate, may thoughtlessly urge his hearers to abandon their picture shows. But the President, in an executive order, recognizes their necessity. The order reads:

> I hereby create, under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Information, heretofore established by Executive Order of April 14, 1917, a Division of Foreign Picture Service for the purpose of stimulating interest in the war and furnishing entertainment and instruction by means of motion pictures to American soldiers at home and abroad; also to lend similar aid to the armies and citizens of our allies through the medium of the Young Men's Christian Association and other agencies of like character.

The narrow-visioned devotee of the business-is-business method will say that pictures for soldiers do not buy gasoline for the home exhibitor's Ford. He overlooks the fact that a harassed government driven by conservation necessities, might have declared him superfluous in the industrial and social scheme of the hour, and deprived him altogether of his line of effort. Many a business man who likes to go to picture shows has regarded them as pleasant but non-essential compared with his own business—whatever that might be.

But the government has proven pictures essential. It has decreed that they be supplied to the armies at the front, along with food and clothing and such other bare necessities as may find room in the hold of scanty shipping. When films can compete successfully in the executive mind with the thousand other commodities that are crying for cargo space, their position in the catalog of war requirements is established.

With such a criterion, there will be no further disposition to set the neighborhood theater aside as a non-essential. Only those queer spirits who regard gloom as the natural and appropriate state of mind would voice a proposal so depressing to the already sober throngs necessarily left over here.

The exact words of the epigram have gone the way of many a brilliant saying; but it has been remarked, in administrative circles, that if Germany could choose for elimination between our army system abroad and our publicity system at home, she would unhesitatingly strike at the latter. For that which comprises our publicity system is our list of thousands of loyal and devoted newspapers and magazines; a formidable defense against enemy propaganda that holds its influence with every soul of our hundred million.

But for all the might of this vast form of patriotic type, the might of the picture is greater. Every dreamer of motion picture dreams—and we confess to being one—knows in his heart that if those who should could see them, pictures would end the war.

Lights Out

IF well-illuminated fronts did not attract patronage, theater managers would not so cheerfully pay big light bills. The fuel administration order to turn off all unnecessary lights two evenings each week, now in effect, therefore necessarily cuts off two-sevenths of the patronage gained by such lighting. Indeed, as one of the proscribed nights is Sunday, the proportion is really much larger than that.

There is no way to get around the order (unless some resourceful exhibitor should care to coat the front of his house with luminous paint, like an officer's Ingersoll wrist watch, and let Nature take care of his lighting). So the theater men not only will make the best of the dark nights, but many of them will go further to assist in the national movement to conserve fuel.

One method of practical thrift we have already described—the substitution of efficient electrical conversion apparatus for the wasteful rheostat. (MOTOGRAPHY for December 1, 1917, editorial page.)

Another distinctly technical electrical method we have mentioned before is the coming use of the Mazda lamp for projection in place of the arc. This system, recently perfected and to be described in an early issue of MOTOGRAPHY, shows a saving of from forty-eight cents to as high as six dollars and forty cents per ten-hour period. And the saving in electric current—which saves coal for the nation as well as money for the exhibitor—is even greater than that.

The third possible method of saving light—and consequently coal—lies in the adoption of the "daylight saving" plan. This scheme is probably already known to most of our readers. It is not our purpose to argue here for its adoption, but merely to outline some of its claimed advantages in cutting down outside lighting, leaving the decision as to its indorsement to the good sense of each individual.

The daylight saving scheme is really a reasonable and practical proposal with a rather ridiculous superficial appearance. The idea is simply to turn the clock forward one hour as soon as the daylight begins to lengthen perceptibly. At present we waste an hour of daylight in morning sleep, and pay for it in the evening by an extra hour of electric light. If we could make the sun change its schedule, so as to rise an hour later and set an hour later, we would gain just an hour of expensive artificial lighting. If we would all set our alarm clocks an hour earlier, go to bed an hour earlier, we would gain the same result. But the first is impossible, and the second is psychologically unattractive. So we simply pass a law making the act of setting clocks ahead one hour standard practice, and we gain that extra hour in spite of ourselves.

There is nothing the matter with the scheme. It is perfectly good and reasonable—only, unfortunately, it looks a little silly. If it were not for that it probably would have been adopted here long ago, as it has been in Europe. Such a bill is now in Congress, and a little screen work by exhibitors could help it through.

All of which goes to show that there is more than one way by which the picture theaters can help the nation save coal, and thereby gain a profit for themselves.

Exhibitors: Send in Your Tax Protests

WE are printing once more the request of the Allied Exhibitors Legislative Committee, because the committee reports that the response so far has been quite disappointing.

It is almost incredible that the only chance of relief from a tax they consider unreasonable should be so ignored by the men most directly affected. There was plenty of indication that such relief was wanted. It must be plain to all that there is no other way to get it. Yet the committee is forced to work in the dark, for want of some of those very protests which have flowed so freely in a less formal way.

If this week's appeal brings no larger response, we can only conclude that the exhibitors like the present taxes, and have no desire to see them changed. Of course, if that is the case, the committee is wasting its time in trying to help them. P. H. W.

Laemmle Discloses Some Plain Truths

PRODUCER POINTS EVIL IN TOO MUCH BALLYHOO ABOUT SUCCESSES

In a straight from the shoulder talk, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has a message to deliver to the motion picture industry. He titles his talk "Exposing Some Big Secrets."

BY CARL LAEMMLE

MUCH of the misunderstanding that exists between various branches of the picture industry at the present time is due to the fact that some of us have been afraid to tell the truth about ourselves and our conditions. For the same reason there is a misunderstanding between the general public and the people in the picture business.

Every business concern, including picture companies, has a deadly fear of being considered anything but the richest company in its line of business. All of us are guilty of letting the public (including the exhibitors, too) think that we have the fattest bank-roll imaginable and that nothing short of an earthquake can shake our foundations. On the theory that "nothing succeeds like success," we have deliberately let the public think that the moving picture business is a gold mine.

Failures Are Concealed

We have all concealed our failures and our losses, but have made a great noise about our successes. Our press men are allowed to tell about the big pictures that net a profit of $100,000 or $1,000,000, but they are never allowed to print a word about the many pictures that net us as great a loss, or a greater one. The People love to hear about success, even though it is not their own.

They don't like to hear about failures, because they are not so interesting to talk about.

But after they have been fed up on this success stuff, after they have contracted mental indigestion eating up stories about the making of millions, they finally turn against those whom they believe to be wallowing in wealth. They sour. And finally they build up an envious hatred of the supposed plutocrats.

All Guilty Alike

That is where we all stand right now. I am speaking of ALL moving picture companies. By foolishly letting the people think what they like to think, we have completely got out of touch with them and have lost their sympathetic interest.

So far I have spoken of all companies. But now. I will confine my remarks to the Universal and give you a few doses of the plain, brutal truth, in the hope that it may help a very bad condition.

No Dividend for a Year

The stockholders of the Universal company have not been paid a dividend, either on the preferred or common stock, for a year.

The officers of the Universal company, in order to play fair with the stockholders, have purposely paid themselves much smaller salaries than the usual run of salaries paid to producing company executives.

The element of waste is lower in the Universal, we believe, than in any company in the business. It took us years to cut out waste, but we finally succeeded.

Pays No High Salaries

While the people are appalled at the $5,000 to $10,000 per week salaries that are paid to certain stars and while this practice has made the whole world believe that picture producers are making wicked fortunes, the Universal has never indulged in it. The highest salary we ever paid to any actor or actress was $1,500 per week—and that only for a short time.

In spite of the elimination of waste and extravagance, our expenses have constantly advanced so close to our gross income that we have not paid a cent of dividends in a year.

Profits Big on Paper

True we have "made money." Our books show some wonderful figures of big profits, but unfortunately they are all on paper or else they are in the form of studios, negatives or equipment. We have paid for these out of earnings and we assumed that the time would come when we could turn earnings into dividends instead of equipment. But it hasn't. And probably it won't, because every time we seem just ready to reach a dividend-paying basis, some new development comes along which compels us to re-invest and re-invest terific sums either in negatives or new exchanges or new markets or something else unforseen.

We have been asked why we discontinued our one, two and three-reel program pictures. The answer is interesting:

An audit of our books shows that in a recent 6-months period we lost $3.08 on every positive reel of short stuff shipped from our plant—not on every negative reel but on every positive. And in that period we shipped 24,810 such reels!

Shipped nearly twenty-five thousand and lost over three dollars on every one of them!

Forced to Quit Short Reels

This has been going on for eighteen months, but every time we even hinted that we might discontinue the short stuff, we received pleading letters from exhibitors, urging us to stand by the little exhibitor who needed the short stuff in his business. So we stuck to it and took our loss, thinking that we could turn the loss into a profit by getting the exhibitors to pay us a little more money for the short pictures.

But instead of paying more they paid less and less and less, hammering the price down and down until we finally had to quit releasing short stuff altogether, with the exception of serials, weeklies and two comedies.

We now have on our shelves 371,000 feet of perfectly good negatives, one, two and three reels in length. These are comedies and dramas. They cost us close to a million dollars, but we cannot release them because we would lose money on every positive reel made from them.

Chance to Get House

So we are simply holding them in the hope that some day the exhibitors can pay us a fair rental price for the use of them. And I'll buy a house and lot for any exhibitor who can show me how to cash in on them right now!

One day when Lee Ochs was in my office I asked him what he thought we averaged per day on renting a certain brand of pictures. He considered the matter a moment, figured what our probable expenses were and what we ought to average in renting each positive print per day and then said, "I should guess about $20 a day."

Then I showed him that the actual average was $9.87.

Mr. Ochs urged me to publish these facts, saying that it would open the eyes of exhibitors and everybody else to the true condition of affairs in the producing and distributing end of the business. And that's one reason why I am doing so.

Public Should Pay More

Stanley Mastbaum has proposed an amalgamation as a remedy for existing evils. That may be possible but I doubt it. Experience has shown me that every time there is a merger in the film business, new companies spring up and recreate the same bad business.

I think a better suggestion is a national fight for more money from the public. The theaters at present are giving their patrons better pictures, better music, better surroundings, better everything—but the advance in admission prices has been ridiculously low. In Russia, I am informed, the picture theaters charge as high as a dollar. In Germany, in England and in many other countries the admission prices are anywhere from two to four times as much as the average American admission price.

I know that many will say "It can't be done. You don't know the public. My territory is different. I've tried and couldn't put it over."

Necessity Demands Action

My answer is that it must be done; that I do know the public as well as any man in the business; that your territory is not any different from other territories in principle; and that if you've tried and failed, you'll have to keep on trying until you put it over.

One theater such as the Rialto or Strand in New York pays its stockholders more cash dividends than a world-wide producing and distributing corporation such as the Universal. This would be funny if it were not so serious. Imagine it! A tremendous organization, with offices in every part of the civilized world, with seventy exchanges in America alone, employing thousands of people, releasing between one and two million feet of positive reels of pictures every week; an organization with an almost unbelievably huge income, is operating on such a close margin that it cannot pay as much in dividends as one single lone theater!

I feel that we are entitled to a big share of the profits in this business, but we don't get it. I feel that with our tremendous efforts we are justified in expecting to pay dividends to the Universal stockholders, provided we continue to keep our quality up at all times. But as I said before we have not paid dividends for a year, and I don't see any chance of paying any, unless we get more money for our goods. And we can't hope to get more until the exhibitors get more from the people.

While I have no right to speak for any other concern than the Universal, I feel convinced that the same condition which I have described applies to nearly every producing concern in the business to a greater or less degree.

We have all kept a stiff upper lip and made a monumental bluff at boundless prosperity. By a foolish silence, and a cowardly fear we have permitted the whole world to believe that all of us were coining money as in a mint.

Eric Campbell, biggest man in moving pictures, who was killed in an automobile accident in Los Angeles, is shown here in the final scene of the last Charlie Chaplin picture in which he appeared, "The Adventurer."

Ripening for Receiver

I seriously and solemnly venture the prediction that all of us—the producers, the distributors and the exhibitors—will become ripe for the receiver unless all of us get more money from the only source it is possible to get it from—the public.

The fate of the moving picture business has been in the hands of the producers in past years. But today it is in the hands of the exhibitors. If they get more money so they can pay more money for their goods, we can all pull through. If they don't arouse themselves to this imperative necessity, we can all get ready for the damndest crash that ever resounded in any industry in the land.

I am not squealing. I am not misrepresenting. I am publishing some plain truths which should have been published long ago. I have always been an optimist in this business. And the picture of conditions which I have painted is not a pessimistic one. On the contrary, conditions are, if anything, a whole lot worse than I have said.

Disaster and Death Near

Today the moving picture industry is closer to disaster and death than it has been in the past ten years. It needs and must have an operation that will either kill or cure completely. Raising all admission prices is the operation that will either kill something that is already very sick, or else put it on its feet. We've got practically nothing to lose and everything to gain. Let's operate!

And let's handle it without gloves! Don't tell the people that the war taxes are the only cause of your advanced prices. They are only one of many causes. Tell them the plain truth—that with expenses increased all along the line as well as new taxes, you've got to get more or quit. Then they can't accuse you of profiteering on the war tax or anything else.

It isn't a pleasant job. No operation ever is. But it is a life saver, and it's the only possible one on hand.

Big Year Ahead for Harold Lockwood

The year of 1918 promises to be a busy one and, with ordinary good fortune, an extremely successful one for Harold Lockwood, Metro star.

Ambitious plans have been mapped out to cover Mr. Lockwood's activities during this period. The photoplay rights to a number of books by prominent authors have been acquired and will be adapted into vehicles for the star production during 1918. Extreme care has been exercised in the choice of these stories. Scores of novels, plays, and original scenarios were read and it is believed that the final selections will meet with the enthusiastic approval of exhibitor and public alike.

The works chosen will be produced on a big scale. The dual director system under which Mr. Lockwood is now working allows the producers plenty of scope to carry out this part of the program. The length of time used by one director in directing a picture is allotted the alternate director to make his preparations for the subsequent subject. Under this system each director has ample time to make the necessary arrangements for the many technical requirements of these stories.

Peggy Hyland a Fox Star

Peggy Hyland, the little English actress who has become famous in the United States within two years in motion pictures, has become a William Fox star. Miss Hyland is to head another company producing the one-a-week, 52-a-year Special Features.

Groves Joins Navy

Fred Groves, who appeared in the Goldwyn release of "The Manx-Man," has joined the British navy.

Vitagraph presents Harry Morey in the role of a village blacksmith in "His Own People."

Vitagraph Offers—Edward Earle Plays Lead in Initial 1918 Feature—Three Others Released in January

THE first Blue Ribbon feature to be released by Vitagraph in the New Year will be "The Blind Adventure," on January 7, featuring Edward Earle and Betty Howe. The play, which was adapted from "The Agony Column," the famous Saturday Evening Post serial of Earl Derr Biggers, was produced under the direction of Wesley H. Ruggles, now at Yaphank in training for service in France.

Gladys Leslie.

Other Blue Ribbon releases for January are the following:

Jan. 14.—"The Wild Strain," an adaptation from an original story by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester, entitled "The Eighth Great Grand Parent." Nell Shipman, with Alfred Whitman, is featured in the production, which was directed by William Wolbert.

Jan. 21—"The Menace," a melodrama featuring Corinne Griffith with Evart Overton. It was directed by John Robertson.

Jan. 28—"A Mother's Sin," a melodrama featuring Earle Williams, produced under the direction of Tom Mills.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, in announcing the features on the company's January list, declares that "The Blind Adventure" is one of the most novel screen stories he has ever seen and that it is one of the most gripping mystery dramas ever put out.

Edward Earle, who scored so strongly as the American aviator in Vitagraph's stirring drama, "For France," is seen in this production in an entirely different role—an adventurous youth with a taste for romance and mystery, who stages a murder for the edification of a girl who wishes to be amused. It is a role that calls for a peculiar admixture of ability, the player being called upon to portray tragedy and comedy alternately, and Mr. Earle is said to have met the demands of the part admirably.

The stars, it is declared, have been surrounded by a particularly strong cast, the players including Eulalie Jensen, Percy Standing, William Bailey, George Wright, Frank Norcross and Gilbert Rooney. The picture is remarkable for the fidelity of detail, especially the scenes showing famous places in the London of pre-war days.

Brady Boosts New York Exposition

PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION URGES ADVANTAGES OF EXHIBITING

BY WILLIAM A. BRADY

THERE are so many good reasons why the progressive producer of films and motion picture equipment will find it advantageous to exhibit at the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace next February that it seems to be a point scarcely worth while arguing. Primarily those who exhibit will do so to increase their business and every concern at the exposition can increase its business if that concern will make the right sort of attack. Let it be aggressive—convey the idea that it is alive and able to deliver the goods and bigger business will result.

Exposition Has Following

Of course there are those who will attempt to tell you that exhibiting is not worth the effort—not worth the cost of floor space. They are the same ones who seem to think that cheap actors are as good as real artists—the same ones who will not engage a high-priced star for fear it will not pay. They seem to lose sight of the fact that the big star has a following that is worth big money and likewise as regards the exposition, they seem to forget that it will have its following of the biggest exhibitors and distributors in the industry, hundreds of whom will travel across the country to attend the exposition.

Let the skeptical ones get it into their heads that in taking space they are not merely renting so much space as they might in a storage warehouse—no—they are securing space and also the privilege to display their goods to thousands of interested motion picture exhibitors who are in New York for a few days to look into what is new in profit-producing. It is a case of "catch 'em while they're hot."

National Association Owns Show

Now, if this exposition were merely some private promoter's scheme to make a "clean-up" for himself, as has been the case of some expositions in the past, I should not be as emphatically in favor of it. I should turn around and say, "Let the National Association run a show of its own," which is precisely what is being done in the case of coming exposition. It is under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. That ought to be sufficient guarantee for anyone that the exposition will be thoroughly representative of what is best for the industry. The bigger and better it can be made the more business exhibitors will do. Once again the watchword "co-operation" becomes the keynote. By helping the industry as a whole we help ourselves. "Unity of action spells success."

Chance to Learn Something

Motion picture distributors and exhibitors can learn something new every day of their lives if they keep their eyes and ears open. There are none of us so familiar with everything used in connection with motion pictures that we can walk through Grand Central Palace when the exposition opens, and fail to find something new and advantageous to our business. The automobile and motor boat industries were built up principally through the exchange of ideas and signing of contracts for distribution at their annual expositions.

Hundreds of thousands of the general public visited these expositions and became enthused over cars and boats. Last February the aeroplane manufacturers held an exposition in Grand Central Palace, and it was a very fortunate thing they did, too, for it resulted in many decided advances in the industry upon which we depend largely to win the war.

The florists and horticulturists, the chemical industries, the electrical goods makers, the hotel men, all have their expositions and they pay the concerns who exhibit, as is evidenced by the fact that they exhibit year after year and that the expositions grow bigger each season.

Create More Movie Fans

Now the motion picture industry is wholly dependent upon the general public. The more movie "fans" we can create, the more business we can do. Fifteen years ago there were thousands of women who would not ride in an automobile. They were afraid of them. Today these same women not only ride in, but they drive their own cars.

Fifteen years ago, the percentage of cultured, educated people who visited motion picture shows was an almost negligible quantity. Today there are millions. Tomorrow will see millions more. After the war there will be a tremendous boom the like of which the industry has never known and the concerns who cash in then will be the ones who attain and maintain prestige in the meantime.

Will Carry Lessons Home

All the more reason why we should co-operate in every way to get more of the public interest in motion pictures. Thousands of visitors at the forthcoming exposition will go home and talk to their families and friends about what they saw of exceptional interest. The greatest advertising in the world is word-of-mouth recommendation and praise. That is what all printed advertising aims to inspire. It must be borne in mind that any big metropolitan exposition numbers visitors from many parts of the country, for a large percentage of New York's population is made up of visitors from other cities, and they go back home and talk of what they saw in Gotham.

In short, news of an exposition like the forthcoming one goes all over the country and increases the prestige of the motion picture industry and makes more movie fans, in addition to making increased business for film people.

Edith Storey's Debut

Edith Storey, one of the best known actresses of the screen, who affixed her name to a Metro contract several months ago, makes her debut under the parrot trade-mark in an unusual picture, "The Eyes of Mystery." Tod Browning directed the production from the scenario of June Mathis, which was based on the story "The House in the Mist," by Octavus Roy Cohan and J. U. Giesy.

"Sturdy Screen Dramas Needed"—Goldfish

HEAD OF PRODUCING COMPANY BELIEVES TREND OF PUBLIC TASTE IS TURNING

NEW YEARS is a time of prophecy as well as reflection, and, with America just entering upon its active participation in the war, it is a time when the motion picture industry looks forward very seriously toward the future. Upon the correct divination of the trend of public opinion and public emotion during 1918 depends the success of the new art in meeting its gigantic task of healthy and profitable entertainment.

Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is frank to say that he believes the taste of photoplay-goers during the coming year will turn from the light and frivolous to plays of power and meaning.

People Think Seriously

"There is a decided trend," he says, "toward drama, sturdy, up-standing heart-interest drama. Never before have the people of the whole world been living, feeling and thinking so seriously. Many thought that America's entrance into the Great War would put a premium on light, frothy comedy as a relief from the war's cares. The experience of the whole industry has shown the very contrary.

"America is stirred to its depths. America is aroused emotionally as it has not been in half a century. The reflection of this is a tremendous and constantly growing demand for screen entertainment that gives emotional satisfaction, that expresses the stress of the moment—and its optimism. America is ready to meet any problem, any situation, tremendous though it may be and tragic in its potentialities, and America is ready to solve it with confident heroism.

Screen Reflects Public Mood

"It is a vital satisfaction to us of the motion picture industry to see the democratic screen so truly a reflector of the nation's mood.

"As for more general prophecy, I feel most confident that in a fundamental respect Goldwyn's policy and experience will rule in the industry during the coming year. There will be fewer and better pictures. By this I mean that more and more producers will come to realize that the making of 'quality pictures,' like the making of any other quality product, takes time. No organization on earth can turn out splendid productions at the rate of two a week. Goldwyn set itself to find good stories, good actors and good direction sufficient for a new production every fortnight. Frankly, it has not been the simplest thing in the world. In the present state of the industry even such a schedule strains an organization to its very highest efficiency.

Slower and Better Work

"I think that Goldwyn's success, work-on this basis, and the paucity of really outstanding pictures produced on any 'hurry-call' system of production in the past year, will determine many competitors to do slower and better work. The public, as well as the exhibitor, will unquestionably profit by this."

Board of Review Praises "Thais"

Declares Production Is Distinctive Stride Forward in Photographic Interpretation of Drama—Says Mary Garden's Acting Is Notable

THE National Board of Review has signalized its warm appreciation of the Goldwyn production, "Thais," starring Mary Garden, by selecting it as a high example of the perfection of motion picture art to present before a special audience of distinguished men and women, from all walks of public life, assembled in Wurlitzer Hall, New York. In addition the Board has issued the following special bulletin:

"This production sums up the artistic achievements of the motion picture in interpretive and imaginative drama. Photographically it is a distinct stride forward. The acting of Mary Garden is notable and the picture as a whole is an example of creative art."

In explanation of the purpose of the special showing, W. D. McGuire, Secretary of the Board, said: "The executive committee of the board has appointed a special committee empowered to hold from time to time, private reviews of photoplays which appear to mark a distinct advance in motion picture production. On the basis of the report made to the special committee, a special private review of Mary Garden in 'Thais' was authorized by the special committee. The general purpose of the review, to which have been invited a large number of people interested in dramatic art, is to demonstrate improvement in technique, particular care in stage settings and improved stage direction, marking further advance in photoplay development."

Le Vino Goes West

Albert Shelby Le Vino, Metro scenario writer, who has written the continuity of a long list of successes for the screen, will leave shortly for the firm's Western studios at Hollywood, California, where he will be Western Manager B. A. Rolfe's right hand man in the arranging of stories for pictures starring Viola Dana and Edith Storey.

William Fox Takes Over Victor Studio

Forced to Provide Additional Accommodations for His Rapidly Expanding Producing Organization

WILLIAM FOX has taken over the former Victor studio at 638 West Forty-third street New York City, and already has a company working there. The acquisition was necessitated, according to the Fox management, by crowded conditions existing at the five studios in New Jersey which have been operated during the past year.

The matter of studio expansion has been under consideration for some time, it is announced, but decision has been put off from time to time because, by changing companies from studio work to work on locations, it has been possible temporarily to overcome congestion. Bad weather however prevented this arrangement from being continued and recently the problem arose as to what was to be done with the June Caprice company which was to make a new production under the direction of Harry Millarde.

All of the New Jersey studios were in use. Some of the "Queen of the Sea" sets occupied one building entirely. George Walsh was engaged under the direction of Carl Harbaugh in preliminary filming of the big Fox Special Feature based on the Saturday Evening Post story, "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal." Virginia Pearson was finishing a picture entitled "Stolen Honor," set for January 6 release. Jane and Katherine Lee were well along with a successor to "Trouble-makers," and J. Gordon Edwards was directing a vampire picture requiring a great deal of studio work. About this time, Madame Sonia Markova and her company returned from Buzzards Bay where they had been taking the sea pictures and exteriors for "A Heart's Revenge."

It was obvious that additional space must be provided immediately unless Miss Caprice was to be kept idle indefinitely. There was no possibility of solving the difficulty by sending one of the companies to Hollywood, Cal., the Fox management explains, because all of the available studio space there is in use. Its capacity was reached when Jewel Carmen was sent there recently from the East to make her first picture as a star under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Taking over the Victor studio saved the situation, but it is understood that even this arrangement affords only temporary relief, the Fox interests having plans under way for further expansion during the coming year which probably will necessitate even larger studio facilities being provided.

"Birth of a Nation" Goes to Picture Theaters

Announcement was made last week that after January 1 D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," will be booked by special arrangement in the representative picture theaters of the country. The booking plans for this picture are being arranged by J. J. McCarthy, general manager of the Epoch Producing Company, Longacre building, New York City.

Four Marie Dressler Comedies Finished

Word comes from the Hollywood studios of the company that Marie Dressler has completed two more film comedies for Goldwyn release, making a total of four finished and ready for exhibitors. Two of these—"Fired" and "The Scrub-Lady"—are already being shown throughout the United States.

New Production Company Formed

America Photoplay Corporation Enters Field with Plans for Making a $1,250,000 Motion Picture

A NEW feature picture company, the America Photoplay Corporation, is in the field.

M. K. Higginbottom of Chicago will be in New York City, at the Waldorf Astoria, on and after January 9, completing arrangements and making contracts for the company's million and a quarter dollar production. Mr. Higginbottom has submitted the outline of his projected photoplay to some of the pioneer motion picture men, and to a number of prominent educators and business men, all of who claim that if the photoplay is produced as outlined to them it will prove to be one of the greatest, most spectacular and realistic pictures ever produced.

Mr. Higginbottom says no expense will be spared in casting and securing material for a mammoth twelve reel photoplay. His visit to New York is for the purpose of getting in touch with a capable staff of the most competent directors, scenario writers and also a large number of picture performers of national reputation.

Eastern offices will be opened in New York at an early date. The new company's western offices are now located at 123 West Madison street, Chicago.

Triangle Completes Two Features

Finishes "Heiress for a Day" in Time for Olive Thomas To Go East for Christmas—Four Plays Being Made

TWO pictures of exceptional merit, both five-reelers, have been completed in the past week, one new subject has been started, four other pictures are in various stages of production and four directors are waiting for new stories in the dramatic department of the Triangle's Culver City studios.

Director Jack Dillon, who handled the megaphone on "Heiress for a Day," worked continuously, shooting both day and night, so that the picture might be completed in time to allow Miss Thomas to go east for Christmas with her parents. The picture was completed in record time, setting a new production mark for the Triangle studios. The star practically lived at the studio while the picture was being made, taking her meals in her dressing room with the director and discussing the new scenes during time off for refreshments.

Three of the most notable members of the Triangle playing forces are seen in "Captain of His Soul," the screen adaptation of Eleanoret Kinkade's magazine story, "Shackles." They are William Desmond and Charles Gunn, who appear as brothers, and Jack Richardson, one of the best known screen heavies in the profession, who did especially notable work in "Man Above the Law.' "Captain of His Soul" was directed by G. P. Hamilton.

Cliff Smith, director of Triangle western thrillers, featuring the cowboy star, Roy Stewart, is more than half through with his latest offering, "Keith of the Border," from Randall Parrish's novel of the same name. A feature of this picture will be a fight between Roy Stewart and Pete Morrison, both powerful men, who engage in a hand-to-hand battle until both fall from exhaustion. Supporting Stewart in this picture are Norbert Cills, R. P. Thompson, William Ellingford, Josie Sedgwick and a number of cowboys.

Three Character Men in One Play

Three of the best-known character men in the profession appear in the Triangle feature, "The Hopper," Director Thomas Heffron's latest picture, from the Collier's Weekly story by the same name. They are Walt Whitman, George Hernandez and William V. Mong, so the picture might be termed one showing an all-star cast of character actors. It is a crook play of no small merit with Irene Hunt in the leading feminine role.

New Vitagraph Serial Announced

President A. E. Smith, Selects Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon as Leads in "The Woman in the Web"

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces that Hedda Nova, the beautiful young Russian star whom he recently put under a long term contract, will make her first Vitagraph appearance in a serial work upon which began last week. Frank Glendon, heretofore starred in the O. Henry subjects made by Vitagraph, is to be featured opposite Miss Nova.

The serial, which will be in fifteen episodes, was written by President Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady is called "The Woman in the Web." Mr. Smith promises that even an outline of the story cannot be told, for President Smith says that it is a story which takes the players around the world, thus giving an opportunity for showing local scenes in Russia, Japan, China, England, France and the United States.

"The Woman in the Web" will be a serial entirely different in treatment and story from anything Vitagraph has produced. "The Fighting Trail," released last September, and "Vengeance—and the Woman," released to exhibitors on Christmas eve, were western pictures with mountains and deserts as their background.

Hedda Nova and Mr. Glendon left New York for California last week and are now at the company's western studio in Hollywood, engaged in making the interiors for the first episode of the serial which will be released some time next spring.

Comedy Production is Rapid

Comedy production is going along at a rapid rate since the Triangle-Keystone forces have become accustomed to their new quarters at the Triangle Culver City studios and the four companies making two-reel Keystone comedies have productions well under way, two of them already near completion.

Charles Avery, who is making one-reel Triangle Komedies, has already completed one story and has started on another, entitled "Fork Over," since moving to the new "lot." His present story has a cast including Max Asher, Harry Depp, Alatia Marton, Nate Salmon, Rose Carter and Arthur Moon. Harry Depp is appearing in an original make-up, which he created sometime ago and which made such a hit with Albert Glassmire that Depp may use it as a permanent make-up in the future.

Olive Thomas and Jack Richardson Lead

Play Chief Roles in Triangle Features Scheduled for Release Week of January 6—New Comedies Offered

A COMEDY-DRAMA featuring Olive Thomas, formerly of the "Ziegfeld Follies," New York, will open the Triangle program for the New Year, on January 6, and Jack Richardson, in "Man Above the Law," a dramatic story of the Navajo Indian country, is scheduled to follow.

For the first part of the week, Olive Thomas with Charles Gunn, will appear in "Betty Takes a Hand," a pleasantly humorous, fast moving story written by Katherine Kavanaugh, winner of the second honors in the recent Triangle-Photoplay Magazine competition. The picture was directed by Jack Dillon.

For the second release of the week, Jack Richardson will appear in "Man Above the Law" with Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick supporting. Jack Richardson as the hardened character in this picture is said to display all the necessary touches and does some of the best work of his long career. Special Navajo huts were constructed for this picture and "real" Mexicans and Indians were engaged to perfect the consistency of the local color.

In "His Punctured Romance," the Keystone Comedy, also scheduled for release January 6, William Franey appears as a "bunko" wrestler who offers $250 to anyone who can throw him. By having a man underneath the stage, armed with a hat pin, and by the simple process of pounding the floor, Franey usually puts his opponent out. But when he lands in one town, Franey gets his signals mixed and he is chased all over the village when the populace discovers his game.

"Matrimonial Breaker" and "His Day of Doom," one-reel Triangle Komedies, will complete the week's releases.

Two Comedians Enlist

Eddie Gribbon, Triangle-Keystone comedian and brother of Harry Gribbon, just as he is going up in popularity is going down in reality. After carefully considering the various ways in which he could serve his country, Eddie, who is a scrapper by nature, joined the submarine division of the U. S. Navy. "Tex" Jordan, of the "Keystone Kops," also enlisted in the navy this week and was on the lot Monday, in his new uniform.

Olive Thomas, Triangle star who plays the lead in "Betty Takes a Hand."

Publicity To Aid Spy Serial

Newspaper Stories Will Be Released at Same Time as Episodes of Wharton's "The Eagle's Eye"

WHEN The Whartons release their new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on Secret Service Chief Flynn's story of the activities of Germany's spy system in America, a unique and effective system of publicity will be put into operation throughout the country, which will especially attract public attention.

Chief Flynn's story on the screen, combined with the special publicity which will accompany each episode, will make one of the most complete exposures of any matter of public interest ever attempted.

As each episode is released, illustrated special articles will be offered to the daily press covering matters of interest in connection with the subject of the picture. Among other features will be the complete history of Imperial Germany's vast system of espionage extending all over the world, founded on official facts and records not known to the public and will reveal the inner workings of this vast machine in every detail—industrial, diplomatic, military and naval.

Real Atmosphere in "The Knife"

One of the distinctive features of Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Knife," which is now being filmed in the Fifty-sixth street studio, will be the unusually beautiful Southern scenes with which the story opens.

These were taken on the famous Emerson plantation near Jacksonville, Florida, and embody in architecture and grounds the real atmosphere of the old South. For generations past the Emersons have played a large part in the affairs of their state and their home is typical of all that Southern wealth and culture imply. In their generous welcome to Miss Brady and her company, they lived up to the Emerson traditions of hospitality and placed at the disposal of the star and her director, Robert C. Vignola, every possible aid.

Use Magnificent Estate in Picture

Makers of World-Brady Production "Gates of Gladness" Have Elaborate Backgrounds for Scenes Taken on Gould Grounds

MANY of the scenes of "Gates of Gladness," a new World-Picture Brady-Made for publication at the end of January, were photographed upon the superb estate of George Gould. The Gould place, probably the most magnificent in the north, if not the entire country, is named Georgian Court, and its most picturesque beauties are backgrounds for the stirring episodes of this play.

Mrs. Gould took a lively interest in the making of the picture, and her beautiful young daughter, Gloria, struck up quite a friendship with little Madge Evans, "the World's kiddie star," who plays the heroine of "Gates of Gladness." In fact, little Madge was invited to return at no distant date to act with Miss Gloria in a private motion picture to be shown only to guests of the Goulds.

The story of the new World-Picture coils around two brothers who are both in love with the same girl. The younger brother marries the girl and is disowned by the father, who afterward dies leaving his fortune to the elder son. The younger has a hard time of it trying to earn a living as an artist, but his little daughter, played by Madge Evans, ultimately brings the estranged brothers together, although she is shot and very nearly killed in the process.

It was for the home of the rich brother that the Gould estate was utilized. One of the "shots" takes in a bird's-eye view of the most ornamental section of the grounds. Another situation represents moonlight in a grove of tall, slender trees, with a midnight marauder threading his way among the trunks as he stealthily approaches the mansion to "break in and steal."

Featured with little Miss Evans in this screen play will be George MacQuarrie, who has played many roles in World-Pictures. Also in the cast are Gerda Holmes, Mrs. Stuart Robson, Baby Joan, Niles Welch and Rosina Henley, the last mentioned a daughter of the late E. J. Henley, an actor of positive genius, and Helen Bertram, one of the most beautiful and gifted prima donnas who ever graced the lyric stage in America.

"Gates of Gladness" was staged by Harley Knoles.

Earle Williams Party Reach Coast

Earle Williams and his company of Vitagraph players arrived in Los Angeles Christmas morning and were met at the station by all the western Vitagraphers who could absent themselves from the Hollywood studio. All enjoyed a Christmas dinner in the Alexandria Hotel. In Mr. Williams' party were Grace Darmond, who will be his leading woman; Hedda Nova, the beautiful young Russian actress, and Frank Glendon, who will be featured together in Vitagraph's forthcoming serial, "The Woman in the Web"; Tom Mills, director; Frank Heath, assistant director; Fred Held, cameraman, and Mrs. Darmond. The receiving party included W. S. Smith, studio manager; Dave Smith, director, both brothers of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph; William Duncan, and Carol Holloway, stars in the Wolfville pictures, "Dead Shot Baker" and "The Tenderfoot," and the two big serials, "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, Lawrence Semon, director-comedian, and Earl Montgomery and Joe Rock, working in the Big V Comedies, and others.

Charles Kenyon Joins Fox Forces

Charles Kenyon, the well-known playwright, whose successful works have appeared on Broadway, New York, and throughout the country, has joined the William Fox forces as scenario writer in the western studios at Los Angeles. Among the plays Mr. Kenyon has written are "Kindling," which appeared at Daly's Theater, New York, in 1912, and "Husband and Wife," one of the productions that gave the Forty-Eighth Street Theater in New York its reputation for successes. He also wrote "The Operator" and "Batting Bill," the latter play, which is widely known, beginning its career in San Francisco in 1914. With Frank Dare he wrote "The Claim," which ran at the Fulton Theater in New York.

He is a native of California and studied at the University of California and at Leland Stanford Jr. University. For a time he was a newspaper man in San Francisco, in which city he was born.

Mr. Kenyon's first work with the Fox Film Corporation was the writing of the scenario for George Scarborough's story, "Cupid's Round Up," which Tom Mix is using as his first starring vehicle. He is now engaged in writing the scenario for a new work in which Gladys Brockwell will be the star.

New Projection Process

W. W. Hodkinson has announced a new process of film projection which uses the standard film and makes a picture which is as high as the present width and twice as wide as the present height of the screen. The film runs sideways through the projector instead of up and down and two frames are used for each picture.

Little Madge Evans is the star in the World picture-Brady made, "Gates of Gladness." Many of the scenes of this production were taken on the estate of George Gould, the magnificent Georgian Court.

Margarita Fischer Is Headliner

Tops Mutual Release Schedule for Week of January 7 In "Molly Go Get 'Em"—Billie Rhodes in One-Reel Comedy

MARGARITA FISCHER, the happy-go-lucky and versatile comedienne, who specializes in tom-boy characterizations, has an unusual and exciting role in her latest production, "Molly Go Get 'Em," the Mutual-American star production scheduled for the week of January 7, made under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

In this comedy, which is built along original lines, Miss Fischer convinces a bogus count that she is the daughter of an Indian squaw, and the inheritor of a tendency to throw aboriginal fits on the least provocation.

The "count" has his pecuniary eye on the money-bags and other valuable assets of her father, but his plans are frustrated by the irrepressible Margaret, who catches him red-handed with the family jewels in his possession, and conducts him to her father at the point of a rather nervous pistol.

This is a role in which Miss Fischer is seen in her happiest moments, and the opportunities afforded her for perpetrating some eccentric and hilarious comedy are numerous. She displays a gorgeous array of the latest feminine apparel, from pajamas to party gowns. A realistic representation of the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," and an accidental plunge into a pool of water where she is compelled to keep submerged for an inhuman period in order to avoid detection, add zest to the action.

Supporting Miss Fischer is an admirable cast, including Margaret Allen, Emme Kluge, Jack Mower, Hal Clements, True Boardman and David Howard.

Billie Rhodes, in the Strand comedy, "A Peach and a Pill," which is released January 8, gives her sweetheart a pill to cure his headache, and believes she is an involuntary murderess when her mother tells her it was a bichloride of mercury tablet. Jack hasn't taken the dope, but is compelled to undergo strenuous treatment in order to disguise the fact that he has been philandering with another girl. Jack pays the price for his lapse of faithfulness, but Billie doesn't learn the truth. The action is fast and the complications amusing in this one-reel comedy.

The Mutual Weekly released January 7 maintains its high standard of efficiency and up-to-the-minute topics. The timeliness of the Weekly was emphasized in no uncertain manner by the recent "scoop" of the Halifax disaster scenes, engineered by James Barr O'Neill, Gaumont-Mutual camera man, who arrived in New York twenty-four hours ahead of any competitor with his film covering this holocaust.

"Dip" Robs Actress

While Belle Bennett, Triangle star, was riding in a Los Angeles street car last week, purse snatchers stole a highly-prized engagement ring and a birthday ring, given to her by her father.

More Hart-Fairbanks Re-Issues

Two Triangle features, in which William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks appear, will be released in January as re-issues. Judging from the receptions accorded other Triangle re-issues featuring these stars, it is expected the January releases will be received with even greater enthusiasm.

On January 6, "Between Men," Triangle re-issue of distinctive merit, starring Hart, will be released. On January 20, "Reggie Mixes In," one of Fairbanks' best pictures produced while he worked under Triangle, will be released. This picture, more than any other, served to introduce Fairbanks to audiences as a Triangle favorite and was responsible for the introduction of Doug's famous grin and dynamic energy.

These two Triangle features will open the 1918 re-issue campaign and one release a month of a Hart and Fairbanks' picture will follow. Their popularity as re-issues will be unquestionably increased, as both actors did some of the best work of their careers while acting under the Triangle banner.

Newspapers Use Page of Film Story

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is supplying for the first time the illustrated story of a feature production to daily papers all over the United States. The feature is "The Cinderella Man," starring Mae Marsh, with a story tied up closely to Christmas and the Christmas spirit. The offer to the editors was a full-page mat, in either 7 or 8-column width, containing, besides Edward Childs Carpenter's story, four scenes from the production and splendid art-work lay-outs and borders using holly and other Christmas-time decorations. More than two hundred editors filled in and returned a post card accepting the offer, and ran the page.

Norma Talmadge Begins New Play

Norma Talmadge has commenced work on her new photoplay, "By Right of Purchase," in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck. This will be the fourth of her Select Pictures, and its production follows that of "Ghosts of Yesterday," which Miss Talmadge completed recently.

Japs Entertain Director

At the completion of E. Mason Hopper's latest Triangle picture, "Her American Husband," the director and a number of friends were the guests of honor at a Japanese banquet, given by the Japanese actors included in the cast. The hosts were Tom Kurihara, Jack Abbe and Misso Seki.

Selig's "Brown of Harvard" Is Offered

Picture Based on Novel and Stage Production of Same Name Is Released January 10 on Perfection Program

NEGOTIATIONS have been completed whereby "Brown of Harvard," William N. Selig production, will be released January 10 on the Perfection Pictures program.

Trade showings of the subject are being run now at all branch offices of the George Kleine System, distributors.

The picture is an adaptation in six parts of the novel and stage drama, "Brown of Harvard," which proved tremendously popular. It presents a romance of student life at Cambridge.

Hazel "Honey" Daly and Tom Moore are featured as co-stars, the former in the role of Evelyn Ames, a typical daughter of a poor but proud New England family, and the latter as Tom Brown, Harvard student.

Miss Daly will be remembered as the Honey of "Skinner's Dress Suit" and subsequent Skinner pictures. One of Moore's most recent screen appearances was with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man."

Sydney Ainsworth, who took the part of Strickland, the accused murderer in the superfeature, "On Trial," heads the supporting cast of "Brown of Harvard" in the role of Colton, the unscrupulous gambler. Other members of the extensive cast include Warner Richmond, starring on the stage, Walter McGrail, Nancy Winston, Kempton Greene, Alice Gordon, Frank Joyner, star in the stage comedy, "Upstairs and Down," Robert Ellis, Lydia Dalzell, Walter Hiers, Arthur Hausman and Johnnie Walker.

Bluebirds Scheduled Until February 11

Managing Director Carl Laemmle has adjusted the Bluebird program until the week of February 11 by adding features that will employ as stars Dorothy Phillips, Franklyn Farnum, Violet Mersereau and Carmel Myers. This list of added features starts the second year of the Bluebird program with the release of "Broadway Love," starring Dorothy Phillips.

W. Carey Wonderly's story, first appearing in a popular magazine, furnished the basis of Ida May Park's production of "Broadway Love" in which Miss Phillips will reappear among Bluebirds after a considerable lapse of time, January 21. Franklyn Farnum's regular appearance will be made January 28 in "The Fighting Grin," a comedy of speedy action in which he has Edith Johnson as his leading lady. "Morgan's Raiders" will have Violet Mersereau as the star of the February 4 release in a melodrama reflecting incidents in the Civil War. "The Wife He Bought" brings Carmel Myers to star among Bluebirds for the third time February 11 when she appears in a screen version of a story by Larry Evans that appeared in a popular magazine under the title of "One Clear Call."

Switches Release Dates

"Stolen Honor," the Virginia Pearson picture which William Fox had announced as his Special Features release for December 30, will not be available for exhibitors on that date. The illness of Miss Pearson delayed work on the production, with the result that "For Liberty," a war picture featuring Gladys Brockwell, has been substituted for it. As the schedule now stands, "Stolen Honor" will be released January 6 and "For Liberty," December 30.

Twenty-Eight Stars in Mutual Service Flag

There are twenty-eight stars in the Mutual Film Corporation's service flag.

The younger members of the Mutual staff have rallied to the colors with enthusiasm and the names included in the roster are those of men resident in many states.

Roger M. McCullough, Ellis Merkley, Herman Cislak and John Dromey of the home offices in Chicago were among the first to join and some of the men whose names are included in the honor list are already in France or on their way.

Most of the Mutual's men have joined the infantry branch of the service, but there are some of them who have had previous military experience and who have preferred the artillery and cavalry.

100,000 See Picture in Two Days

Carl H. Pierce, representative for Paramount Pictures Corporation, arrived in Kansas City on Christmas morning to assist in the preparations for the showing of "The Seven Swans," Marguerite Clark's latest Paramount picture, at the Kansas City Convention Hall.

This showing, at which, it is estimated, 100,000 persons will view the picture in two days, is to be projected, as was "Snow White" last year, from four motion picture machines simultaneously.

To add to the inspiration of the occasion, the Bray Studios prepared several hundred feet of war pictures which will be released at this showing for the first time.

Secret Service Figures in Paralta Play

The great public interest at this time, owing to the war, in the United States Secret Service will find satisfaction in the first Paralta play, in which Bessie Barriscale is presented as a Paralta star. Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who?" shows the inner workings of the Secret Service during the period of the Civil war. It will be found that in general there is very little difference between the operations of the Secret Service then and now.

Issues Attractive Press Book

Paralta Exploits "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale In Her First Play Under This Banner—Helpful to Exhibitors

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., has issued an especially attractive press book for the exploitation of "Madam Who?" in which Bessie Barriscale will make her debut as a star in Paralta Plays in the immediate future.

The cover, which is done in three colors, bears the well known Paralta border, together with a most attractive picture of the star in process work.

Realizing the fact that practically all exhibitors throughout the country prefer to make up their own advertising copy, the stock advertisements have been omitted and in their place is a page devoted to catch lines to be used as an assistance in laying out display advertising copy.

On the next pages are cuts of the billing paper and stock cuts to be used in newspapers and programs. Then follows a series of press stories arranged for the requirements of the theaters showing the production. In preparing these pages the fact has been taken into consideration that most of the newspapers throughout the country have a regular schedule for the handling of motion picture copy. In practically all of the towns today the papers run an advance notice of a coming production, then an extensive Sunday notice which appears the Sunday before the attraction is booked, followed by a mid-week reader usually printed on Wednesday or Thursday. In some of the smaller towns where the run of a picture is but for one or two days, the papers devote a certain section of the Sunday edition to photoplay news, and then run each day a column announcing the attractions showing on that day.

On the final page of the book is printed music cues for the picture which insures the delivery of these cues to theaters, where heretofore exhibitors were compelled to rely on the shipping departments of the exchanges, who often omit the sending of cue sheets.

New Leading Woman

Harold Lockwood's leading woman in his forthcoming Metro wonder-play, "Broadway Bill," now in course of production under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, who is also the author of the story, will be Martha Mansfield, Metro announces.

Statuette Creator Admires Doll Pictures

Jessie McCutcheon Raleigh Compliments Howard S. Moss On His Success in Animating Dolls for Screen Plays

JESSIE McCUTCHEON RALEIGH, creator of the famous "Good Fairy" statuette has arranged a visit to the Essanay studios to watch Howard S. Moss at work upon forthcoming animated doll pictures.

"The idea of using dolls in motion pictures is most unique," wrote the sister of John T. McCutcheon, the famous cartoonist. "I was most interested in your creation and hope at some early time to meet you and hear the explanation of your achievement and ambitions along that line."

Mr. Moss visited the artist in her Loop studio and spent some time in chatting over his ambitions with her. She had seen his first big doll feature, "The Dream Doll" and expressed wonder over its uncanny presentation of dolls living and acting as though they were really human.

"The Dream Doll," an Essanay Perfection Picture, is playing to full houses all over, according to reports. Not only is it creating delight in the hearts of little children, but its novelty is appealing to grown-ups of all ages.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," little Mary McAlister's latest Essanay contribution to the exhibitor, released the day before Christmas, is finding a great field of admirers. Director W. S. Van Dyke has received the compliments of the trade on his artistic production, rich in heart throbs and smile evokers.

Gives Exhibitors Best Showing Possible

To insure the utmost brilliance and clearness in pictures shown to exhibitors in branch office projection rooms, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has installed Gold King screens in all their exchanges. The quality of picture shown to theater owners is, of course, of primary importance, and Goldwyn, realizing how inadequate the average small screen installed in exchanges is apt to be, has taken this method of insuring proper presentation of its pictures and consequent satisfaction upon the exhibitor's part.

Celebrates Anniversary

The Chicago Bluebird office will celebrate its second anniversary January 14. "Face Value," starring Mae Murray, will be the feature film for the week. "Jeanne Dore," with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, in January, 1916, began the Bluebird program. One hundred and four photoplays have been released by Bluebird since that time, one every week for two years.

George Walsh Fits Prodigal Role

William Fox Star Is Naturally Capable to Put Characteristics Into George Horace Lorimer Creation

WHEN William Fox decided to picturize "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, he knew he had in his employ a star and a director who could and would "put it over" right—in keeping with the high standard demanded by Mr. Fox. George Walsh is the star, Carl Harbaugh the director. This selection assures an unbeatable combination and the film production of "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," will undoubtedly justify Mr. Fox's expectations.

George Walsh, the Fox star, has many personal characteristics of just such a person as Mr. Lorimer pictures his Jack Spurlock—young, handsome, aggressive, optimistic, venturesome, athletic, puglistic if riled and calculated to excite femininity's interest. He has the spirit and dash for even so virile a person as Jack Spurlock and his ability to act before the camera has been proved. Were Mr. Lorimer himself to select the person to portray the hero of his story he undoubtedly would decide upon George Walsh.

Mr. Walsh grew enthusiastic over Mr. Lorimer's thrilling story and declared it provided him with the best vehicle he had ever had to show what he could do in motion pictures.

Night Battle Is Feature of "For Liberty"

Soldiers going over the top in a night battle, activities of the United States secret service, a girl's sacrifice for her country and an absorbing love story involving intense rivalry, the whole scene being laid in Germany, are emphasized by the producer as the outstanding features of the Fox Special Features release for December 30. The picture is entitled "For Liberty" and the star is Miss Gladys Brockwell.

Army Officers Praise "Over There"

"Over There," the big war drama being distributed by Select Pictures, has passed the final test of merit. After winning the approval of audiences north, south, east and west, it has captured the enthusiastic commendation of the army. In a letter to J. S. Woody, Select's northwest general manager, Major Seth W. Ellison, of Fort Flagler, Washington, emphatically places the stamp of his approval on the picture and declares it made a bigger appeal to the men at camp than any photo-drama so far shown there.

New Plays Selected for Taylor Holmes

George K. Spoor announces "A Pair of Sixes" and "The Rainbow Chaser" as future vehicles for Taylor Holmes, the famous comedian.

"A Pair of Sixes," was written by Edward Peple, author of "The Littlest Rebel," "The Prince Chap," "The Love Route" and other stage successes. Mr. Holmes will play the role of T. Boggs Johns, the vivacious patent pill manufacturer, affording him plenty of opportunity to register his inimitable mirth-making genius.

"The Rainbow Chaser" is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "Mr. Williams Takes a Chance," by Freeman Tilden.

Further announcements regarding these picturizations, including cast selections, will be made later.

Government Uses Hy Mayer Cartoon

George Creel, chairman of the committee on public information, has selected one of Hy Mayer's cartoons, originally appearing in the Universal Current Events, as fitting propaganda to go abroad to the nations allied with the United States in the world war. "The Eagle's Blood" is the title of the cartoon and nine copies have been sent to the Allies for exhibition on the screen as an officially authorized action in support of the war.

Vitagraph Flies Big Service Flag

Vitagraph's service flag, containing seventy-seven stars, was unfurled over the company's plant in Brooklyn last Thursday, by President Albert F. Smith. Gladys Leslie, the little star who recently joined Vitagraph, sang "The Star Spangled Banner," while scores of players and studio attaches joined in the chorus of the national anthem. As the big banner broke to the breeze the entire company, numbering more than two hundred men and women, stood at salute. Every branch of the service has claimed Vitagraphers since the United States entered the war, and the soldiers and sailors represent all branches of the big organization.

Laurence in Navy

Gordon Laurence, sales promotion manager of Vitagraph's distributing organization, is now in training for active service in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps.

Kane Is Promoted

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Studios of Los Angeles, California, was made sergeant-major of trains at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington.

Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture will be "Stella Maris." Work on the play has been started at the Hollywood studio. The picture is based on William J. Locke's famous story.

Effects Spoiled by Projection Speed

R. A. WALSH SAYS TOO MUCH HASTE RUINS WORK OF DIRECTOR

THE director may labor like a trojan; but the ultimate effect of his picture on the screen depends on the artistic integrity of the individual exhibitor. That is the belief of R. A. Walsh, the distinguished American director who has used his short leisure before beginning work on his first Goldwyn production, to make a tour, incognito, of some of New York's moving picture theaters.

Like Limited Train

"Frankly," says Mr. Walsh, "I have been very much disturbed over the way I have seen many of my own pictures run. The Twentieth Century Express is a horse-car beside some of the speed I have seen careless operators or short-sighted house managers put into their films.

"In my opinion, such haste is nothing short of criminal. It is unfair to the director who has timed his action as closely as possible to the right tempo. And any manager who thinks he will profit by crowding in an extra show by such methods, is making a big mistake. He is ruining good entertainment, and when he ruins good entertainment, he is making disappointed audiences, audiences that won't come back.

"I have been just as much impressed by another mistake in projection. It isn't a case of mistaken avarice. It's really well meaning. But it's stupid and criminal just the same. This is the trick which some operators have of hitting up the speed of the machine when big, swift, dramatic scenes flash on the screen. Their intention is right. They want to make a distinction in tempo between the scenes of quieter action and those with punch in them. In the early days, it was often necessary for the operator to do this, because the director had failed to provide the proper tempo himself.

Watch Tempo Carefully

"My own practice is to watch this matter of tempo very closely indeed. I take the bulk of my straight scenes at 13 or 14 exposures a second. When it is swift comedy or big melodramatic action—a chase or a fight or a raid, for instance—my camera man slows down to 11 or 12. And then, of course, when the complete film is run through the projector at a normal, constant speed of about 14, all the tempo runs true, the quiet scenes at a quiet pace, the melodrama with a rush.

Director Should Do Timing

"But all this is—and should be—the director's business, not the operator's. Some times it takes some very difficult manipulation of lights to keep the exposures right; but there is no difficulty here that a competent director cannot solve.

"The maker of a film is at the absolute mercy of the man who shows it. And perhaps he is to be congratulated that so many managers and operators do appreciate their responsibilities."

"Women Write Best Scenarios"

President of Artcraft Declares Woman Is Taking More Important Part in World Work Every Day

"THE granting of suffrage to the women of New York in the recent election is in keeping with the progress of women in all branches," says Walter E. Greene, the motion picture magnate, who says that women writers are usurping the scenario field and are excelling their male competitors. Mr. Greene is president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

"I have never realized how important a part the women of the country were taking in the national affairs until the recent election set me thinking, and I was amazed to find to what extent we have been dependent upon the brains of women in conducting our vast business.

"The selection of vehicles for our stars is of paramount importance, and a subject that is given the utmost consideration. On each play depends the success or failure of a production running into six figures. The stars know that their continued popularity—and their big salaries—are dependent upon the pleasure of the public, and they and their directors analyze and dissect the material offered by playwrights. It is a fiery crucible in which these scenarios are tested, and but few survive the ordeal. And we have found that our best stories are coming from women. In the great majority of cases a woman has written the original play or book, or the work has been adapted to the screen by a woman.

"The stupendous Geraldine Farrar spectacle, 'The Woman God Forgot,' is from the pen of Jeanie Macpherson, who has also written the scenario of 'The Devil Stone,' Miss Farrar's next photoplay. Miss Macpherson was the author of two of Mary Pickford's big successes, 'A Romance of the Redwoods' and the sensational patriotic subject, 'The Little American.'

"Miss Anita Loos has been writing scenarios for Douglas Fairbanks for some time, being responsible for such laugh producers as 'In Again—Out Again' and 'Wild and Woolly.' Douglas Fairbanks' latest picture, 'Reaching for the Moon,' is also one of her contributions.

"Miss Frances Marion was the author of many scenarios, and furnished the basis of a number of Mary Pickford's successes. She made the screen adaptations for 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm' and 'The Little Princess.' These last two were from books written by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Frances Hodgson Burnett, respectively.

"Elsie Ferguson's latest film, 'The Rise of Jennie Cushing,' is taken from the book by Mary S. Watts. 'The Poor Little Rich Girl,' in which Mary Pickford appeared, was dramatized from the novel by Eleanor Gates.

"This is a remarkable showing, as we are not swayed by sentiment in the selection of material, but are guided entirely by the merit of the offering. We are in the market for the best at any price, as we must necessarily maintain a high standard, and have the entire dramatic and literary field from which to make our selections.

"We find that women are conscientious in their work and possess the proper imaginations, and their themes are based on clean subjects."

Officers Help Film Big Patriotic Play

Wide-spread interest attaches to the making of "For the Freedom of the World," Ira M. Lowry's production now showing throughout the country under Goldwyn auspices.

This film is a patriotic spectacle produced primarily with the idea of awakening Americans to the situation caused by the great war and bringing home to them the facts which already have been realized by the public in the countries of all our Allies.

The story of the film was written by Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, an officer of the American Legion of the Canadian Army. After arrangements had been made to produce the film on a tremendous scale, the producers obtained the co-operation of the Canadian Government in making it.

Major General Logie, commandant of the largest training camp in the world—Camp Borden, Ontario—assigned several officers to help in making the film, and appeared himself, with his entire staff, in the picture.

Major Healey, L. A. A. & G. M. G., also gave his active aid, as did Brigadier General Fages, Lieut.-Colonel B. J. McCormick, and Lieut.-Colonel William McBain. Colonel McCormick was the commander of the 213th Overseas Battalion, American Legion, and was in charge of the entire American Legion movement Colonel McBain was the officer who built the great camp Valcartier, Quebec.

Bushman-Bayne Comedy Announced

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro's popular co-stars, have begun work at the Metro studio on a brilliant comedy melodrama called "The Woolworth Diamonds." The story is from the pen of Hugh Weir. It has been adapted for the use of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne by Albert Shelby Le Vino, and provides roles of the keenest interest for both stars.

Mr. Bushman's part is that of a young multi-millionaire, Gerry Simpson, and Miss Bayne plays Virginia Blake, a girl reporter.

C. E. Hite, formerly with the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has joined the Jewel Productions, Inc., forces as manager of the Cincinnati office.

Film Editor's Work Is Important

Margaret Mayo Emphasizes Value of Work Done in Cutting Room After Filming of Play Is Finished

MARGARET MAYO, playwright and photoplay specialist, member of Selwyn & Co., Broadway producers, and editorial director of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has found at least one parallel between the divergent arts of stage and screen. She found it in Goldwyn's Fort Lee studio, and she has given a year of active work to its understanding.

"A photoplay is no more produced till it goes into the cutting room to be edited, than a play before it goes into rehearsal," says Miss Mayo. "A photoplay is as truly made or unmade in the process of cutting as any Broadway production in the rehearsal period.

"Scenario writers, actors, directors, may do their utmost—and a very splendid utmost at that—but the success of their work is never assured until the cutter or editor is through. He may ruin a splendid idea, a fine continuity, superb acting. He may take mediocre material and sublimate it. His is the ultimate work in the motion picture industry. And that is why, I suppose, I was immensely attracted by this side of studio work from the beginning and have given so much time to it.

"It was very interesting to come to the cutting room from a long experience in the rehearsing and producing of plays. I feel the parallel very keenly. It is the stage director who makes or mars a play. Like a moving picture, a play must have its inherent good qualities; but the man who shapes its final, flesh-and-blood form and makes it live upon the stage, holds its ultimate effect and its success in the hollow of his hand. It is just as true of the film editor.

"Quite apart from matters of continuity, which may or may not be properly or perfectly adjusted in the mind's eye of the writer, the film editor controls that vitally important factor of screen art—tempo. Not only may he find that a certain arrangement of episodes visualizes much better in a way that the continuity writer could not forsee. Further than that he may decrease or increase speed of this or that scene, this or that series of scenes, in fact the whole story, by the manner in which he cuts and arranges scenes.

"The cutter's work—limited as it is physically—is to my mind the most fascinating in the studio. It makes me glad to give up the drama for the screen."

Taylor Joins Select

C. W. Taylor recently became manager of Select's branch exchange at Des Moines. More than a dozen years ago he was connected with the Amusement Supply Company in Chicago. Later he was with the Theater Film Service Company in the same city which was founded by Hutchinson and Aiken. He went with the Mutual Film Corporation in 1915 as manager of their Omaha branch. He is thoroughly conversant with conditions throughout Nebraska and Iowa territory.

New Title Plan Is Successful

ONE of the striking features of Bessie Barriscale's first Paralta Play, "Madam Who," which will be released the middle of December is the manner in which the titling of the production has been handled. For a long time, producers of motion pictures have been endeavoring to get away from the old style of titles which, in many cases caused a breach in holding the interest to the action of the story.

Illustrated titles were found to be a great improvement over those which were displayed in cold type, but Paralta Plays announce that they have taken another great step forward in the development of an artistic effect that holds the interest at the same time giving the audience the message that can be interpreted only through reading titles.

The new titles, which will be used for the first time in the production of "Madam Who" are animated scenes built in such a manner that the wording appears to stand out in mid air. In one instance where the title is descriptive of a battle which is supposed to be raging, a shell bursts, obliterating the entire title and showing, just for an instant, a field of battle with the cannon smoking. This is the only element of battle that is really shown in the play, as the story is not that of the trench and conflict but of the secret service that is the great unseen power that guides the destiny of the armies.

The other titles are all worked in effectively, and do not break into the thread of the story. Rather they appear as a part of the action.

This new style of titles marks another important step in the advancement of the photoplay art, a step which is bound to have a marked effect in future productions.

Reviewer Is Enthusiastic Over "Polly"

The following review appeared in a Bristol, Conn., newspaper after the showing there of "Polly of the Circus."

"O-O! Skinnay! Hello, Jimmie. Say, Skinnay, did you go to the Princess last night to see 'Polly of the Circus'? You just bet I did, and I had a hard time trying to get a seat. But, say, Jim, when I did get in at last I saw the dandiest show that ever came here. Gee, it was a crackerjack; better'n any three-ring circus I ever hooked into. Why, there was everything in it to make you forget you went without your supper. I just sat dere for two whole hours an' it didn't seem five minits, till it was all over. And say, dat Mae Marsh is a peach, and Oh how she can ride a horse. An' you ought to see the big race on the fair grounds an' the elephants squirting water on the coon. I just laughed until me sides were sore and I clapped my hands until dey was all blisters. An' the whole thing was like Barnum & Bailey's or de Ringlings. I wish circuses like dat one would come to Bristol in de summer, an' pa says he never saw anything like it in the pictures before, an' I'm goin' again tonight. Ain't you going? Sure, Skinnay. I got to see dat show, cause everyone says its great. Mr. Healy, de manager, told us kids dat its de best ting de Princess ever showed, an' I guess what he says goes wid me, for he's gettin' all de good pictchures day show in Noo York and in Hartford. Why just tink, de 'Fightin' Trail' opened in de biggest cities only last week an' he's got it already. Just like 'Polly of the Circus,' only one week out of Noo York. He's puttin' Bristol on the movin' picture map aw right."

Novel Illustrator's Day May Be Over

Film Versions of Popular Fiction Works Likely to Replace Artist's Work—"Raffles" an Example

THAT the day of the illustrator for popular novels has passed is the prediction made by several men prominent in the motion picture industry. The artists will be supplanted, they declare, by the films.

Releases of picturized versions of the best sellers will be put out coincident with the appearance of the latest novels and. their plan further has it, a basis of understanding between the picture producers and the book publishers will be reached to make this possible. In this way, the film men claim, the publishers will be able to dispense entirely with the artists' illustrations in their volumes, stills from the motion picture of the book being utilized instead.

At the same time an extensive advertising campaign will bring before the eyes of the public the fact that films of the story they are reading may be seen at the leading motion picture theaters of the country.

The first effort of this sort has already been made, in fact, it has developed, in the release of the film version of "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," in which John Barrymore is starring. The picture is being sold through Hiller & Wilk and it is presented by the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc.

Few characters in literature are as familiar to the general reading public as "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman" and few there are that have even approached the popularity of the story. The book is to be found on the shelves of virtually every public library in this country and in England and the majority of the private homes have also included "Raffles" among their books.

It was in view of these facts that the Weber organization selected "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman" as the medium for the first experiment along the lines of eliminating artists' illustrations from popular novels.

Following the release of the film it is planned to get out a limited edition of the book with the illustrations taken from stills in which John Barrymore and his supporting company will be seen. This novel edition will be distributed around among the men of the motion picture industry and of the book publishing business as a practical example of what may be expected when the two branches of business get together in marketing their wares.

"The Planter" Draws In Many Cities

The box office value of the star has been proven effectively in the success which has been attained by "The Planter," the seven-reel Mutual special, which was released November 14 and has been scoring a spectacular hit in a score of big American cities.

"The Planter" presents an unusual combination of stars. The star in the picture is Tyrone Power, celebrated American actor. The picture is built on the novel "The Planter," from the pen of Herman Whitaker, a famous novelist. From the box office as well as an artistic angle, actor, story and author are effective drawing cards.

In many places the exhibitor has secured the co-operation of book stores in exploiting the production. "The Planter" has been one of the best sellers of American fiction and the issuance of the picture brought forth a revival of popular interest in the book. Book dealers were quick to give impetus to the new demand for the Whitaker book and exhibitors have found them not only willing but anxious to cooperate in the advertising campaign. The lobby photos and other advertising material furnished the exhibitor were found to be effective in newspaper advertising and window displays by the local book stores.

There is a latent interest among the American people in the conditions among the lower classes of Mexico which has been awakened by their vivid presentation in motion pictures. Before the outbreak of international conflict, the conditions under which the Mexican peon lived was one of the subjects of wide discussion in this country and "The Planter" has done much to recall the topic.

There is too, despite the fact that public attention is focused on the European battlefields, an intense interest in Central America. It is generally accepted by students of economics that South and Central America presents a wonderful commercial opportunity to the United States and this fact has been followed by a study of the Latin American countries by study clubs and social workers. "The Planter" has been pronounced the most vivid portrayal yet presented of the actual conditions under which the people of Central America live.

Present Petrova Photos to Exhibitors

Through the courtesy of Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company, the various prominent showmen comprising the membership of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit were presented with a unique "scene album" covering the initial Petrova release, "Daughter of Destiny." The Petrova Picture Company executive conceived the idea of a de luxe edition of still pictures depicting scenes from "Daughter of Destiny" as a memento of Madame Petrova's inauguration as the star of her own company. After the pictorial album had been executed, the idea proved so attractive that Mr. Collins decided to present each member of the circuit who will distribute the Petrova pictures throughout the country with an especially autographed edition.

The unique souvenir is bound in Morocco leather. Stamped on the outside cover with letters of gold is the name of the recipient of the album. The fly-leaf contains an autographed portrait of Madame Petrova herself done in colors, while the rest of the book is devoted to the various scenes from "Daughter of Destiny."

European Shipments Are Delayed

Film shipments from Europe, and particularly from Italy, are in a state closely resembling the well-known chaos. Four Italian steamers have arrived at an Atlantic port within the last three months, all with pictures which cannot be delivered because of the lack of manifests or other identification papers.

Ince Picture Favored by Exhibitors

Reports received by Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, indicate a spirited demand among exhibitors the country over for the concern's initial release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," produced by Thomas H. Ince as a successor to his first great spectacle, "Civilization."

New Play Announced for June Caprice

An unusually large cast containing the names of numerous favorites of motion picture patrons is announced by William Fox for the Fox Special Feature to be released December 16. The title of the production is "Unknown 274," the star is June Caprice and the supporting company, comprising ten actors and actresses, includes Kittens Reichert, Florence Ashbrook, Tom Burrough, Inez Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill, Jean Armour, William Burns and Alexander Shannon. Another important member of the company is "Lady," the dog.

The story is that of a girl who was placed in an orphanage by her mother when the latter's husband was arrested by trickery in this country for failure to perform army service in his native land. The girl is discovered in the orphanage by a scheming couple who adopt her in the hope of being able to marry her to some rich man. The girl meets a rich young man, just as was planned, but he does not happen to be the sort of man the schemers had hoped to find. Result: He rescues the girl from her bad environment. About the same time the girl finds her father as a result of playing an old violin which had been left with her when she was placed in the orphanage. The theme of the story is stated to be "from poverty to millionaire's wife."

Ethel Barrymore Faces Active Season

Ethel Barrymore, will have the cooperation of Metro Pictures Corporation and the Charles Frohman estate in making out the program of her activities for the year. Miss Barrymore is now completing her latest series of Metro productions with a screen version of the Kellett Chambers comedy, "An American Widow," and at an early date will begin her season of new plays and dramatic revivals of the speaking stage—in accordance with the plan arranged for in advance by the late Charles Frohman. One of the most important features of this program will be Miss Barrymore's creation of the leading role in the new version of "Camille," adapted by Edward N. Sheldon, not from the old stage production, but from the book itself by Dumas.

The star's screen career will not be forgotten during the development of this program, for in her leisure hours, during the daytime at her home in Mamaroneck, Miss Barrymore will read manuscripts of new screen productions, and pass on their merits, deciding upon the equally interesting program of feature motion pictures to follow. One activity is thus made the relaxation from one and the preparation for the next. Miss Barrymore's list of screen appearances for the coming year will include stories by celebrated American novelists and scenario writers.

Sunshine Comedies Are Welcomed by Exhibitors

Exhibitors have crowded the Fox exchanges throughout the United States during the last week viewing the new Sunshine Comedies, made by Henry Lehrman, and offered by William Fox.

The exchanges only received prints of the comedies last week and already a large number of exhibitors have contracted for the new comedies.

Works Twenty-four Hours Without Rest

Director Robert Leonard claims that Mae Murray, star of Bluebird photoplays, recently made a new record for continuous rehearsal and filming in producing theater scenes for "The Eternal Columbine," the feature in which she will largely engage in displaying her talents as a dancer. To make these scenes a Los Angeles theater was secured, and there was but one week open in which to rehearse and film the requisite scenes.

Miss Murray and her company had gone into their work against time, believing that there would be a day or so to spare, but rehearsals of a large ballet consumed more time and patience than had been figured on. There were unforeseen delays, retakes and more rehearsals until Friday, when it was seen that calculations do not always work out on schedule.

Saturday ended Bluebird's temporary possession of the theater and stage. A road attraction was due to arrive for Sunday matinee on an early morning train. On the last day at his disposal Director Leonard started activities at seven in the morning with the intention of finishing all the theater scenes before they called a halt. Straight through the day they worked without intermission except a few minutes' pause for the meals, which were brought in to them. They worked right on through the night and until seven o'clock Sunday morning.

Booker Is Promoted

Leo Udry, for some time head booker in the Cincinnati Famous Players branch, has been chosen assistant to L. W. Foster, sales manager of the Famous Players Film Service. Mr. Udry was formerly connected with General Film Co. He is well known to virtually every exhibitor in the Cincinnati territory.

French Story Is Adapted for Miss Young

Clara Kimball Young has just secured the rights for the screen to the celebrated 'La Fille Sauvage," by Francois Curel. This work, which is variously known as "The Barbarian Woman," and "The Daughter of the Wild," in its English translation, will present to the versatile Miss Young a wonderful opportunity for characterization in a role in which the primal passions and appetites are ever contending for mastery of a soul endowed with the love of beauty. While in the original French, "La Fille Sauvage" proves what might be considered somewhat strong meat for Anglo-Saxon taste, the screen adaptation made for use by Miss Young will contain nothing offensive, although every effort is being made to retain the savor and virility of the native French.

An elaborate production of this work will be made by Miss Young in the West Indies—probably in Jamaica—during the winter months. She will be directed in this play, as in all others in the future, by Emile Chautard, who has signed a long term contract as Miss Young's director. Jacques Bizuel will again do the camera work.

In the meantime, Miss Young and Mr. Chautard are engaged in bringing her production of "The Marionettes" into shape. It is expected that another week will complete the screening of this play.

Sells Seats Fifteen Weeks in Advance

The Palace Theater, in the heart of the shopping district in Los Angeles, is handling with great success the season ticket idea on "Who Is 'Number One'?", the Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford. The Palace is advertising the Anna Katharine Green serial heavily with the slogan, "Seats now selling fifteen weeks in advance." A gratifying sale of season tickets has resulted.

Film Play Offers Psychology Study

"The Auction Block" from Rex Beach's Story Presents Stirring Narrative with Undercurrent of Crookedness

IN Rex Beach's great picture, "The Auction Block," released throughout North America December 2 as a Goldwyn subject, students of the psychology of crookedness ought to find living illustrations of examples customarily expatiated upon in dry text by authorities on the subject.

The gentle art of the "frame-up" and the "double-cross" as practiced in some strata of society is exemplified in realistic action in the course of the story, which has been described as embodying an undercurrent narrative of "blackmail" piped with "thuggery."

Lilas Lynn is a beautiful young adventuress with what might be said to be a legitimate purpose—revenging the death of her father, whose life had been sacrificed years before to the greed of Jarvis Hammon, once the superintendent of a steel mill but now a millionaire man-about-town. Lilas ingratiates herself in Hammon's affections for the sole purpose of ruining him in the eyes of the world.

Working with a band of blackmailers, Lilas entices Hammon to a lonely country roadhouse, where, with the aid of a flashlight powder previously "planted" by the crooks, the millionaire is photographed with the adventuress in his arms.

Eventually this band of crooks turns upon Lilas in the hope of profiting by revealing her hand in the affair. This move involves innocent persons and eventually results in the intervention of a man whose power over a crooked police inspector enables him to demand that the gambling house conducted by the leader of the gang be raided.

Here another "frame-up" is enacted, this time by the police. Working on instructions, the inspector "plants" a revolver in the pocket of young Jimmy Knight, wayward brother of Lorelei Knight, heroine of the story, and he is hustled off to court to face a long term in prison.

These incidents are but color for a story delightful in its essentials—a story of true love born of trials and temptation.

I Am the Motion Picture!

BY JULIAN JOHNSON

I AM the Motion Picture.

My feet flounder in the clay, but my head is above the clouds, and my eyes are the stars.

I am the friend of the humble, the servant of the scholar, the jester of the wise. I am youth to the aged, a gateway to the imprisoned; adventure to the indolent, love to the lonely, forgetfulness to the sorrowing, calm to the impatient, rest to the weary.

I am the commonest of common things. I am art for the artless, buffoonery for buffoons, braggadocia for cowards. I revel in backstairs romance. I am the coarse snuggling friend of kitchen mechanics, perfumed and unbathed. My delight is a silly hero of clammy virtue and patent-leather hair. I teach cheap yawps that the fade-out hug solves every problem in the universe. I am a cog-wheeled idol whose temples are redolent of chewing gum and poisonous candy. My services demand music; I have none of my own; I steal everyone's music; and blend it in a horrible mess. I am the matinee idol of slatternly wives, the dime novel of defective boys. I am opium to ambition. I am the drama's illegitimate child. I am literature's idiot brother.

I am the profoundest possibility of modern times. I am one day old—and on my brow the sages have already found the seal of immortality. My eyes are so strong that I see over the rim of the world. I am the only creature who has made Time turn his hourglass over. I am the imagination of the surgeon and the chart of the doctor. I am the uncomparable salesman and the ultimate newspaper. I am magic ink for the shy poet. I am breathing beauty and living virility for the romances who has known only the pale puppets of words. I am a flash of lightning above the gloomy forest of history. I am the awful mask of war. I am the alchemist of invention. I am the magic carpet and Aladdin's lamp. I am the supreme teacher of the child.

My future is bounded by infinity.

My feet flounder in the clay, but my eyes are with the stars.

I am The Motion Picture.

Lockwood Cast Is Notable

A superb cast has been engaged to support Harold Lockwood in his forthcoming Metro production, "The Avenging Trail," an adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo of Henry Owen's novel of the North woods, "Gaston Olaf," now in course of being screened under the direction of Francis Ford.

Mr. Lockwood plays "Gaston Olaf" and in this he has the most powerful role of his eight years before the camera. Gaston Olaf is a man of the woods, a fine specimen of physical manhood, with a well developed sense of justice and of undaunted courage when pitted against wrong-doers. The part offers wide scope for the star.

Mr. Lockwood's leading woman is Sally Crute, whose six years' experience both as leading woman with Lubin, Edison and other companies and as a player prominent in Metro wonderplays, notably "A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro and "Blue Jeans" with Viola Dana, have made her name familiar with picture followers throughout the country. Miss Crute plays Rose Havens.

U. City Gives Its Tithe

Responding to Uncle Sam's call for men to serve as parts of his war machine, nearly ten per cent of the men of Universal City are now either in cantonment, en route to strife-ridden Europe or actually on the firing line.

Jane Cowl Gets Military Atmosphere

Jane Cowl, since the making of her first Goldwyn starring vehicle, "The Spreading Dawn," lately gave a performance for Uncle Sam's student officers at Plattsburg, N. Y. While there she found an opportunity to get some special scenes of an authentic military character that would fit in with splendid effect in "The Spreading Dawn."

She telephoned from Plattsburg to the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J., to have a cameraman sent at once. When that functionary arrived, he found that Miss Cowl had everything in readiness for the taking of the pictures. The results were splendid, and were incorporated in the many prints that are now doing service over the country through the Goldwyn distributing offices.

Adams Novel Is Blue Ribbon Feature

Another famous work of fiction is brought to the screen by Greater Vitagraph in the Blue Ribbon feature, "When Men Are Tempted," which is announced by President Albert E. Smith for the week of December 24. This play, which is an adaptation from the widely read novel, "John Burt," by Frederick Upham Adams, has Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman for its featured players. It was produced under the direction of William Wolbert, who also directed "Aladdin from Broadway," "The Flaming Omen" and other fine Vitagraph features.

Camera Misses Accident Thrill

A tiny motor speed boat, churned in the wake of a big, fast steamer, sucked into the propellor whirl, all but swamped, and the lives of its occupants endangered, was not in the script of Henry B. Walthall's second Paralta play, "Humdrum Brown" which is now in the making. Nor could it be filmed at the time, unfortunately.

Scenes were to be taken on the fast steamer Hermosa, off the coast of southern California, and of motor boats pursuing the steamer. Director Ingram, his cameramen and Mr. Walthall occupied the boat which was drawn into the wake of the ship they had been filming. They were whirled, buffeted and threatened with swamping. All worked at bailing the boat and threw themselves to the high side to keep from overturning.

Ad Campaign Backs Spoor Film

Backed by a stupendous advertising campaign, including the bill-boarding of the entire country, George K. Spoor will offer, early in Januarv, Taylor Holmes in "Uneasy Money" as the first of a series of ultra features to be released at various times regardless of any fixed program.

The story is from the pen of P. G. Wodehouse and ran as a serial in The Saturday Evening Post. It gives Mr. Holmes unusual opportunities and undoubtedly is his best screen production.

In the cast with Mr. Holmes are: Miss Virginia Valli, Arthur Bates, Virginia Bowker, Fred Tiden, Lillian Drew, James F. Fulton and Rod LaRocque.

Simmons Is Given New Job

Appointed General Manager of State Rights Distributors, Inc., After Many Years Experience in Exchanges

C. M. SIMMONS has been appointed general manager of the State Rights Distributors, Inc., with offices at 418 Longacre building. This organization, headed by Sol L. Lesser, its aim being to unite the purchasing power of the country, was finally completed and launched ready for action at its recent meeting in New York.

In appointing Mr. Simmons general manager, the organization feels that its interests will be safeguarded, due to his knowledge of conditions generally and his familiarity with the wants of the public and the needs of the different members of the association.

Since 1907, Mell Simmons, as he is generally known to thousands of exhibitors throughout the country, has managed theaters and film exchanges from coast to coast. He has had valuable experience as sales manager for the General Film Company, and the Mutual Film Corporation, and has opened film exchanges for the Eclectic, Triangle, Artcraft and Goldwyn Film Corporations.

Decline of Star System at Hand

George Backer Believes Salaries of High Priced Men and Women of the Screen Cannot Continue at Present Figures

IF far-sighted opinion is accurate, motion picture stars are approaching days when their lustre may be dimmed. For several years, now, each successive season has witnessed larger salary demands by men and women of the screen who are regarded as box-office assets. But as increase has followed increase, these salaries have at length crept up to a figure which producers, distributors, and exhibitors declare cannot be continued with financial safety.

George Backer, president of Foursquare Pictures, and one of the established business men of New York, expressing his views in the matter, admitted that the star system has faults that threaten its existence.

"The trouble," said Mr. Backer, "has originated through the greediness of players who failed to estimate their popularity at its accurate value. They have at the outset misinterpreted the meaning of the word 'star.' Instead, as they believe, of representing ability as well as drawing-power with the public, it has been held by them to stand for drawing-power alone—a quality most of them have grossly exaggerated.

"Now if we scrutinize the subject impartially, we will discover that there are two classes of so-called star: those in fact, and those in name only. The former are artists; the latter, without exception, are impostors.

"The time is near when the public will not designate as 'star' any actor or actress who is not finished in histrionic art. Because motion pictures are comparatively new with the people of this country, they have come to regard the player frequently seen as an old acquaintance. In the absence of a large number of truly capable players, these actors and actresses of medicore abilities have gone on appearing in picture after picture, until they acquired a certain vogue which they—and producers, distributors and exhibitors also—mistook for stardom.

"Within the past year a change has been gradually taking place. The public has grown weary of seeing favorites, for the reason that their lack of genuine dramatic capacity has at last been discovered. Offered in roles for which they obviously were unsuited, and often in photoplays that were not strong in story and production, these 'stars' have shot downward with a vengeance. Naturally, the public has wearied of seeing them.

"During this same period of time, the producers who have suffered insistent demands for still more outrageous salaries have made a discovery. This has been that even the admitted half dozen stars who possess a box-office value (and with it, some acting capacity) are receiving salaries that financially cripple the organizations paying them.

"The experienced man of business does not need to be reminded that when he exceeds the limit of monetary safety in overhead his stability is endangered. That time has now arrived with respect to stars who each received several thousands of dollars weekly—which, in practically every instance, is from two to four times what they are really worth.

"It needs no prophet to predict that the days of extravagance in this respect are numbered. Even the producers who foolishly bid against each other for the services of a reputed star see the handwriting on the wall. And quite a number of these screen luminaries will wake up some fine morning, when their contracts have expired, to find that the next ones they sign will have to be for amounts greatly below what they now unjustly get.

"In a few words, the 'stars,' by their unreasonableness, have killed the geese that have been laying their golden eggs. Very soon, I believe, this situation will be readjusted upon an equitable basis. For the star, to appear as such, must have in addition to an absolutely determined box-office value, exceptional dramatic qualifications and be presented in a suitable role in a strong production, surrounded by relatively efficient players in all other characters.

"Then we have the star in his, or her, adequate setting. When this is accomplished, and the compensation is neither too large nor too small, the conditions are those which make for satisfaction artistically; for the commercial success of producer, distributor and exhibitor; and for the public which is being catered to."

Entire Play Rewritten

The necessity for rewriting a completed photoplay production after it has been listed as finished by director, cutters and title editor, seldom arises, but such is true of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," now being exploited by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, the revision in this case being carried out by Monte M. Katterjohn, the Paralta scenarioist.

Plan New Activities for New Year

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, moving spirits of General Enterprises, Inc., who have recently completed a successful sales campaign in the interests of "The Warrior," announced this week that their plans for the new year embraced continued activity in the field of state rights, together with a widening of their present arrangements to embrace the production of special features during the year 1918. Herbert Lubin, who successfully negotiated the contract between Madame Olga Petrova and Superpictures, Inc., has consummated arrangements whereby William Christy Cabanne, author and producer of "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," will head Cabanne Superpictures, Inc., in the production plans of which Mr. Lubin will play a prominent part. The formation of this new organization is now in course of process and work of the first production will start early in January of the new year.

The next big film spectacle to be exploited by General Enterprises, Inc., as a successor to "The Warrior" will be seven reels in length and will offer as a star one of the leading female screen players at present high in public favor.

In addition to these plans, the McClure production, "Mother," is at present being successfully exploited by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin and they have recently acquired the rights to "The Liar," a six-part society melodrama, starring the former Universal favorite, Jane Gail, and directed by William Haddock.

The present offices of General Enterprises, Inc., at 1476 Broadway, will be enlarged to care for the increased scope of the firm's activities during the coming year and it is planned to install a complete projection suite, wherein the various territorial purchasers may view the state right offerings of the company with perfect convenience.

Writer Praises Maker of "The Belgian"

Although Sidney Olcott, who produced and financed "The Belgian," announced as the second U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation release, did not devote a great deal of footage to the scenes wherein he depicts the invasion of Belgium by the Huns, persons who have lived through the devastation of the martyred nation, declare that he has succeeded in converting this historic event to the screen with striking realism.

Frederic Hume Paulton, a magazine writer well known in England and Ireland, who followed in the wake of the Teutons as they swept through the little kingdom, has written a letter to Mr. Olcott congratulating him upon his achievement and expressing the hope that he undertake at some future time to produce a picture in which the real tragedy of the kingdom of grief may be visualized.

Tiny Zeppelins Are Used in Lobby

Fifty miniature Zeppelins, constructed under the supervision of a mechanic who formerly was employed in the big dirigible works at Essen, Germany, and who left the factory at the outbreak of the war because he was an Englishman, are being employed to advertise the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," released recently by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

One of the models was used by Frank Hall to advertise "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" at his U. S. Theater in Hoboken, N. J., and was a very helpful accessory. An attache of the house entertained the crowds that thronged the lobby before and after the shows during the engagement by explaining the workings of the aircraft with which Germany is waging ruthless warfare in Europe.

Madame Petrova in Her Second Picture

The vehicle in which Madame Olga Petrova will make her second appearance as the star of her own picture organization, the title for which is to be announced next week, offers the Polish artiste in a role distinctly different from any in which she has yet been seen. Brimful of human interest and poignant heart appeal, the story presents Madame Petrova in the role of a young mother, torn between the call of professional duty toward humanity in general and the urge of "mother-love" for her small son. A scene from Madame Petrova's second picture is shown on the frontispiece of this issue.

Board O. K.'s "Daughter of Destiny"

"Daughter of Destiny," the first of the eight pictures in which Madame Olga Petrova will star during the new year, has been passed in toto by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Brenon Plays Popular in Canada

Chandos Brenon, Canadian representative of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, reports the successful showing of three features made by Herbert Brenon now playing in Montreal at the foremost moving picture theaters in the city. The three Brenon features playing in Montreal at the present time are "The Lone Wolf" at the New Grand, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Regent, and "The Daughter of the Gods," which was made two years ago under the Fox banner, at the St. Denis.

Halifax Theaters Stunned By Disaster

Some of the Picture Houses Must Be Rebuilt and Others Will Be Repaired at Enormous Expense

MONTREAL exchange managers have received word from Halifax that a number of moving picture houses of the stricken city may not be re-opened for many months. The King Edward Theater will be closed until the summer, according to a reported decision of the management, while the Empire Theater building has been condemned because of the serious damage sustained. This will have to be rebuilt. The Casino Theater was damaged to the extent of $3,000. The Imperial, Strand, Orpheum and Academy may be opened late in January as they were only slightly damaged, yet it is considered bad policy to attempt to present any kind of pictures until the local situation clears up. The Strand and Academy were used as shelters for the homeless for several weeks. Steps have been taken in Montreal to raise a fund for the moving picture men of Halifax who will undoubtedly be jobless and penniless for some time to come.

Puts Program Value Up to Public

The Christmas week program of the Manring and Brownie theaters of Middlesboro, Ky., was an artistic eight-page booklet printed in red and green with holiday embellishments on every page that added to its attractiveness. Under the heading, "Big Things for the Holidays," the management of the two theaters announced:

"Naturally enough, everyone expects 'big things' at their local picture shows during holiday week. Months ago we got busy on this very matter, for we knew we would be disappointed if we waited until the last minute to book our Christmas offerings. The result is: A program that cannot be equaled, at any price, throughout the entire week. Our only fear is that we are spending too much money for the size of the town, but we are depending upon absolute capacity business to pull us out. One glance at our program will convince you its equal has never been offered in any one week, or month, for that matter. We also respectfully call your attention to the fact that, although the two Christmas day offerings are 'special' in every sense, there is no advance in prices for either picture. We do this because we want every family in Middlesboro to enjoy these magnificent productions."

Tom Moore Extends His Theater Holdings

Tom Moore, the largest exhibitor in Washington, D. C., and head of Moore's Theaters Corporation, has put through a deal to absorb the Metropolitan Theater Company. This consolidation gives the Moore concern five big film houses in the downtown section of Washington besides the seventeen theaters originally owned or planned, forming by far the largest combination of amusements the capital has ever known.

Of the capital stock of the new firm $1,200,000 is owned by Moore, with the rest divided between Tucker K. Sands, Fred S. Swindell and Albert Muehleisen.

It is understood that the operation of the circuit will be on a wholesale basis, resulting in lower operation expenses, improvement in the quality of films presented, and probably a reduction in price to the public. Plans are now under way to extend the circuit into Maryland and Delaware.

Gives Free Shows for Children

In Richmond, Va., a syndicate operating several theaters is giving Sunday afternoon entertainments for young people and children of the orphanages, children's homes, settlements and other classes of institutions, using selected pictures. These entertainments are given free, the manager believing that he owes this to the unfortunate young people of the city as a free-will offering. High-class pictures, chosen from the selected lists of the National Board of Review, are used.

The manager of this group of theaters, the Wells Theater Syndicate, is proposing to provide a free Sunday afternoon program of motion pictures for the soldiers from the neighboring training camp and the people of Richmond in the John Marshall High School auditorium.

In connection with these meetings, in addition to the motion pictures, there will be addresses, community singing and solo and orchestral musical selections.

Signs for Two Weeks' Engagement

W. H. Clune, owner of Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, California, has signed contracts this week under the terms of which he is to show "Madam Who?", in which Bessie Barriscale makes her debut as a Paralta star, for two weeks.

It has been the custom of Clune's Auditorium, which seats over three thousand persons, to show all feature productions but for one week. Owing to the enormous business, however, which Mr. Clune did with a pre-release showing of J. Warren Kerrigan in the Paralta Play, "A Man's Man," he has decided to extend the engagement of Paralta Plays to a two weeks' engagement.

Issues Elaborate Xmas Week Program

In getting out an elaborate program for his Christmas week attractions at the Orpheum Theater, Clarksburg, W. Va., Manager Jack Marks and his assistant, E. Richardson, made attractive use of green ink and holiday decorations. One page of the program was topped by the following original bit of verse:

Flicker! flicker! little film,
You're a diamond in your realm;
As you run on schedule time,
To gladden hearts at Christmas time.

The cover of the program bore an artistic picture of Santa Claus about to descend a chimney with an enormous pack of toys. The picture was done in three colors in a most effective manner.

New Tax Law Expected in Manitoba

Manitoba government officials are reported to be proceeding with all arrangements for the presentation of a measure at the forthcoming session of the provincial legislature which will provide for the collection of an amusement tax from theater-goers of the province. Winnipeg exhibitors see a storm brewing but, to date, little has been attempted in the way of offering advice to the government for a just and equitable law.

Protects Name of Strand Theater

A decision handed down by the appellate division of the supreme court in New York granted an injunction to Mitchell H. Mark, president of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand Theater at Broadway and Forty-seventh street, restraining the use of that name by another theater on One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, known as the Harlem Strand. This was the first suit of this kind brought to protect the name of a theater.

S. Barret McCormick advertised the Christmas week offering of the Circle Theater, Indianapolis, with artistic displays in the local newspapers. Above is an example of an advertisement which Mr. McCormick used to the extent of nearly one-half newspaper page.

Exhibitors Aid U. S. in Military Work

O. G. Cocks of the National Board of Review and special representative of the Commission on Training Camp Activities dealing with commercial amusements has returned from a visit to a number of the camp cities in New England and Virginia, including the Tidewater section, which is the most populous army and navy center in the United States. He reports a general willingness on the part of the exhibitors in the cities and towns surrounding the training and embarkation camps to co-operate with the officials of the government. The motion picture exhibitors are universally striving to furnish the most attractive and entertaining programs both for the civil population and for the soldiers.

New Theater Company Is Formed

The Forest Hill Theater, Inc., which will be located at 675 Mount Prospect avenue, Newark, N. J., with Arthur W. Moore as agent, in the promoting of motion picture and other kinds of plays and amusements, has been chartered.

The concern is capitalized at $125,000, which is divided into 1,250 shares at $100 each. The incorporators and number of shares held by each are, Arthur W. Moore, 4; Charles W. Thomason, 2; Agnes Thomason, 2, and Edith M. White, 2, all of Newark.

Canadian Exhibitors Make Novel Changes

The Gaiety Theater, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has lady attendants at Saturday matinees to look after the safety and comfort of unaccompanied children who patronize the theater. The admission price for children for this performance is only five cents, while adults pay ten and fifteen cents.

The Imperial Theater, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has organized a ladies' orchestra of five pieces to provide musical accompaniment at both afternoon and evening performances. Musicians have become scarce in Winnipeg but this is the only orchestra of ladies in the city.

Stars Celebrate Quiet Holiday

Goldwyn's stars celebrated Christmas quietly. All being keenly alive to the war spirit, they felt they could not enjoy the usual extravagant holiday of the opulent cinema star.

Mary Garden, her war work having earned decorations from two governments, knows conditions in France and cannot forget them in America. The singer rested on Christmas day at Old Point Comfort, where, by courtesy of Goldwyn, "Thais" was shown to a few friends of the star.

Madge Kennedy was in Jacksonville, Fla., making scenes for a new production. Jane Cowl, appearing on the road in "Lilac Time," her own war drama, labored as usual. Mabel Normand indulged in relief work and saw to it that no one of those who have come to depend on her lacked for anything she could give. Mae Marsh gave a children's party, her guests being the youngsters who appeared with her in "Sunshine Alley."

C. H. McGowan, general accountant for Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who is making a tour of all the Universal exchanges, stopped over for a couple days last week in the Chicago office. Mr. McGowan's next stop will be in Indianapolis.

"Mother"

McClure Picture, George Loane Tucker Production. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

THERE are so many angles which could be commented upon in the McClure Picture, "Mother," that an hour could be spent discussing them. However, it is a good picture as it brings out all of those lovely maternal instincts which are the base of the true devotion of motherhood. In the first place, this picture directed by George Loane Tucker brings us something new as far as production is concerned. The story by Eden Phillpotts, "The Mother of Man," from which the picture is made, is a story of English people, their manners and customs. It was photographed in England and the cast is comprised wholly of English stage folk. Elizabeth Risdon renders an exceedingly clever bit of character acting in her interpretation of a mother whose sole purpose in life is to raise her boy to be as good a man as his father. It is safe to say that every mother who has sons of her own will see herself living through the action of the picture with this mother of Miss Risdon. Photographically, the picture has reached a high point of efficiency. All of the beauties of the moorlands of Southern England are cleverly brought out, and the characteristics of the people who inhabit them are brought to one's understanding far more clearly than any word picture could bring them. The action of the story moves forward rapidly from the beginning, and without any lagging whatsoever we are shown the many trials and tribulations a mother lives through while watching her son reach the age of discretion.

As far as the story is concerned it is that of a boy and a girl with the watchful eye of a mother ever near to see that the boy marries the right one. Ives Pomeroy is the boy. He is selfish, head-strong, and stubborn. He cares for nobody and does not realize that anybody cares for him. Through his impulsiveness, he is frequently embroiled with his neighbors and finally he becomes indiscreet to the point where he falls into the hands of the police. His mother, if she were to lie, could save him from the humiliation of going to prison, but her intuition tells her that it is best that her son be disciplined. Ives, through his selfishness, is unable to understand and at this point declares that his mother is not worthy of being called by that name. He is sent to prison but returns home when his term has expired. Even prison has not wholly cured him of his selfishness, nor has it made him able even yet to realize that it is wholesome love which prompts his mother to do those things for him which she does. In the end, however, when his mother is about to die, he sees just how ungrateful he has been and at the climax, by the deathbed of his mother, he understands.

"Mother" is a picture which is deserving of great consideration. It is a clean and wholesome story and the types which are shown, are truly and distinctively English. The picture having been made in the atmosphere where the action of the story takes place, it brings us a production somewhat different than those which have been regularly shown heretofore.

"Brown of Harvard"

Selig-Perfection Picture From Stage Play. Kleine Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a Selig production of a well-known stage play of college life. Harry Beaumont directed it and the leading roles are played by Tom Moore and Hazel Daly, with a good supporting cast. The result is a picture of undeniable entertainment value. It is in six reels and is interesting in every scene.

To begin right, the story itself has plenty of material and plot complications. There is no lagging in story, no apparent padding. Then the characters are very definite and vivid and they are played in this manner. Tom Moore's work in the title role is sympathetic and interesting enough alone to win success for the picture. Then Hazel Daly, who became well known in the "Skinner" pictures, has some drawing power and fits into her role very nicely. Equally good work is done by Sydney Ainsworth as the professional gambler, by Walter McGrail as the unhappy boy who works his way through college and hates the wealthy students, by Nancy Winston as his sister, and by the others in the cast, Warner Richmond, Alice Gordon, Kempton Greene, Frank Joyner, Lydia Dalzell, Walter Hiers, Arthur Hausman and Johnnie Walker. Careful selection is apparent in the cast.

Besides the story and the acting, there are several picturesque scenes with "thrill," the boat race being the most noteworthy The photography is clear and even throughout. The settings and locations are fitting.

The picture is in six reels. Its appeal will be general. It can be booked and advertised with confidence by the average exhibitor.

The story: Tom Brown (Tom Moore) is a Harvard student who leads a well rounded life of work and fun. He is in love with Evelyn Ames, whose brother, Wilton, gambles and drinks, unknown to his mother and sister. Tom helps Wilton out of trouble when he can and conceals these affairs from Evelyn and her mother. Wilton secretly marries Marian Thorne, whose brother, Gerald, is working his way through school and who hates the wealthy students, especially Tom Brown. Gerald is athletic and is persuaded to row with the varsity boat crew.

Victor Colton, a professional gambler, plots to bet against Harvard and win a large amount of money on the coming boat race. He has Wilton in his power and he forces the boy to induce Marian Thorne to leave town just before the race, knowing that Gerald will then not row. The plan is successful, but Tom, who is put in Gerald's place in the crew, does so well that Harvard wins the race anyway. However, Gerald believes that Tom has wronged his sister and Tom refuses to clear himself at Wilton's expense. When Wilton confesses to the secret marriage, Tom's name is cleared and the story ends happily.

"Stolen Hours"

World Film Picture with Ethel Clayton. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

A THOROUGHLY interesting plot and a popular star will win favor for this picture which is a bit gaudy and theatrical but rather pleasingly so. It is far from being a picture for juveniles, depending upon gambling houses and raids for its atmosphere and the love of a girl and a married man for its appeal. The scenes which might have been obtuse have been carefully handled and the story is in the main inoffensively told, while the role portrayed charmingly by Ethel Clayton is, in spite of its appendage of gambler's daughter, a pleasant and sweet one. Patrons who like the Snappy Story brand of pictures will undoubtedly be pleased with this offering.

Ethel Clayton makes a true appeal as Diana Lester and a capable cast including John Bowers, Joseph Herbert, and Louise

De Rigney give her support. Travers Vale directed the picture which was taken from the magazine story by Olive Wadsley.

The story: Diana Lester is left motherless when a small baby and is raised to girlhood by her father, a professional gambler with a reckless, shiftless nature. Diana is fully imbued with the life of the card-shark but notwithstanding has grown into a sweet and unsullied girl.

When her father marries the owner of the Cosmopolitan, the most widely known gambling house in London, Diana is asked to look after the resort until after the honeymoon, and so takes up her residence there.

Hugh Carton comes to the house one night in search of a friend, totally unaware of the nature of the place. The house is raided and Hugh, fearing his reputation will be ruined, begs of assistance from Diana. She has had experience in extricating her father from like situations so helps Hugh to escape over the roof-tops.

Not knowing where else to take the girl at such an ungodly hour of the morning, Hugh takes her to his own apartment and he spends the night at his club. The girl's future bothers him as she doesn't seem at all the sort to frequent gambling houses, and he aids her to accept a position in a store.

Eventually the two fall in love and Diana hears that Hugh is married. She is willing to throw conventionalities aside and live with him as his wife and does so for a while until she realizes that she is hurting his future.

It is then she leaves and is about to marry another man when Hugh's wife offers to divorce him, and all ends happily.

"The Gown of Destiny"

Triangle Picture with Alma Rubens. Released December 30. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS is truly an exceptional picture in its artistic conclusion. Moving picture patrons are not generally credited with the proper acumen to appreciate the kind of ending which this picture sets forth, but it remains to be seen if this offering, which is really out of the ordinary, is not met with enthusiasm by those who view it. Earl Derr Biggers is responsible for the story which is delightful in theme and quite unique in treatment. This is by far the best picture which Triangle has produced in some time. Those who fail to fully appreciate it will enjoy it nevertheless.

The story: Andre Leriche is head designer for a fashionable Fifth Avenue modiste. He longs to be a soldier of France, to shed his blood for his country, to die if needs be for a glorious cause, but alas fate has given him the body of a weakling and he is rejected by the French consul.

Embittered because he can do nothing, scorned because he isn't on the firing line, and laughed at because he tries to be, he takes the consul's advice of "each according to his gifts" and creates a wonderful gown, which is the one and only thing left for him to do.

The gown is purchased by Mrs. Mortimer Reyton whose husband has been neglecting her of late. She dons the gown on the eve of their wedding anniversary, and it is such a master-piece that she wins back her husband's love. With new resolutions the husband sends three ambulances to France as an anniversary gift to his wife.

Mrs. Reyton then sends the gown to her niece, a sweet young girl who has always suffered the indignities of a wall-flower because she had no pretty frocks. The niece, Natalie Drew, is so transformed by the gown that she wins a declaration of love from Neil Cunningham and makes him realize that he is a slacker. He leaves to enlist in the English army and asks her to wait for him until he comes back a man to claim her for his wife.

Natalie receives the gown of destiny.

Thus Neil Cunningham finds himself leading his soldiers over the top to re-take the village of Pont a Cresson, which has been captured by the Germans. The Germans have imprisoned the mayor of the village and ordered him shot at sunrise.

Cunningham's attack is successful and he captures the village and frees the inhabitatnts. The mayor comes to thank him and express his appreciation, and adds, loyally, that somewhere he has a son who, he feels sure, is doing his bit, wherever he is, for his country. His son, he says, is called Andre Leriche and the last he heard he was a designer in New York.

Back in his Fifth Avenue shop Andre reads in the paper of the re-capture of his native village, Pont a Cresson. With a heart full of grief, and blinded by tears, he wishes he could have had some tiny part in so great an achievement.

There is a strong moral attached to this picture which can't fail to reach an audience and leave it satisfied. Lynn Reynolds directed the picture, which was photographed by John Brown, and both deserve high praise. The lighting effects and photography of the battle scenes at night are something quite splendid.

Alma Rubens is charming as Natalie Drew, but special honors go to Herrera Tejedde as Andre. He fits the role to perfection and renders a most enjoyable performance in an exceedingly eccentric and difficult part.

"Girls You Know"

First Two of the James Montgomery Flagg Comedies, Kleine-Perfection Release. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

EXHIBITORS looking for high class comedies, note these. James Montgomery Flagg, the artist, who drew a series of sketches under the above title, has written the scenarios for a series of one reel comedies in which girls who have posed as models for his pictures enact the title roles on the screen. Very clever and laugh-producing subtitles aid the comedies, which are very well produced. The Edison studios made the comedies. Flagg himself appears in them in the early part of each picture. He may become a screen favorite as well as magazine artist.

"The Screen-Struck Girl" begins the series. Her dream in which she believes she is a great screen actress and indulges in various temperamental whims is an amusing burlesque on the attitude of many spoiled celebrities. Her rude awakening is also funny.

"The Bride" is a society satire in a far cleverer tone than we usually find in motion picture comedies. It is well picturized and is very enjoyable.

Judging from these two subjects, the comedies, which are released through the George Kleine system, under the Perfection brand, are fine for any audiences, but they will be liked especially by the higher class patrons who cannot be amused by the crudeness of slap-stick and the usual broad humor of the screen. They are very fine and their producers are to be congratulated.

"The High Sign"

Herbert Rawlinson in Butterfly Melodrama of December 31. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is one of those wild and romantic adventure pictures which end with the hero awakening from his dream. Herbert Rawlinson is the dreamer in this instance, Brownie Vernon the young lady he dreams of. Swift action, a flavor of humor, likeable characters and clever playing help to make a fairly good offering from a story of slight value. Almost all the material used is old, the college scenes, the mythical kingdom episodes, above all, the dream ending. The title refers to the coincidence by which the hero finds that the secret signal of his college society serves as an "open seasame" to a meeting of plotters against the throne of a kingdom. But the whole story was in a dream he had the night after his initiation into the society.

Audiences which like plays of real emotion or real life will not find this very satisfying. But as a light, frivolous entertainment it will appeal to many who seek diversion. Its players are likeable, its scenes varied and amusing. The photography and lighting effects are especially commendable.

The Story: Donald Bruce has trouble keeping up with the curriculum of his college course but little difficulty in winning membership in one of the exclusive societies. He is initiated into this secret order by their usual elaborate rites, which make a great impression on him.

Donald is in love with Hulda Maroff, whose father is supposed to be a nobleman in disguise. Donald Bruce's room-mate declares himself the missing heir to a foreign kingdom. He asks Donald to take his place when a message arrives commanding him to take his place on the throne. Donald goes in his friend's place and is accepted as the real prince. By means of the secret signals of his society, he is able to gain admittance to a conference of anarchists and learns that the prince is to be killed. Donald decides to go back on his bargain, until he learns that Hulda is the princess he is to wed. He marries her and foils the plot against their lives. Then he wakes up and finds it all a dream. He is still in college and Hulda still lives on the next street.

"The Cinderella Man"

Goldwyn Picture with Mae Marsh. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THIS is the sort of picture which helps to raise the movies to a higher plane and it is undoubtedly the best picture which Goldwyn has yet produced. It is brimful of delightful touches and human characterizations, is clean and sweet and wholesome to a degree, pleasurable to the eye, and topped by Mae Marsh's charm is veritably a picture to be remembered and remarked upon.

As a play "The Cinderella Man" met with considerable success on the stage two winters ago, and as a picture it should prove even more popular. The Cinderella theme is one which never grows stale no matter how often it is presented or in what disguise. It is the basis of almost every play or bit of fiction which has ever known popularity. In this instance the one who needs must sit at home while others frolic is a young poet who quits his father's palatial mansion to make his way unaided in the world, and who isn't very successful until a wealthy young girl comes along and plays good fairy to him. She finds him in his cold attic room and transforms it into fairy-land.

The love story written around these two characters is particularly charming and will please young and old. The picture is one which will endure, a delightful change from the commonplace pictures which one meets on all sides.

Mae Marsh wins the affections of the spectators from the start and plays with an ingenuousness which is captivating. One of the features of the picture which stands out in memory is the wonderful portrayal of the father by George Fawcett. His performance is truly the work of an artist. Others in the cast who do excellent work are Tom Moore, Alec Francis, Dean Raymond, Harry Scarborough, Louis Grisel and Elizabeth Ariaans. George Loane Tucker directed the picture which is thoroughly satisfying from every point of view.

The story: Marjorie Caner arrives at her father's home after having been reared abroad. The father is a soured old individual who isn't at all pleased to have his daughter break in upon his peace and quiet and upset his routine. His one thought is to have his daughter married quickly, to any fortune hunting person who might happen to come along, just as long as he doesn't have to be bothered with her.

Margy is very lonely in her huge, cheerless mansion and has only for companions her father's three old cronies, a lawyer, a musician and a doctor. These men have succumbed to Margie's charms and resenting her father's attitude they plan to give her the romance and joys for which her nature craves.

Next door, in the attic of an apartment house, lives a poor poet, vainly hoping to some day have his beautiful poems recognized, and in the meantime nearly starving and freezing from the cold. Margie and her three confederates, at Christmas time, sneak over the snowy roofs to the poet's attic room and transform it into a gorgeous fairy-land. At least the poet thinks a fairy must have wrought the change until he spies Margie who didn't get away in time, and then he denounces her as the rich, spying Miss Caner from next door.

Margie insists, however, that she is Miss Caner's companion, and a charming friendship springs up which ripens into love.

The father, in the meantime, has been made aware of Margie's presence and through her loving devotion his heart has undergone a change. He discovers Margie's love for the poet, saves her from an affair with a fortune-hunting scoundrel and gives her her heart's desire. The poet wins a prize in a contest for his poetry, and all ends happily.

"The Man Above the Law"

Triangle Picture with Claire McDowell. Released January 6. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

PICTURESQUE scenes and interesting characters, worked into a plot of more than average interest, are three important factors which will insure this offering of popularity.

There is portrayed a certain vivid realism of an uncivilized community which is accentuated by the appearance of a timid little teacher, arrived to teach to the natives the beauties of the Holy Gospel. She finds her chief obstacle in Duke Chalmers, a man disillusioned by life who has made his home amongst the Indians and taught them to fear him more than anything on earth. He bears a horrible and unjust grudge against religion, law and women, but the teacher points out to him the error of his ways and when he falls in love with her and she with him sends him back to his Indian wife, as a good missionary should.

One becomes a wee bit bored by the saccharine goodness of the Boston missionary person and heartily glad when Duke returns to his jealous squaw. The squaw as portrayed by Claire McDowell is a most picturesque and desirable life companion for the most fastidious individual, and one particularly to be admired by picture fans. An adorably natural child, May Giracia, plays the part of a little Indian girl in such a winning manner that she captivates the spectators from the start and walks away with half the honors of the picture. Jack Richardson is well cast as Duke Chalmers and Josie Sedgwick is seen as the offensively sweet teacher.

The picture is fully entertaining and many of the scenes are very beautiful, notably the ones of a sand storm at night. The lighting effects deserve special praise. The picture was directed by Raymond Wells and photographed by Pliny Horn.

The story: Duke Chalmers is known as Man-Above-the-Law in an uncivilized Indian settlement near the Mexican border, where he lives with his Indian squaw Natchah and child Tonah. The Indians fear him terribly and he binds them to him by salling them whiskey.

Chalmers is terribly embittered against law, religion and women and takes his keenest pleasure in reading the false philosophy of Omar Khayam. When Esther Browns arrives at the post to conduct a mission school for the native children, his anger is great because she represents to him that civilized world which he has left behind him and which he thinks he loathes. He refuses to allow Tonah to attend the mission school and so the other children of the settlement are kept away also.

Esther pleads with Duke to allow Tonah to go to school and also to stop selling whiskey to the natives. Duke finally concedes to the former request but refuses the latter. After this the two spend many pleasant evenings together with their books.

Natchah, feeling the barrier of breed, hates the white girl intensely and even makes an attempt upon her life which is thwarted by Duke. Then Duke and Esther realize that they love each but Duke is persuaded to go back to Natchah and the child, and the night finds them journeying west.

"Betty Takes a Hand"

AN amusing light comedy with an involved plot serves to display Olive Thomas's charms in a variety of costumes, and to cause some merriment by a string of ridiculous happenings.

The story is more or less improbable, as comedies go, but is told with a dash and spirit which make up for sterner qualities, and help the picture along to a pleasing end wherein the rich man marries the poor girl and their road to happiness is paved with a $50,000 check from a father who had been dead against the match all along. Olive Thomas' beauty heightens the offering considerably and helps her to successfully manage a lot of things from a boarding house to a fat, ridiculously severe millionaire father-in-law-to-be. She does both with charming ease. The picture will be well liked by those who prefer to be amused by a picture rather than enlightened.

The cast is an acceptable one and each and every member plays with an abundance of enthusiasm. Among the members are George Hernandez, Charles Gunn, Frederick Vroom and Bliss Chevalier. Jack Dillon directed the picture.

The story: Betty Marshall, living in a little mountain home, is told by her father that James Bartlett and Hamilton Haines cheated him out of a fortune years before, and that she is to be sent to Los Angeles to visit her aunt, Mrs. Hamilton Haines. Betty, when she starts out, has every intention of settling this old score with her aunt and of somehow getting back some of her father's fortune.

She arrives just as her aunt and cousin are leaving for Panama, and they leave her to take care of the house. Betty is delighted, and hitting upon a happy scheme, she hangs out a "room and board" sign. Of course a motley crew of boarders is attracted to the beautiful home.

Now Bartlett's son Tom comes to call at the Haines home and his surprise is great when he sees the sign, and greater when he beholds the beautiful boarding house mistress. Having just been disinherited for about the twentieth time, he decides to remain as star-boarder.

A chance meeting between the elder Bartlett and Betty serves to captivate the old gentleman, and, not knowing her real identity, he offers her $50,000 if she will marry his son. She is only too pleased to do this, and Tom is in paradise when he hears of the agreement.

Of course the two unfriendly fathers are furious when they discover the real identities of the bride and groom but a reconciliation finally takes place and all ends happily.

"Madame Who"

Bessie Barriscale in 7-reel Paralta Play. For Immediate Bookings. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

IF THE succeeding Paralta Plays which are to follow "Madame Who" are equal in standard to this release those who seek entertainment in motion pictures will undoubtedly become strong followers of Paralta Productions. "Madame Who" serves as an excellent vehicle to allow Bessie Barriscale to show to advantages all of her charms and loveliness.

One would naturally expect a good story from Harold McGrath and this one does not disappoint in the least. The story is built in connection with the closing days of the Civil War and the action of the picture takes place beween Richmond and Washington. Reginald Baker was the director and each member of the cast ably supports Miss Barriscale in the creation of a thrilling hour's entertainment. From the beginning to the end one is always in doubt as to the final outcome. While the picture might be termed a war story with plenty of thrills, at the same time none of the gruesome horrors of war are shown and the climax brings a pleasing finis.

The story is that of Jeanne Beaufort—Bessie Barriscale—a charming Southern girl who loves the Confederacy to the extent that risking her life in its cause is her sole ambition. She is the spy upon whom the South depends for their information concerning the movements of the North. From the first event where she accidently falls among Northern agents who are holding their final meeting in Richmond and where instead of killing her to silence her forever she is forced by these Yankees to marry a man unknown to her until the end she is termed "Madame Who."

Eleven men unknown to each other were at the meeting and she vows to have vengeance upon them all, and the remainder of the picture is devoted to showing the process of elimination. The atmosphere of the South during the period of the story is vividly portrayed and the different characters are true to the types of that time.

While many offerings of the past have been made from the endless amount of material furnished by the Civil War "Madame Who" is something different and will cause a lingering memory of an exceptionally pleasant hour in the minds of those who see it. Paralta have turned out a worthy picture in "Madame Who," a picture of intrigue, love and duty, and one which will be sure to please the most critical observer.

"My Unmarried Wife"

Carmel Myers in Entertaining Bluebird of January 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

EXCEPT for a misleading title, this is a very good Bluebird offering, with little to find fault with and much to commend. It is adapted from Frank R. Adams' stage comedy which bore the title "Molly and I" and it has a bright, entertaining plot, out of the ordinary but not in the least suggestive or risque. It is a well chosen vehicle for Carmel Myers since the leading role is distinctive and calls for someone of her type.

The story, as adapted by Doris Schroeder and directed by George Siegmann, is whimsical and light and is the sort of thing the majority of audiences, especially in neighborhood houses, enjoy seeing. It has humor and heart interest. It is cleverly acted, smoothly directed and nicely staged and photographed. All in all, it is a good offering of its type.

Molly and her aid.

Kenneth Harlan and Pat Calhoun have important roles in support of the star. Beatrice Van, Mark Fenton and Jack Hutchinson are in the cast.

The story: Phillip Smith, a young author, becomes temporarily blind. His deep discouragement is noted by Mary Cunningham, assistant of the doctor who treats him. She learns that the young author is planning suicide and hits upon an unusual scheme to keep him from carrying out his plan. She begs him to marry her, telling him that she must be married to inherit a fortune. Then she leaves him. He does not know who she is.

Phillip regains his sight and begins a flirtation with a society butterfly. Mary sets out to save him. Posing as an Italian girl who cannot speak English, she goes to his apartment and insists on staying as his servant. In this guise she wins his love and takes him away from the other girl. Then Phillip is hurt in an automobile accident and Mary decides to tell him who she is. Because of an intercepted message, the two are nearly separated again but everything is straightened out in the end.

Religious Leaders Want Censor

The creation of a State Board of Motion Picture Review under an act of the session of the legislature, that will be opened in Trenton, N. J., in January, was the object of a conference held last week in the senate chamber at the New Jersey State House by representatives of religious organizations.

It was the sense of the meeting that the state should legalize a board similar to those in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kansas and Delaware.

"Lo the Poor Cop"

Under the heading "Lo the Poor Cop," and speaking editorially, Progress-Advance, the Paramount-Artcraft magazine, has this to say:

"The policemen of Nashville, Tenn., have a grievance. They protest against the payment of the war tax imposed by Uncle Sam upon passes to theaters on the ground that as one of the primary objects of the Government in imposing the war tax is to derive fees from motion picture revenues, and that as passes represent no revenue, they cannot logically be taxed three or five cents or any other sum as is being done by virtue of a ruling of the United States Treasury Department.

"This sort of thing is a positive infringement upon the inalienable right of the policemen of Nashville to get everything they can, under heaven and above, from peanuts to motion picture entertainment, free of cost to themselves. That they should pay three or five cents for a privilege other persons not in the bobby uniform are glad to pay ten times as much to enjoy, is a gratuitous imposition, the iniquity of which cannot be condoned. It does not matter that this war tax is devoted to meeting Uncle Sam's enormous war expenses—the rights of policemen should in no circumstances be ignored even by the Treasury Department.

"Perhaps the motion picture exhibitors of Nashville, all of whom are sympathetic as well as patriotic, may be induced to pay this tax themselves, but we doubt it. It is the duty of all citizens, even policemen, to share their proportion of the burdens of the war, and we fear that this inopportune wail from the sunny southland will find no responsive chord in any other section of the country, much less in the breast of Internal Revenue collectors, whose sworn duty it is to carry out the law as it is interpreted by the tribunals of the land."

Another Theda Bara Picture

William Fox will release on December 30th "Du Barry," another Theda Bara super-picture. "Du Barry" deals with the life of the famous Madame Du Barry who rose from obscurity and comparative poverty to the position of favorite of King Louis XV of France. The play deals with her methods of establishing herself in the good graces of the King and of continuing herself in favor in the face of inconstancy and constant intrigue. Miss Bara plays the title role. Gordon Edwards directed the picture.

Rosson New Fairbanks Director

As a reward for his loyalty Art Rosson, who has been assisting Allan Dwan, has been made a director by Douglas Fairbanks.

The latter believes in the development of new material, as in Rosson's first picture will be a western story by Allan Dwan, who recently completed "A Modern Musketeer."

"Split Reel" Notes For Theater Men

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

Cold Decreases Business

In spite of the fact that a heavy snow lay upon the ground for ten days continually, and the thermometer registered from 5 to 15 degrees most of the time, business at the Strand Theater in Nashville, Tenn., was decreased only 10 per cent, according to a statement made by Manager Carson Bradford. This is an exceedingly good record, in view of the fact that patronage was cut more than half in many houses over the city, with the suburban houses suffering proportionately. Manager Bradford exercised a piece of forethought at the beginning of the bad weather which saved him quite a tidy sum. A heavy canvas strip was secured and placed the entire length of the wide center aisle over the top of the plush carpet. As a result thousands of muddy feet which entered the house left their imprint upon the canvas, rather than on the carpet. This is a good plan to be pursued in muddy weather, such as follows a snow, especially in view of the fact that the false covering can be preserved for future use.

Veteran Goes to Canada

Herb Jennings, a theater manager of twenty-two years' standing, has been appointed manager of the Flower Theater, Ottawa. This theater was recently taken over from F. Carling by the same interests which control the St. Denis Theater, Montreal, the Regent, Toronto, and other moving picture houses. Mr. Jennings formerly managed the Lyric Theater in Jamestown, N. Y., was an exhibitor of Los Angeles for several years, and has managed other houses.

Many Houses Close

Statistics on the moving picture situation in Indianapolis, Ind., show that twenty-three picture theaters have gone out of business in the last year. Most of the retirements have been due to increased taxes and decerased attendance. Nearly all of the playhouses forced out of business were in the outlying residential districts. Reports on business conditions in the downtown section of the city show a falling off in moving picture theaters' attendance of from 20 to 40 per cent.

After Sunday Violators

Warrants are expected to be issued against the Sunday-closing law violators who kept their places of business open on last Sunday in Decatur, Ala. Officers made a careful survey of the various places open, even noting the fact that newspapers were being sold in front of a drug store. The "blue law" agitation in Alabama is worse this year than ever before.

Special Children's Show in Chicago

The Garfield Theater in Chicago recently gave a special ten-reel show for children, the program including Julian Eltinge in "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," Fatty Arbuckle in "The Country Hero," and Harry McCoy in a Keystone comedy, "Pearls and Perils." A single reel educational completed the entertainment.

Theater Aids Recruiting

In an effort to stimulate naval recruiting Ensign D. J. D. Coleman, who needed 442 recruits to complete his quota of 800 apprentice seamen, leased the Colonial Theater in Milwaukee, Wis., for an entire week recently, and gave free shows, including moving pictures, lectures and patriotic speeches. The plan was successful and many young men were induced to enter the navy during the week.

Fire Destroys Theater

One of the two moving picture theaters of St. John, Quebec, was destroyed by fire late in December. This was the house owned by Mr. Thuot and known as the Thuotoscope. He plans to rebuild the structure which was wiped out along with several other buildings. The Imperial Theater, in the same city, owned by A. Audet, was untouched.

New House in Birmingham

Birmingham, Ala., is to have a handsome new photoplay house, according to the plans of a local amusement company. The new theater will be of modern design, and will embody all the latest principles of fireproof construction, costing in the neighborhood of $15,000. The house will be known as the Savoy Theater.

New $62,000 Theater

In Harlowton, Mont., there is under construction the American Theater, which will cost $62,000. When completed it will be one of the finest moving picture theaters in that section of the country. The venture is being backed by R. E. Irwin and H. B. Myers.

Spending $150,000

A total of $150,000 is being expended in the erection of the building that will house the new Thompson-Starrett moving picture theater in Pittsburgh, Pa. The new building will replace the old Harris Opera House. The construction work will be completed within a short time.

Gives Money to Soldiers

The Morse Theater, Chicago, gave its entire week's receipts—Christmas to New Years—to the recreation equipment fund of Company H, Three Hundred and Forty-third Infantry, stationed at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill.

Newspaper Entertains Kids

The St. Paul Daily News, following its annual custom, arranged a series of special theater parties for December 24 and 26. All youngsters under 12 years of age were admitted free to the Alhambra Theater where a special film program of interest to little folks was given for the two days.

Warns Against Candles

Motion picture theaters in Lansing, Mich., were used by the fire authorities to warn residents of the city against fire danger from placing lighted candles behind Red Cross service flags in windows. Slides were shown in every theater in the city carrying this warning.

He Loved Her So—ESSANAY—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 5.—The jealous husband suspects that his wife is fickle but cannot discover any actual evidences until the butler hands her a letter one morning. He snatches it from her and only waiting to read "My Dearest Sweetheart," tears it up and storms about the room. The wife pleads with him but he goes out and buys a revolver. The wife, changing her clothes, also goes out. The cook, spying the discarded dress across the mistress' bed, sneaks in and puts it on, in celebration of an evening with the butler. When the husband returns and sees, in the half-lit dining room, the cook with his wife's dress on, in the arms of a man, he draws his revolver and fires. The cook, though unhurt, falls to the floor. The husband turns in the hall just as his wife enters with a man by her side. The wife introduces her father to the trembling husband who then realizes his mistake in not reading all of the letter which told of the parent's coming. The three go into the other room where the cook and the butler laughingly tell of the mistake in identity.

One Night—ESSANAY—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 12.—The Gentleman Drunk returns to the hotel about midnight, climbing into bed with his silk hat on. Upstairs the Ham actor climbs through the window and down a rope, beating his board bill. Across the hall, talking in whispers, the Girl and her fiance plan an elopement, enraged at parental objections to kissing in the hotel parlor. Hearing the Ham Actor scuffling down the wall on the rope, the Drunk staggers to the window and peers out, his silk hat falling to the ground below. Stealthily he creeps down stairs and onto the sidewalk to regain it. In the meantime the Girl and the Man are ready for flight but the irate parents catch them. The Drunk loses his night gown and to hide from some girls entering the hotel, rolls up in a rug and runs wildly through the halls. The Ham Actor has aroused the guests of the hotel, who think him a burglar. Nora, in the kitchen, is entertaining the Cop. Together they capture the Ham Actor and finally discover the Drunk in hiding under the sofa.

Agricultural Opportunities in Western Canada—ESSANAY—JANUARY 12.—The opportunity for those who are thinking of settling on land where the soil is prolific will be unusually interested in this Essanay scenic reel. It shows the tremendous output of the Canadian soil and the open country still waiting to be sown. It reveals how the land is irrigated by the many dams; the Brooks aqueduct, the cutting of alfalfa, the industries of dairying; chicken raising, sheep raising and woolen milling. You will also see the ultra modern methods of sanitary milk handling in the dairies by electricity, which power, as is also shown, even serves in the threshing of the grain.

A Peach and a Pill—STRAND—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 8.—Jack, who is engaged to Billie, is attracted by Vera, and makes an appointment to meet her. He pleads a headache in order to keep the date, and Billie gives him a pill from a box which she finds on the table. Billie tells her mother that she has given one of the pills to Jack, and wild excitement prevails when Billie learns that her mother had substituted bichloride of mercury for the real pills. Billie frantically rushes to Jack's apartment, where she meets his chum, Fred, and tells him of the mistake. Fred calls Jack on the telephone at the Gaylife Cafe, where he is enjoying himself with Vera. Jack is to return to the apartment, pretend illness, while Fred is to return disguised as a doctor. Billie, however, has called a doctor, who administers strenuous treatment. Jack pays the price of his faithlessness, but Billie never learns, and all ends happily.

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Latest News of Chicago

Mme. Lina Cavalieri was the guest of honor at the first Chicago presentation of her Paramount feature, "The Eternal Temptress," which was shown at the Ziegfeld Theater before an invited audience of musical celebrities and other persons of distinction. W. L. Hill and Max Goldstein of the Paramount exchange arranged the affair. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Cleofonte Campanini, Genevieve Vix, Rosa Raisa, Louise Berat, Riccardo Stracciari and other members of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, and M. Barthelemy, the French consul; Count Bolognesi, Italian consul; Countess Bolognesi, Dr. Cyrille Vermaeron, Belgian consul; Lewis E. Bernays, British vice-consul, and Mrs. Bernays. Mme. Cavalieri held an impromptu reception after the presentation and received graciously the compliments showered upon her in French and English on her very fine work before the camera. "The Eternal Temptress" began its run of one week at the Ziegfeld Theater New Year's Eve.

Herbert Brenon visited Chicago last week and gave a special presentation before critics and exhibitors of his latest production, "Empty Pockets," the screen version of Rupert Hughes' well-known novel.

The first two of the James Montgomery Flagg one-reel comedies, which are being distributed through the George Kleine system, Perfection Brand, were screened at last week's trade showing before a large number of exhibitors who seemed delighted with these novel and high class offerings.

William Russell paused in Chicago for a few days on his way from Santa Barbara to New York. Russell has completed his contract with the American Film Company and his trip to Chicago and New York is for the purpose of securing new arrangements for the new year.

Taylor Holmes, Virginia Valli, Lillian Drew and supporting players, who were in Phoenix, Arizona, filming scenes for the latest Essanay feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap," are in Chicago to spend the Christmas holidays in their homes.

Little Mary McAlister composed an entirely new speech for her Christmas morning address before 1,500 Chicago orphans in the Virginia theater. Mary gave a special showing of her latest picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven" on this morning, and scattered good things to eat about the theater as well. Her address to the little orphans was quaint and sincere.

George Periolat, well known character actor with the American Film Company of Santa Barbara, spent Christmas with an aged godmother in Watertown, Wisconsin.

Captain Richard Travers, former Essanay star, newly commissioned, visited the Essanay studios before leaving for the East, and posed for a strip of motion pictures.

Bradley Smollen, former Essanay scenario writer, was one of the Camp Grant men selected for the Third Officers Training Camp.

James Hobart Hutchinson, eldest son of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., of Chicago, is enlisted with the First Company Military Police, 310 Train, 85th Division, at Camp Custer, Michigan. Mr. Hutchinson, who was a student of Armour's Technical Institute, enlisted as soon as he was twenty-one, which was early in December.

Mary Garden arrived in the city New Year's Eve to take her place with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. Miss Garden's Goldwyn feature, "Thais," had its first Chicago presentation at the Orpheum Theater, December 30. The prima donna will appear in three operas this season, one of them, "Thais."

Sidney Cohan of the New York office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was a visitor in Chicago last week.

YOUR BOX-OFFICE STATEMENT WILL TELL YOU IN FIGURES WHAT THIS REVIEWER WRITES IN THE CURRENT ISSUE OF THE DRAMATIC MIRROR:

"A serial that gives promise of outclassing that super-serial, The Fighting Trail,' in its exposition of hair-raising episodes and with its rapidity of action and death-defying thrills. The all-star cast, headed by the widely popular William Duncan and Carol Holloway. William Duncan's splendid accomplishment as a director of serials.

"At the close of the 'Fighting Trail' we felt that all in the way of thrills had been accomplished, but it seems we were wrong. 'Vengeance—and the Woman' gives fair promise of outclassing the preceding western melodrama. The story is better, and will appeal to all classes. The action leaves one breathless—so rapidly are the death-defying activities of the players unfolded.

"Here is a serial that should prove a veritable gold mine to exhibitors. It has been widely advertised, and the memory of 'The Fighting Trail' is still fresh in the minds of the people, and all those who witnessed that stirring serial will want to see this new achievement of Vitagraph. And it will not disappoint one of its audiences. It is truly a masterpiece in the way of thrilling melodramas of the ever-popular western type."

Year 1918 Promises Great Activity

PRODUCTION COMPANIES ENTER UPON ERA OF UNUSUAL ENDEAVOR

ALTHOUGH the new year is just beginning to unfold, a reliable forecast is available by reading between the lines of the annual reviews and prophecies issued through the publicity departments of the various production companies within the motion picture industry. It is almost unanimously agreed that 1918 is to be a year of unusual achievement in moving pictures—of achievement that promises to outstrip all previous years.

Everyone Will Do Better

At least the forecasts of the heads of the producing organizations would impress the reader of their statements that each individual corporation engaged in the making of moving pictures intends that his company shall exceed the successes of past years.

It is certain from the plans announced that there is to be no curtailment of production. Every large producer has announced a heavy schedule that will continue to strain the studio facilities of the various silent drama factories. Each one has declared that the quality of his product will excel that of his previous endeavors.

Production Will Increase

Production will be increased by the entrance into the field of a number of newly formed producing organizations. Announcement of several recently incorporated companies, backed by real money, have been made in the last few weeks. Each new organization has entered the business of making pictures with full assurance of success—according to their publicity matter—and although it is admitted that overproduction was one of the evils of the year 1917, it is asserted that there is always room on the market for good productions and profit in the making of better than good productions.

A note of optimism is sounded in the prognostication of every producer at the outset of the New Year. It is not the usual forced optimism that pervades the atmosphere wherever moving picture folk gather or the bravado that characterizes the written lava that flows from the producers' publicity foundries. It is real optimism.

Business Methods Prevail

Most of the producing brains of the country see ahead a settling of the moving picture industry into a sound business foundation. The structure that upholds the fifth industry of America, they all admit, is being strengthened by the substitution of regular business methods for the more or less uncertain—some wrongly call it "wildcat"—procedure that has accompanied the remarkable growth of the motion picture business.

To this end MOTOGRAPHY will, during the year, bend its efforts to encourage the advance of sound business methods in every branch of the industry.

Brandt Gains Merited Promotion

One of the important internal changes announced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the new year is President Laemmle's appointment of General Manager Joe Brandt to the position of general sales manager of the Universal's world-wide organization.

Immediately preceding this appointment, the board of directors of the Universal company named Mr. Laemmle as director general as well as president of the corporation, and elected Mr. Brandt to the post of assistant treasurer.

C. H. MacGowan, for some years auditor of the Universal, was appointed assistant to the director general.

E. H. Goldstein was appointed to take complete charge of merging the various New York City exchanges of the Universal, the Bluebird, the Longacre (Alice Howell comedies) companies into one large unit, occupying the entire seventh floor of the Mecca building at 1600 Broadway.

"The advancement of Joe Brandt is simply a reward of merit," said Mr. Laemmle after the meeting of the board of directors. "It is the result of long and loyal service."

A. E. Smith in Auto Mishap

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, had a narrow escape last Friday when his limousine leaped head-on against a telegraph pole. He was stunned for a few moments and suffered several painful injuries. Mr. Smith, who was reading, was hurled against the front of the tonneau, the impact causing a deep cut on his forehead. In addition, his leg was wrenched and his hand badly lacerated. Another machine was called and Mr. Smith was rushed to the studio, where he was given treatment in the company's emergency hospital.

ARTCRAFT

ARTCRAFT AND PARAMOUNT PICTURES—"My people are very strong for these pictures, all of which have been eminently satisfactory since the Star Series began. The only exception is Beban who, although I think him very fine, does not draw in the west."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

Reaching for the Moon, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Only a fair picture, not as good as his last two or three."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Man From Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Doug. pulls three or four new stunts in this and the picture, which is well produced, goes over well."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Most remarkable record any picture has ever made in this city."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

Barbary Sheep, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—"Fine. Fine star and most splendid production."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

The Man From Painted Post, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"A knock-out, to capacity against heavy competition."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

A Romance of the Redwoods, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Very poor for a Pickford production, not in a class with The Poor Little Rich Girl.—C. M. Pfeffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

BLUEBIRD

The Man Who Took a Chance, with Franklyn Farnum (Bluebird)—"Very good. Those few who saw it liked it but we can't judge its drawing power for a blizzard came the same day."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

BUTTERFLY

High Speed, with Harry Carey (Butterfly)—"Very fair for an unknown star. Good but nothing wonderful."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

FOX

The Island of Desire, with George Walsh (Fox)—"Not up to the standard of George Walsh pictures. My people like the star but did not care for this."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

Miss U. S. A., with June Caprice (Fox)—"Surely an up-to-date picture. Pleased everyone. June is a favorite here."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

Unknown 274, with June Caprice (Fox)—"June's latest and it is surely some picture. Excellent business. My patrons cannot stop talking about it. I ran a Fox comedy with it, which was surely good. Everyone was pleased. Fox pictures get the business."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

The Painted Madanna, with Sonia Markova (Fox)—"A new star and an average picture."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

A Domestic Hound, with Hank Mann (Fox)—"This is kind of comedy that everybody likes. Is surely good."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"Picture wonderful. It drew way beyond expectations in zero weather."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

Patsy, with June Caprice (Fox)—"Fine comedy drama. The star pulls the crowd here."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Slave, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"Production fine. Business very good."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Siren, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"The picture is good. The star draws here. Bad weather hurt business."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Darling of Paris, with Theda Bara (Fox)—"Production ordinary. Cannot judge drawing power because the weather was at zero."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

Betrayed, with Miriam Cooper (Fox)—"Not much to this. My people did not like it."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Durand of the Bad Lands, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A fair western picture. Business poor. Star not popular here."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

GENERAL

In the Park, with Charlie Chaplin (General)—"This re-issue drew capacity business, even after being shown four times during the past two years. Book these pictures and make a killing."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

GOLDWYN

Sunshine Alley, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A rather poor story. The acting of Robert Harron and Mae Marsh and also the numerous birds and animals introduced help to pull it through to a pleasing finish. My patrons liked it. Good business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"This production can be called good but it gets few laughs for a farce-comedy. Cannot compare with Baby Mine, Madge Kennedy's first picture. Good business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—"Too much action and not enough human appeal. Business fair in cold weather."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A splendid production. Pleased immensely. Don't be afraid to boost it big. Capacity business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Played as a Christmas special to capacity at every performance."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"Sorely disappointed in this. It is draggy and boring."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

KEYSTONE

Whose Baby? (Keystone)—"Disconnected story. Very much below Keystone standard."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Skidding Hearts (Keystone)—"A good comedy."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Dog Catcher's Love, with "Teddy" (Keystone)—"A dandy comedy. Introduces some novel stunts, also features some well-trained dogs. Hard to beat."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Dog Catcher's Love, with "Teddy" (Keystone)—"A real comedy, something hard to get nowadays."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Waiter's Ball, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Keystone)—"The best Arbuckle comedy ever produced. We have run it three times."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

KLEINE-PERFECTION

Efficiency Edgar's Courtship, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay-Perfection)—"A clean comedy-drama but not as good as this star's Two Bit Seats."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Small Town Guy, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay-Perfection)—"A very pleasing picture. Satisfied everybody. Drew pretty good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Two Bit Seats, with Taylor Holmes (Essanay-Perfection)—"This is some picture. Everyone came out smiling. Good business."—Cecil C. Reed, Malone Theater, Sikeston, Mo.

Skinner's Dress Suit, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"Very good. Pleased everyone. Good business."—J. D. Palmer, Palmer Theater, Black Lick, Pa.

METRO

The Haunted Pajamas, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"For an old picture, this is about the one best bet of the year."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Sowers and Reapers, with Emmy Whelen (Metro)—"Everyone thought this a great picture. I myself think it about the best ever put in six reels. Capacity business."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"This is just like all the other Bushman pictures, too much Bushman and always posing."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

MUTUAL

Sunny Jane, with Jackie Saunders (Horkheimer-Mutual)—"This picture is good. No suggestiveness. No 'eternal triangle.' Just a rollicking girl in a good story with a healthy dash of comedy."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

The Bride's Silence, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—Picture fair. Star drew well."—Cecil C. Reed, Malone Theater, Sikeston, Mo.

The Mirror, with Marjorie Rambeau (Mutual)—"This star is well liked here. Good business."—Cecil C. Reed, Malone Theater, Sikeston, Mo.

At the Edge of the Aqueduct (Mutual)—"A very good two-reel feature."—J. C. Palmer, Palmer Theater, Black Lick, Pa.

Hedda Gabler, with Nance O'Neil (Mutual)—"We are sorry we ran this picture. Some of our patrons asked for their money back."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Melissa of the Hills, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A fair production. Star quite popular here. Business good."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Pawn Shop, with Charlie Chaplin (Mutual)—"Picture good. Business better."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Highest Bid, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Very good picture. Business fair."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up and Miss Jackie of the Navy, both with Margarita Fischer (Mutual)—"Wonderful pictures for grown-ups and children. We play such pictures on Fridays when we get the school children for matinee as well as evening."—S. C. Allen, Millard Fillmore Theater, East Aurora, N. Y.

The Cure, with Charlie Chaplin (Mutual)—"The best Chaplin I have run to date."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

American Maid, with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—"A very good picture. Satisfied all. Very good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

PARAMOUNT

The Price Mark, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Good drama and clean thrills."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

Fatty at Coney Island, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"A big hit, with one laugh after another."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

The Trouble Buster, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Pleased everybody. The kind of picture people say leaves a good taste after seeing it."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

The Amazons, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A tom-boy story. Good of its kind but not what most people like to see. Miss Clark does good work."—John T. Cliff, Elite Theater, Mt. Pleasant, Utah.

Oh Doctor, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"A poor production, not a laugh in the two reels. Patrons displeased."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Sapho, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"A fine production. Star great. Good drawing power."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

Hulda From Holland, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"Best of all Pickford productions. Ordinary business because we did not receive advertising matter."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

Hulda From Holland, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"A very good picture. Quaint characterization. Fair business."—J. D. Palmer, Palmer Theater, Black Lick, Pa.

The Land of Promise, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A very good picture. Satisfied our audience very well as a holiday attraction,"—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Ghost House, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"We showed this Christmas day to packed houses. Pleased all."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"A very ordinary feature."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

A Girl Like That, with Owen Moore and Irene Fenwick (Paramount)—"A fair picture. Neither star is a drawing card here. Bad weather prevented attendance."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

The Dummy, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"Jack draws better for us than his sister Mary. This play is an exceptionally good comedy drama. Business fair."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Each to His Kind, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"Not this star's best by any means. Drew very poorly."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Help Wanted, with Lois Meredith (Paramount)—"Picture good. Business poor on account of cold."—J. C. Palmer, Palmer Theater, Black Lick, Pa.

Freckles, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"This is a good one and drew well."—Cecil C. Reed, Malone Theater, Sikeston, Mo.

The Heart of Paula, with Lenore Ulrich (Paramount)—"A good picture. Fair business. Scenes laid in Mexico."—J. D. Palmer, Palmer Theater, Black Lick, Pa.

The Streets of Illusion, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"This little 'Shine Girl' always pleases my patrons."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Streets of Illusion, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"Just an ordinary program picture."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The German Retreat From the Battle of Arras (Pathe)—"We have run installments one and two. Wonderful pictures. Business more than capacity. Everybody wants to see them."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Captain Kiddo, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"A family picture, very pleasing. Good business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

In the Wake of the Huns (Pathe)—"Poor."—W. H. Coble, Liberty Theater, Bend, Oregon.

When Baby Forgot, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"A good 'kid' picture. Bad weather hurt business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

War and the Woman, with Florence La Badie (Pathe)—"Very poor. Too much war and no attention to detail."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

SELECT

Magda, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"Miss Young is as beautiful as ever. Story fair. Great photography. Drew fairly well in spite of cold weather."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

The Easiest Way, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"Business very poor. This star is a 'has been' here."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Public Be Damned, with Charles Richmond (Select)—"A play that everyone should see. The city commission would not let me advertise the title. Fair business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

TRIANGLE

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Much better than Double Trouble. I wish we could have played it first. So many disliked Double Trouble that we had a very poor house on this."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

The Bond of Fear, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"As good as money can buy. Cast is great. Good business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Devil Dodger, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A different western play. Star is a comer. Good business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Hell's Hinges, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Broke all Hart records with this as a second run. Book these re-issues."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Broadway, Arizona, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"One of the best clean comedy-dramas I have ever shown. Olive Thomas is great. Capacity business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Tar-heel Warrior, with Walt Whitman (Triangle)—"A good play. Whitman is a great character actor. Business poor on account of the weather."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Ashes of Hope, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"I think it is better than The Flame of the Yukon. Enough said."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Until They Get Me, with Pauline Starke (Triangle)—"A fairly good picture without drawing power. The star is unknown."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Maternal Spark, with Irene Hunt (Triangle)—"Not much of a picture and it did not draw."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Flame of the Yukon, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"Repeated this picture after a lapse of three months. Capacity business again. A great western."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Flame of the Yukon, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"A wonderful production, the best of its kind we have ever run. Business big."—C. M. Pfeiffer, Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Aryan, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Much larger crowds than when this was first shown here."—J. H. McDonald, Strand Theater, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Sudden Gentleman, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A pleasing picture. Average business."—J. H. McDonald, Strand Theater, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Big crowds went away pleased."—J. H. McDonald, Strand Theater, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Sawdust Ring, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"Simply fine. It is this star's first appearance here and everybody said they liked her as well if not better than Mary Pickford. Business poor on account of a snowstorm."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

UNIVERSAL

VITAGRAPH

In the Balance, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"This picture played to capacity business all week. It satisfied everyone and held up wonderfully, in spite of weather conditions. It surely proved a good drawing card and brought us more money than some of the Marguerite Clark and Mary Pickford pictures we have run recently. It is a very well produced and entertaining feature."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Within the Law, with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey (Vitagraph)—"The greatest picture I have seen or run. Business fair in bad weather."—S. C. Vale, Pictorium Theater, Dennison, Ohio.

The Girl Phillipa, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"I played this at twenty-five cents and all seem to think they got their money's worth."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Bottom of the Well, with Evart Overton (Vitagraph)—"Not much of a drawing card."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

WORLD

The Marriage Market, with June Elvidge (World)—"A good World picture. Star not popular. I advertise World pictures, which seem to get the business regardless of the star."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Maid of Belgium, with Alice Brady (World)—"A wonderful film. Miss Brady did her best work. Patrons are asking for a return date."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

Remember the Little Exhibitor

WHILE we take as much satisfaction as anybody in the fact that picture theater admission prices average a hundred and fifty per cent higher than ten years ago and are going still higher, and while, indeed, our own persistent support of that policy may have had its small effect, it is not irrelevant to remark that the picture theater business is tending to grow entirely away from its original sphere of usefulness.

Those disciples of the "legitimate" who began years ago to view with alarm the rising popularity of the picture were not far wrong in their pessimistic prognosticating. The screen, from its humble start in the back of an abandoned grocery store or barber shop, has met, conquered and passed the stage.

But all the danger does not lie in failure, and those whose aspirations lead them constantly upward often leave better opportunities unattended below. It is true that "there is always room at the top" only because so few succeed in arriving there. There certainly is not room for all who aspire to be there.

The tendency of modern production and modern advertising is to make all the exhibitors ambitious to enter the larger showmanship. Justly proud of its high estate, the film industry is turning more and more toward the decree, "There shall be but one grade of picture, but one grade of theater—and that the highest."

Perhaps there are not yet enough first class theaters, whose managers pay the highest rates for their service and collect the highest admission prices. We will be glad when there are more. But not too many; not so many that the exhibitor's life becomes a glittering, unprofitable struggle.

For, glorious as it is to operate one of the industry's special show places, the unpretentious ten cent or even five cent neighborhood house is just as useful. Perhaps it is more useful; for it caters to necessity—the cry for available wholesome entertainment. And the glittering, splendid, high-priced house represents luxury. Luxury always commands a higher price than necessity, and is more attractive; but necessity demands where luxury coaxes.

Just as the well-balanced life has in it some of luxury as well as necessity, the well-balanced industry seeks to supply the necessities as well as the luxuries, that no human wish may remain without opportunity for gratification.

The motion picture first sought only to fill the lowest niche in the scheme of good entertainment. Now it seeks to fill the highest—and succeeds. But to retain all the value of its opportunity, it must fill all the niches.

There is satisfaction in conducting an exclusive, high-priced business; but there is more profit in supplying all classes. If every picture theater charged fifty cents admission, millions of people would be back where they were a quarter century ago—without any entertainment. And then surely some genius would appear with a new kind of amusement to get their eager nickels and dimes.

Hundreds of picture theaters have closed in the last year because they were unable either to make their expenses fit their admissions or to make their admissions fit their expenses. Obviously they were the small theaters, run by small exhibitors, content with small profit but unable to get that.

The most ambitious scheme for the exaltation of the picture art must remember that small exhibitor, or it will be built upon quicksand. True ambition for the good of the industry will strive to make it fit all classes of exhibitors and all classes of patrons.

The strength of the picture lies in that very flexibility and versatility. Sacrifice those qualities for the sake of making it the highest art, and the structure is unnecessarily weakened. It IS the highest art; it is the most humble art; it is the art universal. Keep for it all those separate spheres of usefulness.

If the serving of aristocratic audiences with de luxe pictures is an attractive prospect, remember the poor whom we have always with us, and who need the picture more than do the rich. Remember the cheer that cheap pictures have brought into the lives of women—and men and children, too,—on the farms and in the slums.

There are producers competent to make wonderful pictures worthy of their high prices —and they are making them. There are other producers who should be happy in making just ordinary pictures at low prices, so that the little exhibitor can give decent shows to his humble patronage, and make at least a living wage. Perhaps it is a producer's problem, after all.

Getting Ready to Discard the Arc

IT needs little argument to prove the superiority of the incandescent lamp over the arc, for all purposes where it will do the required work equally well. For plain and fancy illumination, most of our big cities have already made the change, or are making it as fast as finances and labor conditions will permit. The average motion picture theater man, having used both in different quarters of his house and for different functions, should be quick to appreciate any opportunity to discard the spluttering, hissing, unsteady and even dangerous arc forever.

The subject of projection by incandescent lamps is not a new one to our readers, as we have followed the development of the plan quite closely. Our prediction some years ago that the project would be accomplished was followed by an editorial, March 25, 1916, and a progress report article, July 8, 1916. At that time it had become evident that success was within reach, and only technical perfection was necessary. The article we are presenting in this number promises early availability of the tungsten incandescent for practical projection, and the consequent retirement of the arc.

Without entering here into an explanation of technical details which would but repeat the substance of the article itself, we would like to emphasize the points mentioned as advantages over the arc; namely, large reduction in operating expense; better pictures with less eye fatigue due to better color and greater steadiness; reduction in wear and tear on machines due to ash from the arc; less heat in the operator's booth, and simpler control. That these are improvements in fact, and not mere claims, will be understood by all who have handled the two kinds of light-source. And that they are important improvements, too, is apparent. Reduction of operating cost is interesting to all. Better projection makes the whole show better. And the safety and satisfaction of lower temperature and great simplicity are certainly acceptable accompaniments.

It will take some little time to equip any number of the existing lamp-houses with sockets and reflectors for Mazda lamps, even after the new 750-watt 30-ampere lamp is marketed in quantities; and there is an extra piece of apparatus to be installed in the shape of a compensator. But those enterprising exhibitors who see opportunity in every new development of merit should be able to capitalize the new system, as soon as they can get it, by advertising "Projection with Mazda lamps." The public is sufficiently interested in the developments of applied science to respond to such an announcement with increased patronage.

Seek Solution of Film Shipping Problems

PICTURE INTERESTS WOULD CHANGE REGULATIONS GOVERNING TRANSPORTATION

PROPOSED revision of the regulations governing the shipment of films is contained in a letter written to F. H. Elliott of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry by W. S. Topping, assistant chief inspector of the federal bureau of explosives. The transportation committee of the association for several months has been seeking relief from the present regulations so as to protect films in transit and to safeguard the public.

Owing to the scarcity of tin and sheet-iron occasioned by war requirements, it has been found necessary to make radical changes in the specifications. The sub-committee of the transportation committee which has had this matter in charge is composed of the following:

Letter Outlines Changes

Mr. Topping's letter to Mr. Elliott follows:

"The experience of the bureau of explosives in connection with the enforcement of the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations covering the transportation of dangerous articles other than explosives by express, and the experience of the express companies indicates the necessity of revising the present regulations covering the packing of moving picture films. As a result of various conferences with sub-committees of your association I have prepared a draft of a proposed amendment to paragraph 43 of the express regulations and I have included a specification for a motion picture film container and beg to submit the same herewith.

"The records of the bureau show that there has been a tendency on the part of shippers of motion picture films to use cases too long, that is, they have been used beyond the time when they afford the protection required by the regulations.

Too Many Reels in Case

"In connection with the use of a telescope case there has been a tendency on the part of both exchanges and exhibitors to crowd too many reels of films in these cases, and coupled with the fact that many reels of film are shipped without inside cases to protect them, hazardous conditions have thus been created.

"In the use of telescope cases, although they may have originally been provided with web or leather straps, reports of our inspectors show that in the majority of instances these straps have outlived their usefulness and instead of being replaced by new straps have been permitted to continue in use, or have been replaced by the use of rope or string, thereby providing an insecure package for transportation purposes. My information indicates that the exhibitors are the principal offenders in this respect, and that although cases may be in good shape when originally shipped by exchanges, on return movements by exhibitors they are not in the same shipping condition when presented for transportation.

Metal Cans Are Scarce

"In preparing the proposed amended regulations due consideration was given to the fact that the present condition of the metal market makes it extremely difficult for exhibitors to secure at reasonable cost a proper supply of metal cans with which to enclose individual reels of films. It is our belief that each reel of film should be properly protected by a tightly closed metal or fiber can, but at the present time we do not believe it would be reasonable to include this requirement (except when packed in outside wooden containers). It should be borne in mind, however, that when the conditions in the metal market ease up, it is the intention of the Bureau of Explosives to recommend the adoption of this additional safeguard.

"It will be noted that in the proposed revised regulations we have made provision for the use of wooden packing cases complying with I. C. C. Shipping Container Specification No. 19, of which I am also enclosing a copy; provided, that each individual reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container, it being the intention to make proper provision for the transportation of bulk shipments of motion picture films and also for individual reels that it may be desired to pack in outside wooden boxes. It is understood that some exhibitors now use wooden boxes lined with metal and they may desire to continue the use of these packages. If so, full description as to the character of the box, etc., should be submitted to the bureau of explosives for further consideration.

"It will also be noted that we are providing for the ordinary shipments of moving picture films from exchanges to exhibitors in a metal case that is lined with hard fiberboard at least one-eighth of an inch thick or with some other equivalent insulating material which must be approved for this purpose by the bureau of explosives. In view of the various kinds of insulating material outside of hard fiberboard, it has been deemed desirable to afford sufficient latitude to enable manufacturers to provide satisfactory cases.

"It will be further noted that hinged metal cases are provided for, but the method of fastening must be by a strong metal hasp fitting over a staple or eye bolt and provided with a permanent non-detachable catch.

Changes Effective February 1

"With respect to the telescope case which may be either round, square or rectangular, it will be noted that the use of a web or leather strap is to be prohibited, and the method of fastening is by the use of a strong positive mechanical device made of metal, and this device must be approved by the bureau of explosives, both as to design and construction.

"It will be still further noted that it is not contemplated that these revised regulations will take effect until February 1, 1918, which means that all containers purchased subsequent to that date must comply with the new requirements, and that the present supply of shipping containers may be used until September 1, 1918, provided they are in good shipping condition and are securely closed, and that telescope cases are provided with leather or web straps; the use of rope or cord is absolutely forbidden.

"It is respectfully suggested that this matter be given as wide publicity as possible and that any criticisms or objections to the proposed rule be filed at the office of the Bureau of Explosives, 30 Vesey Street, New York City, not later than January 15, 1918. Due consideration will be given to all protests and we shall also be glad to receive suggestions."

Changes Are Suggested

The following explains in detail the proposed amended paragraph 43 of the present film shipment rules:

(a) "Motion picture films must be packed in spark proof metal boxes or cans complying with Specification No. 32. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) "Motion picture films may also be packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 400 pounds."

Shipping Container Specification No. 32:

1. "Cans or cases must be made of sheet iron not less than 0.02 inch thick. These cans or cases must be lined throughout with hard fiber board at least one-eighth inch thick, or with some other equivalent insulating material approved for this purpose by the bureau of explosives.

2. "Covers may be permanently attached to metal boxes, cases or cans by not less than two hinges which must be securely riveted, or they may be slip covers, closely fitting. The covers must be lined with insulating material of the same character and thickness as required for the body of the container.

3. "Hinged covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body, and lap over or inside the body not less than seven-eighths inch on all sides. A strong metal hasp must fit over staple or eye bolt, and must be provided with a permanent non-detachable catch to engage in staple or eye bolt.

4. "Telescope or slip covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body and lap down over or inside the body not less than 3 inches (except that for a one-reel box the lap may be 2 inches). Telescope or slip covers must be secured to cans or cases by a strong, positive, mechanical device, made of metal. This device must be approved by the bureau of explosives, both as to design and construction.

5. "Each outside metal container must be plainly marked 'Complies with I. C. C. Specification 32,' or if desired this marking may be indicated by a symbol consisting of a rectangle as follows:

I. C. C. NO. 32.

"The letters and figures in this symbol must be at least one-half inch high.

"When offered for shipment the package must also be plainly marked 'Motion Picture Films' as required by the I. C. C. Regulations for the particular article contained therein."

Note.—Shipping containers complying with Rule 43 (a) effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to February 1, 1918, may be used for the shipment of motion picture films until September 1, 1918, provided they are securely closed and in good condition, and provided futher, that if fitted with telescopic covers, the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body. Leather or web straps, if used, must be in good condition and tightly fastened—string or rope must not be used.

Constance Talmadge In Los Angeles

Star of Select Pictures Arrives on Coast and Begins Work Under the Direction of Rollin Sturgeon

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, comedienne star in Select Pictures, recently returned to Los Angeles, after an absence of two years, and has commenced work in the Morosco studio on her forthcoming production, "The Shuttle." Rollin Sturgeon is directing Miss Talmadge in this picture. As in her former stellar releases, "Scandal," "The Honeymoon," and "The Studio Girl," she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and the picture will be distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

Constance Talmadge in "The Studio Girl," a Select release.

Miss Talmadge's arrival was made the occasion for a tumultuous welcome to the young screen star. Among those who greeted her were Dorothy Gish, from the Griffith studio; Mildred Harris of Bluebird, Mrs. Gish, T. L. Tally, proprietor of the Broadway Theater at Los Angeles; B. E. Loper, branch manager of Select's Los Angeles exchange; Mrs. Harlan, Mrs. George Seigman, Fred Turner, Bennie Zeidman, Al Cohen, Ed Durling of the Telegraph, Tom Geraghty, Pat Dowling, Paul Conlon and a host of other friends and admirers. Bouquets were showered upon her and the cameras clicked merrily.

In "The Shuttle," Miss Talmadge portrays a young, high-spirited girl of New York's smartest social set who goes abroad to rescue a sister from an unfortunate matrimonial alliance. While work is proceeding on this latest Constance Talmadge production at the Morosco studio in the west, the cutting and titling of her Select Picture, "The Studio Girl," is rapidly nearing completion in the east.

Heroland Reproduced for Film Play

When Norma Talmadge begins work within the next few days on her next production "By Right of Purchase" the interior of the big Talmadge studio at 318 East Forty-eighth street, New York, will have been transformed into an exact reproduction of Heroland, the great patriotic bazaar held recently at Grand Central Palace.

Carpenters and property men working in day and night shifts spent four weeks in erecting this enormous set which occupies the entire main floor of the studio. For the background the scene painters provided a magnificent vista of New York harbor and the Statue of the Goddess of Liberty.

"By Right of Purchase" is a society photodrama in which Miss Talmadge portrays the role of a wife purchased by her husband's wealth. Charles Miller will direct the picture which will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck through Select.

Ince Is Ideal Host at Christmas

Christmas at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Los Angeles is always observed with considerable ceremony and the latest Christmas was no exception to the rule, Monday, the day before Christmas, was the occasion of the customary spread in one of the biggest stages and to which every one employed in or about the studio was invited. This year, Wm. S. Hart, the Thomas H. Ince star in Artcraft pictures, was the master of ceremonies. To him fell the pleasurable task of making the presentation speech when the gift of the entire force to Mr. Ince—a handsome mink-lined auto coat, robe and full equipment—was presented to the producer. E. H. Allen, general manager of the Ince studios, received a handsome golf set. A splendid orchestra dispensed music for the dance and a large assemblage enjoyed to the utmost the feast and the general good time.

Kaufman Is Officer

Al Kaufman, who has been studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at No. 130 West Fifty-sixth street, New York, is now second Lieutenant in the Signal Corps.

Olive Thomas is starred in "Betty Takes a Hand." Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgewick in a scene from "The Man Above the Law." Both are Triangle productions.

After New Production Record

Triangle Directors Start New Year With Plans for Executing Exceptional Schedule of New Pictures

STIMULATED by the exceptional production schedule set by General Manager H. O. Davis, the Triangle studios at Culver City opened the New Year with a burst of speed.

The first week of 1918 has seen four new stories started and four exceptional pictures completed as the old year died. Four directors are waiting for stories and one director, Cliff Smith, maker of Western thrillers, is putting the finishing touches to his latest Roy Stewart vehicle.

E. Mason Hopper, whose last feature was "Her American Husband," a romance of the Orient, has begun shooting on a seven-reel feature by E. Magnus Ingleton, the title of which has not been announced. Among the Triangle favorites included in Director Hopper's cast are Alma Rubens, Joe King, Francis McDonald, Jean Hersholt and Nellie Anderson.

Director Frank Borzage, with two well-known eastern actors in his cast, has begun work on "The Shoes That Danced," a screen adaptation of John Moroso's Metropolitan Magazine story of the same name, declared by Editor-in-chief Julian Johnson to be one of the most interesting stories bought by the department in some time. Jack Cunningham did the continuity. This is a story in which the leading characters are gangsters and it touches on life in the underworld. An unusual feature is that the villain attends a masquerade ball disguised as Charlie Chaplin.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton has started work on a subject titled "A Soul in Trust." This is an original story by one of the staff authors, Catherine Carr, and deals with society life in Virginia and Washington, D. C. Belle Bennett is the star of this feature.

Thomas N. Heffron is working on a water subject called "The Sea Panther," a tale of pirates of the Caribbean Sea, written by Kenneth B. Clarke, well-known Saturday Evening Post author. In this picture William Desmond will be seen.

Director Cliff Smith, Triangle western expert, is putting the finishing touches to the latest vehicle of the cowboy star, Roy Stewart, "Keith of the Border."

Four Triangle pictures completed in the last week include "Real Folks," directed by Walter Edwards; "Captain of His Soul," a screen adaptation of Eleanor Kinkade's magazine story, "Shackles," directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton; the magazine story, "Little Red Decides," in which Director Jack Conway is said to have obtained some wonderful scenes between the child actress, Barbara Connolly, and the Chinese cook; and "The Hopper," from Meredith Nicholson's Red Book Magazine story of the same name, on which Thomas N. Heffron handled the megaphone.

The Triangle directors who are waiting to begin work on new subjects are Jack Dillon, Raymond Wells, Jack Conway and Walter Edwards.

Praise for Fairbanks-Hart Reissues

The Triangle re-issues of Hart and Fairbanks' features are constantly bringing comments from exhibitors that indicate the unusual drawing power of these productions.

Exhibitors express great confidence in the box-office value of these re-issues by re-booking them, after having shown them for a full run when originally released. In referring to the Fairbanks' re-issue, "The Lamb," released September 30, the manager of the Colonial Theater, at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, states, "This was the fifth repeat on this picture and it played to more business than the first time." With reference to "The Disciple," featuring Hart, re-issued September 16, the same exhibitor said, "This feature played to 60 per cent more business than when first shown."

New Picture for Mary Pickford

Activities on Mary Pickford's next picture to be released by Artcraft following "Stella Maris," have finally been commenced in San Francisco as a result of special arrangements made by the local police to take care of the crowds that daily storm the locations. The title of the new picture is "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley" by Frances Marion, based on the novel by Belle K. Maniates.

Soldiers See Big Patriotic Film

"For the Freedom of the World," Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser's stirring screen spectacle, thrilled and delighted Ohio's boys in khaki at Camp Sherman last Saturday and Sunday. Thanks to the Cleveland News and Sunday Leader and the enterprise and courtesy of H. A. Bandy, Cleveland branch manager for Goldwyn Pictures, the production, which is destined to have a tremendous appeal everywhere, was screened in each of the nine Y. M. C. A. huts that dot the camp.

Makes Personal Bow

Madge Kennedy recently for the first time made a personal appearance in conjunction with her newest Goldwyn starring vehicle, "Nearly Married." The Eighty-first Street Theater, New York, was crowded to welcome the comedienne, who is called "the 'find' of the season." Miss Kennedy made a brief speech, frequently interrupted by applause.

Prepares for Biggest Year of Industry

WILLIAM FOX EXPANDS PRODUCTION FACILITIES TO MEET LARGER DEMANDS

PREPARING for what he believes will be one of the biggest years in the history of the motion picture industry, William Fox has enlarged his already vast studios in the east and west.

A little over two years ago, in December, 1915, Mr. Fox sent his first company of motion picture players to Los Angeles. William Farnum headed the pioneer organization of about thirty persons. Now the Fox Film Corporation has expanded in California from a concern originally covering less than an acre of ground to one owning five acres in Hollywood, fifteen on Western avenue and ten acres on location at Silver Lake, Fernando Valley and Chatsworth.

Where there were at first only two stages, Mr. Fox now has eight in constant use, and will undoubtedly have to build more within the near future if the present expansion continues. To reach this high state of development Fox Film Corporation spent more than $1,000,000 during the first year following its invasion of the coast.

Increases Eastern Studios

The Fox forces now have working regularly on the coast four dramatic companies and five comedy companies, in addition to the periodic production of such spectacular productions as "Cleopatra," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Babes in the Woods," "Treasure Island," "The Spy," "Du Barry," and others.

Mr. Fox also has expanded in the east. He has taken over the former Victor studio at 638 West Forty-third street, New York City, and already has a company working there. The acquisition was necessitated by crowded conditions existing at the five studios in New Jersey which have been operated during the past year.

"The surface hasn't yet been scratched," declared Mr. Fox, when asked for his view of moving picture activities in the year to come. "At the beginning of 1917 I said the possibilities of the film industry were unlimitable; at the beginning of 1918 I say it again, with even more conviction. I expect 1918 to show great progress and achievement in film production. I will never be satisfied until every man, woman and child who has legs to carry him becomes a regular patron of moving pictures."

Wallingford Creator with Vitagraph

George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester Write "The Wild Strain" for Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman

THE Chesters—George Randolph and Lillian—will be represented on the Vitagraph program by "The Wild Strain," the Blue Ribbon Feature announced for release the week of January 14. Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman playing opposite her, is featured in this five-reel production which was directed at the western Vitagraph studio by William Wolbert.

"The Wild Strain," is one of the best stories the Chesters have written, combining a delicate satire with sharply drawn dramatic incidents, and the screen version is declared to be fully in keeping with the original story.

Nell Shipman, as the daughter of a grim, prim family who has inherited the daring and recklessness of her eighth great grandparent, a bandit, has been given a splendid vehicle for her return to the Vitagraph program. She shows to just as good advantage as she did in "God's Country and the Woman" and there is just enough humor in her part to permit her to show the lighter side of her artistic ability. As the daredevil who takes the place of the circus bareback rider, and in long satin skirts, careens around the circus ring, she appears in one of her most attractive phases.

Miss Shipman is a trained athlete, being a splendid wrestler, boxer and swimmer, and a fine horsewoman. All of her talents are brought into play in "The Wild Strain."

A complete circus was used by Director Wolbert in making the picture and the night scenes under the "big top" are said to be among the most effective lightings ever put on the screen.

Nell Shipman, Vitagraph star, as she appears in "The Wild Strain."

Good Cast Supports Madge Kennedy

Madge Kennedy's latest vehicle, "Our Little Wife," the Goldwyn picturization of Avery Hopwood's stage success, is rapidly nearing completion at the Goldwyn Fort Lee studios. Miss Kennedy, whose work in "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married" stamped her the screen's leading comedienne, is surrounded by a notable cast in "Our Little Wife." Her leading man, George Forth, who portrays the role of Herb, the loving but jealous husband of Dodo (Madge Kennedy), has done very creditable work in several screen productions made on the coast, and previous to acting before the camera was entrusted with a number of important roles in Broadway productions. William Davidson, as Dr. Elliott, who admires Dodo, much to his wife's discomfiture, has given a good account of himself before the camera. Wray Page has the role of Mrs. Elliott, whose one aim in life is to make hubby forget other women exist. Kempton Greene is Tommy, the poet. The role of Bobo, the "goat" of it all, is in the hands of Walter Hiers, who was a vaudeville artist before his advent on the screen. Marguerite Marsh, sister of the famous Mae, is Angie in "Our Little Wife." Her two years' work with Raymond Hitchcock and comedy work on the screen have made her a comedienne of no mean talent. She has appeared in a number of other Goldwyn Pictures.

Scenes from two Paralta offerings, Bessie Barriscale in "Madam Who," and J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man."

Paralta Announces Release Dates

Sets Third Production for January 15 and Will Present One Feature Every Two Weeks Thereafter

SINCE the announcement was made that arrangements had been consummated between Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the distribution of Paralta Plays through the Hodkinson Corporation, exhibitors throughout the country have been enthusiastic in booking these productions, which have been so widely heralded, and which, they are pleased to state have, according to the critics, lived up to what has been said about them in the advertisements.

Realizing that exhibitors, in many cases, would be compelled to rearrange their booking schedules to make room for the presentation of Paralta Plays on their program, Carl Anderson decided that the first two productions, "A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star, and Bessie Barriscale's starring vehicle, "Madam Who," would be placed on the market without a regular release date, in order to give the exhibitors time to arrange their bookings.

In practically all of the larger cities throughout the country, and in a great number of the smaller towns contracts have now been closed for the presentation of these productions, and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation now is able to announce definite dates for release of the future offerings. The third Paralta Play to be presented will be "His Robe of Honor," from the pen of Ethel and James Dorrance, in which Henry B. Walthall will be seen as the star. This production will be released on January 15, and in the future one Paralta Play will be released every two weeks. In "His Robe of Honor" Henry B. Walthall will be seen in the role of an unscrupulous lawyer, a tool in the hands of a great grafting political machine, whose nobler nature is awakened by the refining influence of a young woman of high ideals, and who at last turns on the "gang" and surmounting all obstacles that are thrown in his way, becomes an upright judge of the Supreme Court.

"Broken Ties" Is New Brady Film

"Broken Ties" is the title of the World-Picture Brady-Made in which June Elvidge will next appear as the star player. Arthur Ashley is to be featured with Miss Elvidge in this photoplay, in which the heroine, finding herself in a harrowing situation, hemmed in from every side, takes the crisis into her own hands and works out her destiny unaided.

Bluebird Features Are Finished

"The Highest Card" and "Hungry Eyes" Are Ready for Exhibitors—Lucas Starts New Picture

"THE Highest Card" and "Hungry Eyes," the last of Rupert Julian's productions for the Bluebird series, with Ruth Clifford the star and Monroe Salisbury her featured leading man, have been completed and Wilfred Lucas has undertaken the screen management of Miss Clifford and Mr. Salisbury. "The Highest Card" has not been definitely dated up for release, but "Hungry Eyes" has been set for distribution February 18.

Elliott J. Clawson's story, "His Wife in Arizona," formed the basis of the Julian production, "Hungry Eyes." The picture was filmed at Seven Oaks, Cal., where the company remained to create "The Highest Card" amid the picturesque surroundings that nature has furnished in the foothills of the Sierra Nevadas. Mr. Julian, besides directing, played an important role in support of Miss Clifford. Others in the company included W. H. Bainbridge, H. W. Barrows, Arthur Travers, Gretchen Lederer and Reta Pickering.

Wilfred Lucas is now engaged in filming "The Heart of the Desert," with Miss Clifford and Mr. Salisbury leading the cast. Bess Meredyth furnished the scenario, basing her work on Honore Willsie's book of the same title depicting a romance of Indian life, when a girl is taken into the wilds to recover her health through living like the Indians do, close to nature. Val Paul, Gretchen Lederer, Monte Blue, Al Sears, Princess Neola and Dark Cloud (the last mentioned being full-blooded Indians) will comprise the supporting cast.

Will Present Big War Spectacle

Metro Pictures Corporation announces its acquisition of the much sought after "Lest We Forget," the stupendous war spectacle in which the famous French beauty, Rita Jolivet, is starred. The deal, which was consummated some weeks ago between the original producers, Count de Cippico and J. L. Kempner, and Richard A. Rowland and W. E. Atkinson, of Metro, gives Metro the entire rights to the big photodrama.

Metro regards the picture as the most powerful and significant that has yet been made around the world war, and intends to present it soon at one of the large New York theaters as a Metro special production de luxe.

Begins Filming "Over the Top"

Vitagraph Starts Production of Empey Story with the Sergeant Himself in Leading Role with Lois Meredith

SERGEANT ARTHUR GUY EMPEY, Lois Meredith and a big company of Vitagraph artists started work on Wednesday, January 2, on "Over the Top." As announced last week, this melodrama, so big with promise to exhibitors, has for its basis Empey's epoch-making war book, "Over the Top," which has been read by over two and a half million persons.

Albert W. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, is supervising the production of this feature with the assistance of Wilfrid North, production manager of the eastern studios, and Sergeant Empey, whose intimate knowledge of trench life will assure the accuracy of the settings and the faithfulness of the production.

The telegrams of congratulation that have poured into the Vitagraph offices since the announcement of the signing of the sergeant, bear witness to the extraordinary box office value of Empey.

No individual has burst into fame and popularity in any measure comparable to the tremendous interest and enthusiasm that Sergeant Empey has aroused. Newspapers all over the country are syndicating his war articles. His lectures to capacity audiences have called for return engagements time and again in the big centers of the country. "Over the Top" itself has broken all records in point of sales that have been the boast of the book publishing business for the last forty years.

Among the messages of congratulation received by the Vitagraph Company as a result of the announcement of the signing of Sergeant Empey are many from the smaller localities, which prove that Empey is known in every corner of the country and that his name has become a household by-word.

Sergeant Empey's lecturing engagements carry him through the entire year, so solidly is he booked. A special arrangement with his lecture manager, Lee Keedick, has given him a sufficient leave from his lecture engagements to make the picture, but immediately upon the completion of the picture he will resume his lecture tour.

This means that coincident with the Vitagraph production of "Over the Top" there will be four distinct nation-wide advertising and publicity drives, all of them building capacity business for exhibitors.

First, there will be the tremendous advertising and publicity campaign made by Vitagraph on behalf of its production.

Second, there will be the Empey lecture tour, which will carry him over the entire country.

Third, there will be the simultaneous publication in newspapers all over the country of his syndicated articles.

Fourth, there will be the continued drive by C. P. Putnam & Sons, his book publishers, on "Over the Top" and on Empey's new book, "First Call, or Guide Posts to Berlin," which was published on January 5.

Empey's book, "Over the Top," serves as a background for the melodrama that has been written for the screen production. Robert Gordon Anderson, Empey's literary advisor and close personal friend, has written the scenario, and he has drawn on Empey's wealth of experiences for the incidents that will furnish the big thrills of the picture. A love story has been woven into the play and an outline of the scenario shows that "Over the Top," in its eight or nine reels, will contain as many melodramatic thrills as are usually expected in a fifteen episode serial.

S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theater, Indianapolis, and a showman of repute in the middle west, enthusiastic over the way "The Cinderella Man" was received at his spacious playhouse, sent the following telegram to the Goldwyn New York office:

"Mr. Samuel Goldfish,

"Pres. Goldwyn Pictures Corporation,

"New York City.

"Sincerest and heartiest congratulations to yourself, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Mae Marsh, George Loane Tucker, the director, and supporting cast on the production of "The Cinderella Man." It is an artistic triumph and deserves a niche in the gallery of screen classics. With "The Cinderella Man" Mae Marsh has found the door to the heart of youth and carried the magic of Christmas to the shadows.

"S. BARRET McCORMICK,

"Managing Director, Circle Theater."

Metro Acquires "The House of Mirth"

Motion picture rights of Edith Wharton's famous novel, "The House of Mirth," have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Emmy Wehlen, and the screen version will be placed in production at an early date under the direction of Albert Capellani. "The House of Mirth," a book that was the talk of two continents when it appeared, was given a stage presentation with Fay Davis in the stellar role of Lily Bart. June Mathis and Albert Capellani have prepared the screen version, which will be given a careful and elaborate setting.

Surprises Abound in Screen Drama

NOTED PRODUCER SAYS SOME UNCERTAINTY EXISTS IN STAGE PLAYS

BY THOMAS H. INCE

THE silent drama has, in its way, the same element of surprise, the same unexpectedness, as the spoken drama; and it is this that makes the life of a producer one continuous round of excitement, ending in dyspepsia.

From the first inception of the idea of a picture, until it is finally released, there is the same uncertainty as to how the public will receive your effort as there is to the first night's verdict on a play. The guess work starts with the selection of the script and the first payment made to the author. The stage producer is well aware that styles in plays change as quickly as fashions in women's millinery. The tide may be going out, or at the slack, or on the turn.

Idea Must Be on Time

The stage producer may, in following a popular vogue, be the last man in. He may have produced the best costume of many seasons, only to find that overnight audiences all over the country have tired of sock and buskin; or, after seasons of successful farce, he may launch a farce so hilarously absurb that it is hard to subdue hysteria at rehearsals, only to discover on the opening night that the dear public has decided to live in sackcloth and ashes and to weep bitter tears for years to come.

The same conditions obtain with the screen producer. His idea may be belated or it may be too previous. The stage producer watches his rehearsals eagerly to discover, if possible, what points are likely to please. The motion picture producer views the first "rushes" of a picture just as eagerly to anticipate the popular verdict.

In Doubt Until Opening

Few persons who are not associated with the film industry have any idea of the elimination, editing, reconstructing and discarding that takes place before a film is offered to the public. Every episode is scanned as closely as the stage producer follows a play from its first reading to its final dress rehearsal. Both the stage and screen producer are entirely in the dark until the lights are up at the end of the first public showing.

In my own career as a producer I have learned one thing: that I am not infallible. Some pictures I was sure were swans turned out geese, and the depised ugly goslings developed into swans. I have learned, too, that there is a certain type of play that the public loudly demands, but never pays to see. In this class may be placed the allegorical, the symbolical, the diabolical, and those pictures which are so obviously moral that they cease to be interesting.

Becomes Star Over Night

If the play itself furnishes the everlasting unexpected, the actors are even more surprising. One of my present stars, after several years of conscientious work, practically unheeded by the average theater-goer, climbed to a secure position in stardom overnight.

I refer to Charles Ray. In "The Coward" Mr. Ray portrayed the role of a nervous, overwrought youth with such insight and appealing truth that the studio was deluged with inquiries as to his past career; and yet Mr. Ray had been doing equally good work for two seasons—but his artistic characterizations had created little comment. The same is true of Dorothy Dalton. While she had been giving artistic interpretations of parts for some little time, suddenly she became a star by her wonderful support of William S. Hart in "The Disciple."

Notice Small Actors

In "Civilization," the small actors—"bits," so to speak—seemed to attract the most attention. Anyone who has seen this picture will recollect the quaint figure of a little girl playing with a duck, even after the submarines and the aeroplanes are forgotten. The child is the daughter of one of my associates, and the incident in which she figures was interpolated when her father and I had watched her one day playing with her toys and having a good time all to herself.

Comedy Always Welcome

I notice, too, that audiences are very receptive to humor. Even in tense drama a deft touch of comedy is always welcome.

There is a bit of comedy "business" in a recent picture starring Charles Ray. This story, is, in a way, a serious sociological study. A young millionaire, on a bet, lives for a few dollars a month in the most squalid section of New York. Brought into intimate relations with the very poor, the young millionaire becomes their enthusiastic champion. Now, the audiences follow with absorbed interest Ray's adventures in the underworld, and yet one simple piece of "business" is always greeted with uproarious approval. Ray is reduced to his last five cents. He has preempted a portion of a bench in the park, which he shares with two down-at-the-heels tramps for the night. The young plutocrat has invested his last nickel on three-for-five cigars, but finding them rank throws them away. The strongest and most healthy-looking tramp picks one up, but after a few puffs relinquishes the bitter struggle and tosses it into the bushes.

Sometimes comedy effects are quite unrehearsed. These are usually contributed, quite voluntarily, by the "extra." Some "extras" will act right unless severely cautioned by the director to suppress their yearnings in this direction.

Sales on "Brown of Harvard" Increase

The widespread popularity of "Brown of Harvard," both in book form and as a speaking drama, is proving an unusually strong sales argument for the film version which the George Kleine System is releasing January 10. The stage version, in which Henry Woodruff starred, enjoyed long runs in Chicago and New York, then toured the country, drawing capacity audiences.

The interest thus aroused, the Kleine salesmen point out, can be coined by exhibitors booking this film, because the millions who have read the book or seen the stage play will be attracted to the picture.

Hazel Daly, co-star with Bryant Washburn in "Skinner's Dress Suit" and other "Skinner" pictures, plays the leading feminine role. Tom Moore plays opposite her.

Vitagraph Starts Production Drive

Begins New Year with Seven Features Under Way, Among Them Guy Empey's War Story "Over the Top"

ONE of the greatest production drives in the company's history was begun by Vitagraph on January 2, when seven companies started to work on as many features. Two of these will be extra-reel productions, four will be regular Blue Ribbon features and one a fifteen-episode serial. New Year activities began simultaneously in the eastern and western studios of the company, with the result that Vitagraph now has under way probably the most widespread production campaign of any producing company in the field.

One of the most important projects undertaken is the eight-reel feature, "Over the Top," with Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, soldier-author, and Lois Meredith working under the direction of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Wilfred North, supervising director of the company.

Of equal importance is the patriotic feature which Vitagraph was selected to produce for the State of New York by the State Defense Council and which will show how New York state is dealing with the spy problem. Governor Charles S. Whitman of New York will appear in the picture, together with Corinne Griffith and Webster Campbell, two Vitagraph players. The production will be under the direction of John Robertson, with President Smith acting in an advisory capacity.

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond, who arrived on the Pacific coast Christmas Day, rested over the holidays and last Wednesday morning started work under the direction of Tom Mills in an O. Henry subject which will be released as a five-reel Blue Ribbon Feature.

Alice Joyce, with an all-star company, is working in "The Song of the Soul," a Blue Ribbon feature, under the direction of Tom Terriss. She has in her support an all-star cast including Walter McGrail, Barney Randall, Percy Standing, young Stephen Carr and Edith Reeves.

Hedda Nova, the beautiful young Russian actress, and Frank Glendon, hero of many of Vitagraph's O. Henry pictures, began work on the company's new serial, "The Woman in the Web," which will be produced in fifteen episodes under the direction of David Smith, brother of the Vitagraph president.

Harry Morey and Florence Deshon, under the direction of Paul Scardon, began work in "The Desired Woman," a Blue Ribbon feature adapted from the book of the same name by Will Harben.

Nell Shipman, with Alfred Whitman, has begun production of "The Home Trail" under the direction of William Wolbert.

In addition to the seven productions started on the first working day of the New Year, the Vitagraph company has under production "The Wooing of Princess Pat," in which Gladys Leslie is to be featured with Frank Glendon, under the direction of William P. S. Earle.

Makes "Weekly" Only for Exhibitors

Universal has put into effect its one New Year's resolution—to instill a definite purpose into its house organ, called Moving Picture Weekly. Heretofore the publication has been conducted with a view to interesting "fans" in the Universal product and its circulation has been largely gained through sales, in bulk, to various exhibitors throughout the country. These copies were, in turn, distributed by showmen to patrons of their theater to awaken interest in the Universal product as shown at the specific house thus advertised.

Under the new purpose the Moving Picture Weekly will be conducted exclusively to serve exhibitors themselves in advertising and promoting Universal's product.

Outlook for Exposition Promising

ENCOURAGING CO-OPERATION IS ASSURED FOR GRAND CENTRAL PALACE SHOW

CO-OPERATION from many sources is making the outlook for the forth-coming Motion Picture Exposition most encouraging. This exposition, which is to be thoroughly representative of the huge industry, is to be held in Grand Central Palace, Feb. 2-10, under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. These associations are receiving the support of entire sales organizations of large film companies who are to exhibit. These sales staffs have been set to work boosting the show systematically.

Exchanges Offer Help

Triangle, Pathe and others are doing their utmost, the Triangle salesmen being active with a "see us at the Show" campaign. C. B. Rice, manager of the Triangle New York exchange, said this week in referring to the matter:

"I am very much in sympathy with the idea of holding an annual motion picture exposition in New York City. I know it is the custom of other large industries to hold each year a convention and exposition where the views of the various elements in the business can be expressed and where an interchange of ideas can be made.

"It seems to me that an exposition of this kind is very beneficial to producers, distributors and exhibitors, and I am very glad to offer the help of my sales force in furthering the usefulness of this annual affair. I have asked R. D. Burdge, my assistant, as well as my salesmen, Messrs. Letts, Freund, Woody, Vargesslich, Hummell, Kessel, Smith and F. H. Price to urge all exhibitors with whom they come in contact to attend the convention and also to use their efforts in turn in advising the public in general of the exposition and to encourage a large attendance."

Berst Gives Encouragement

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., says that this meeting of the public, the exhibitor and the manufacturer, will be conducive of benefit to the entire industry.

"Pathe will be properly represented at the exposition," said Mr. Berst, "because close association with the public brings about a better understanding and consequently better business and better working conditions. The motion picture business, like any other industry is stimulated by personal touch and to meet and greet the people with whom we do business both directly and indirectly, goes a long way toward cementing friendships that are of the greatest importance in modern commercial methods.

"The people that patronize our art are too vast in number for us to visit them individually and, in accord with sound business usage express our appreciation of their support. Therefore, the next best thing is to have an 'at home' and invite the public to come and visit us. The fact that the coming exposition is representative of all branches of the industry makes of this show an official 'at home' week and the stars and officials will be there to receive the public and exhibitors and acknowledge our appreciation of the handsome support the exhibitors have given us during the past year and our gratification at the approval the public has bestowed upon our efforts to entertain.

Many Artists Will Attend

"All of the Pathe pictures now in the course of production are being made with many of our companies in the eastern studios. All of these artists have expressed their intention to be present at the exposition and every effort will be made to fittingly present them to the public. I anticipate that the coming exposition will be the greatest the industry has ever known. In it we are presenting a solidly united front and with all branches working for its success it cannot fail to be a great event in motion picture history."

Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the exposition, has accepted the offer of Manager Harold Edel of the Strand theater to have the Strand Symphony orchestra entertain during the week of the exposition.

A scene from one of Arthur D. Hotaling's comedies which are being made by Essanay, one per week being released through General Film.

One-a-Week Comedies Are Popular

Essanay has selected several dozen of the prettiest girls from a group of nearly two hundred to appear in its General Film one-a-week comedies.

That Essanay has struck a popular vein of humor in these productions by Arthur D. Hotaling is evident by the reports from both exhibitors and the General Film booking records.

The release for January 12 is "One Night," depicting the wholesale complications arising from the innocent efforts of a "gentleman drunk" to regain his hat, fallen to the sidewalk from his hotel room window. In it figure many pretty girls, alarmed in the middle of the night by the cry of "burglar," and a number of good characters that afford many laughs.

Mazda Lamps for Motion-Picture Projectors

BY L. C. PORTER, OF EDISON LAMP WORKS, IN THE "GENERAL ELECTRIC REVIEW"

The excellent qualities of the incandescent lamp promoted an investigation into the possibilities of using this type of lamp in motion-picture projectors. In the beginning of the following article is given an analysis of the difficulties encountered in successfully developing an incandescent lighting system to replace the arc-lighting system which has been commonly used. The description of the manner in which these difficulties have been surmounted, by the development of a special incandescent lamp and condenser and the addition of a spherical mirror, is very interesting. The article is concluded by a table comparing the detailed operating cost of the new incandescent lamp with that of the arc lamp and showing that the former type of lamp projector is more economical to operate than the latter.

THE inherent advantages of the incandescent lamp such as simplicity, steadiness of light, cleanliness, good color value, and lower fire risk, as well as ease of control, have made this type of lamp a most desirable light source. These advantages are obtained where Mazda lamps are used for projection purposes as well as for general lighting service.

For a long time it was thought impractical to apply Mazda lamps to large motion-picture projectors. There were three reasons for this belief:

1. The crater of the arc in common use as a light source for motion-picture projectors operates at about 130 candle-power per square millimeter; whereas the tungsten filament of a Mazda lamp at the melting point emits only 79 candle-power per square millimeter and at practical operating temperatures about 34 candle-power per square millimeter.

2. The condensers in common use utilized a solid angle of light of about 32 degrees. This angle picked up a high percentage of the light flux from an arc due to the light distribution characteristic of the arc (Fig. 1A), whereas with the nearly spherical light distribution of the Mazda lamp this became a very small proportion of the available light flux (Fig. 1B).

3. The crater of the arc is a relatively solid homogeneous light source and an image thereof projected onto the screen resulted in fairly even illumination; whereas with the filament of the Mazda lamp in back of the plano-condensers an enlarged image thereof was projected, resulting in a very streaked screen.

Great though these obstacles seemed to be, they have been overcome. The enormous difference in brilliancy of the two sources was lessened by developing a new type of Mazda lamp and a new lens system. Probably the condenser plays the greatest part in solving the problem, therefore it will be described first.

Obviously, it was highly desirable to utilize a much greater solid angle of light than was intercepted by the plano-condensers commonly used. It was found impractical to make a plano-condenser of sufficiently short focus as the thickness of the glass would be great and the curvature excessive, resulting in much spherical abberation. The difficulty was overcome by the design of a condenser somewhat similar to a semaphore lens, i. e., it was a one-piece condenser made in steps, or corrugations (Fig. 2). With this condenser a solid angle of 75 degrees was intercepted which immediately resulted in a very large increase in the amount of light flux available.

The condenser is 4⅛ in. diameter and is of 2½-6½ in. conjugate foci, meaning that the light source should be located 2½ in. back of the edge of the convex face of the condenser and the film 6½ in. ahead of the corrugated side. The former distance must be closely adhered to for best results, the the latter may be increased an inch or so without materially affecting the resultant illumination.

A further gain in illumination was obtained by the use of a spherical mirror (Fig. 3) placed in back of the light source. This arrangement practically doubled the available useful angle, making a net increase of from 32 degrees with the old plano-condensers to 150 degrees by use of the new condenser and mirror. The corrugations on the condenser also performed the further function of breaking up the filament image, resulting in a smooth and even screen illumination. The great increase in light flux thus obtained went a long way toward offsetting the difference in operating efficiencies of the arc and the Mazda lamp. To further decrease this difference the lamps were operated very close to the melting point, resulting in high brilliancy and an average life of approximately 100 hours.

Many types of lamps were tried and the one finally chosen has a filament arrangement somewhat different from those in common use. The filament consists of our helices of tungsten arranged in one plane (Fig. 5). This construction has a double advantage. First, it brings more of the filament close to the focus of the condenser; and, second, it enables the spherical mirror, when properly adjusted, to throw images of these filament coils back between the coils themselves, thus resulting in an effectually solid light source. It can be seen that careful setting of the lamp, mirror, and condenser are necessary to obtain maximum results. Fig. 6 shows these elements in their proper relative positions.

The capacity of the lamp finally chosen was 750 watts operating at 30 amperes. The determining factor was that the condenser would pick up light from a 0.4-in. square, hence the filament was designed which would place the greatest possible amount of light in that area. Low voltage (25) and high amperage are used because these call for heavier wire, and the greater the diameter of the wire the higher the temperature, hence the greater the candle-power (within certain limits) that can be obtained therefrom.

Using a 25-volt lamp some economical means of reducing the line voltage of 110 or 120 to that of the lamp became desirable. For this purpose special compensators have been designed for use on alternating-current circuits (Fig. 7). Motor-generators are used for direct-current service.

These control equipments consist of a compensator with either a rheostat, or a re-

actance control in the primary, by means of which the secondary current can be regulated very closely and exactly 30 amperes delivered to the lamp regardless of whether the primary voltage happens to be 105, 125, or any value between. An accurate ammeter on which to read the secondary current forms part of the equipment. This accurate control is of great importance. With the lamp operating at so high an efficiency as to give an average of but 100 hours life, a very small amount of over current will reduce this life materially. As the lamps are fairly expensive, it is evident that the saving in lamp renewals will soon more than offset the additional cost of accurate control equipment.

A 600-watt lamp operating at 30 volts and 20 amperes has also been developed and may be used with gasoline generator sets which are being marketed throughout the country for motion-picture work. This lamp is made in a somewhat smaller bulb than the 30-ampere lamp, thus allowing the use of a smaller condenser and a smaller mirror. This is of advantage in machines for home use, portable machines, etc., where compactness and light weight is of value. As the lamp does not exceed the Underwriters' limit of 660 watts, it may also be used on house lighting circuits, in schools, churches, etc., without special wiring. The "Compensarc" will control either the 750- or the 600-watt lamp.

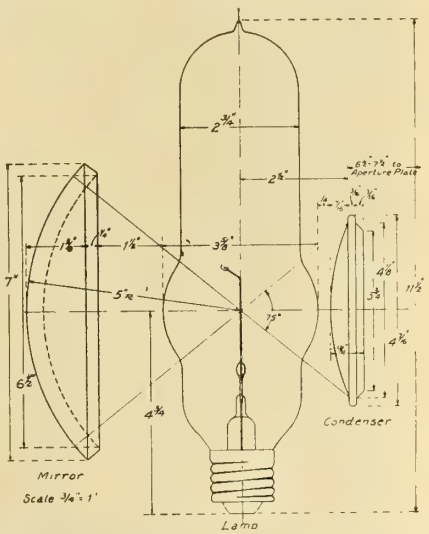

Fig. 6. 30-ampere motion-picture lamp, corrugated condenser, and spherical mirror in correct operating positions.

After the application of Mazda lamps to motion-picture projectors had become possible, the various manufacturers of motion-picture machines developed new housings containing the new lamp, condenser, and mirror with proper means for adjustment. One of these furnishes two lamps in the housing. Each is carefully focused before the picture is started and then in case one burns out the other can be quickly substituted with practically no interruption to the picture. These housings (Fig. 8) are interchangeable with the old arc-lamp housings previously used. Another type of housing is being built which fastens onto the front of the arc-lamp housing.

Not satisfied with the good projection obtained by the means which has been described, investigation was carried further. It was found that by increasing the diameter of the objective lens a still greater increase in illumination resulted, approximately as given in Table I which is based on an arbitrary standard of 600 lumens for the 5½-in. objective of 2½-in. aperture.

Objective lenses in common use with arc lamps are 1½ in. and 1¾ in. in diameter. There are available standard lenses of 2½-in. diameter. These latter lenses will transmit exactly double the illumination of a 1½-in. lens, and it is highly desirable to use the larger lens when changing from an arc to Mazda lamp in large motion-picture projectors.

source for the motion-picture machine has the following advantages:

1. Large reduction in operating cost as given in Table II.
2. Better pictures giving less eye fatigue, due to better color and greater steadiness of light.
3. Reduction in wear and tear on machines and film, due to ash from carbon arc.
4. Less heat in the operator's booth.
5. Simpler control.

The 750-watt lamp will replace any alternating-current arc on the market and direct-current arcs up to 40 amperes and will project pictures 12 feet wide on a white plaster of cloth screen, or 16-foot pictures on a metallic, fiber, or glass screen.

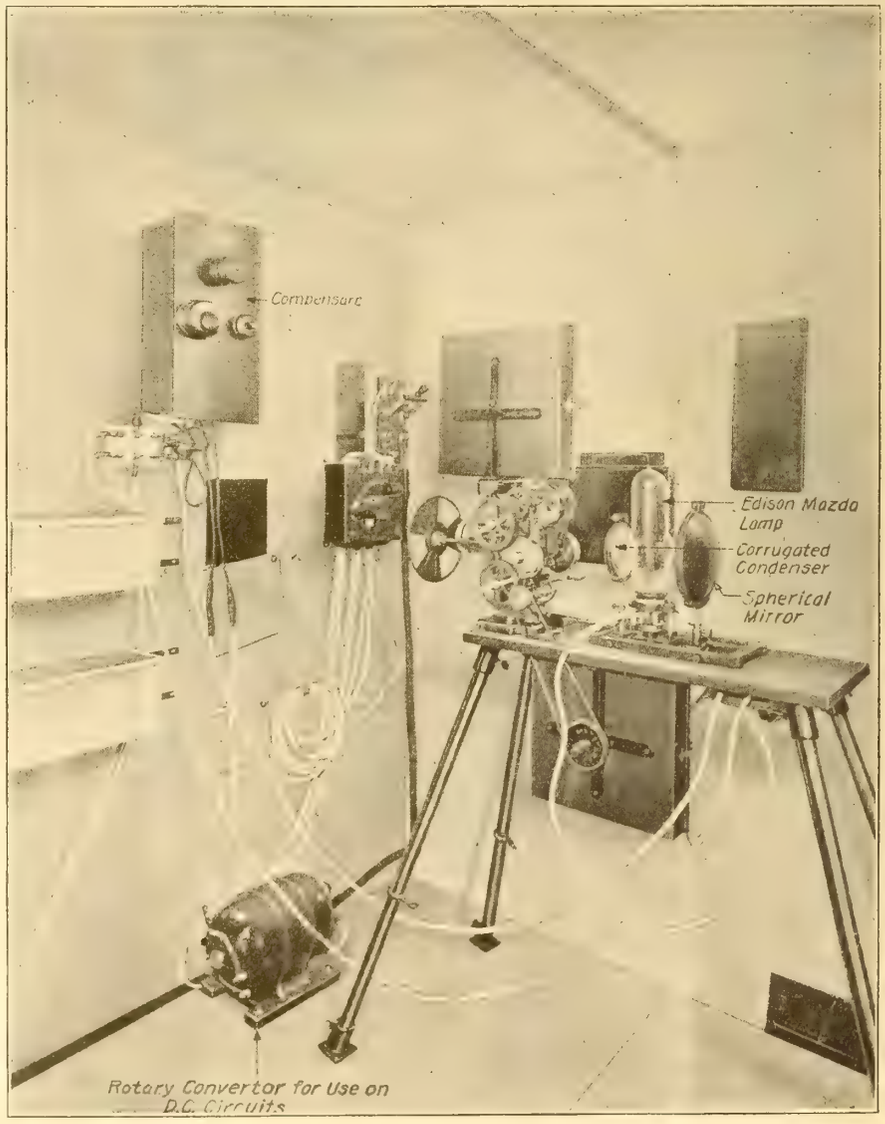
Novel Screen Play Is "Dodging a Million"

The combined artistry of Edgar Selwyn and Aubrey M. Kennedy, the authors, and George Loane Tucker, the director, of Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn production, "Dodging a Million," promises to make this mystery play of love and thrills one of the few really novel screen offerings of recent years. Mabel Normand, Tom Moore and Armand Cortes have important parts in this picture.

Newspapers Praise "Cinderella Man"

Cleveland newspapers are displaying the same enthusiasm over Mae Marsh and "The Cinderella Man" as was evinced by New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago. The three leading dailies give star, story and production the highest praise.

Cleveland Plain Dealer: One of the best Christmas bills of the city. "The Cinderella Man" ranks among the most pleasing of Goldwyn productions. It is an ideal offering, and timely, too.



Cleveland Press: Beautifully done, and holds the interest of both youth and grown-up.

Cleveland Leader: Amusingly staged and delightfully well acted. Most acceptable as a holiday offering. Mae Marsh has never had a more sympathetic role. A laughable and appealing picture; the best Mae Marsh has made for Goldwyn.

Anatole France Pleased

Goldwyn has just received from Anatole France, author of the famous novel, "Thais," a glowing letter of appreciation setting forth his pleasure at learning that the picturization of his stirring love story has been successfully completed, with Mary Garden in the role she made celebrated in opera.

Goldwyn is arranging to send a special print of "Thais" to Paris so that the author may see the picture shortly after its release in this country.

Washington D. C. Gets New Film Building

MATHER BUILDING TO HOUSE EXCHANGES OF NATIONAL CAPITAL

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, of General Enterprises, Inc., who returned from Washington, D. C., this week, has issued a statement to the effect that the project of erecting a new film structure to be known as the Mather building in that city, has reached a successful conclusion. Mr. Sawyer promoted and closed the deal whereby the city of Washington will have a special building exclusively devoted to the needs of the many exchanges now located in various parts of the city. He gave out the following information regarding the details of the project:

City Officials Agree

"The uncertainties regarding the housing of film exchanges under one roof in Washington were removed this week and despite numerous rumors and newspaper articles, the work will be carried on uninterruptedly. It has been stated that the United States Government intended taking over the new Mather building, to be located on G street, near Ninth, in Washington, for war offices.

"This matter was definitely settled at a meeting attended by the prominent exchange managers of Washington, A. C. Mather of Chicago, builder of the new structure, and myself, representing General Enterprises, Inc., which organization promoted the scheme. The terms of the new building regulations in Washington state that practically every film exchange in the city will have to move out of its present quarters on or before January 1, 1918, although this order was informally suspended two weeks ago to read 'April 1, 1918,' instead of 'January 1, 1918.' At a conference between the city authorities, Mr. Mather and myself, arrangements were made whereby the exchanges may remain in their present quarters until the new Mather building is completed—it being proven conclusively to the fire marshal that the structure will be a model of safety and convenience for the exchanges.

Ready Next Spring

"The new Mather building is being built on the site of the old Washington Rifles Armory at 916 G street, N. W. The former building has been torn down, excavating is now in process, and the new building will be ready late in the spring. The structure will be ten stories high, with a terra cotta and tile front, and will be a handsome addition to Washington's already large list of beautiful business edifices.

"There are two separate entrances on G street—one to be used exclusively for the film exchanges, with elevator service, telegraph offices in the lobby and other conveniences; the other entrance on the west side of the building will be used exclusively for the first two floors, to be utilized as bowling alleys and billiard rooms.

Well Suited for Purpose

"The Mather building is particularly well suited for film exchange business, as there is a twelve-foot passageway on the east side of the building, a thirty-foot areaway in the back, and on the west side, the church buildings are only three stories high, leaving the upper seven stories of the Mather building with all outside rooms.

"A new system of fire protection in the vaults will be installed—the vaults being placed against the outside of the building and arranged in series—each vault holding about five hundred reels. Direct outside ventilation will be installed, having an inlet of outside air at the lower part of the vault, and large screened openings at the top to allow

A night scene from the Mutual Signal photo novel, "The Lost Express," which is meeting with success in theaters that do not usually present serials.

Serial Goes Well in Neighborhood Houses

The popularly accepted theory that the motion picture serial is in demand only at the downtown and transient theater has been proved to be without foundation by the bookings on "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal photonovel starring Helen Holmes, which has been shown in scores of high class neighborhood theaters with exceptional box office success. Neighborhood houses in big and small cities have shown "The Lost Express" and are showing it to large audiences. Exhibitors have found that, despite previous theories, the neighborhood crowd wants its screen thrills as much as it ever did and there is little difference, so far as the demand for hair-raising melodrama is concerned between the patronage of the transient house and the theater which draws its patrons from a quiet neighborhood.

Helen Holmes has lived up to her reputation as a sure-fire box office attraction in "The Lost Express." The success of the production proved that the public wants to see her in a particular sort of melodramatic photoplay—that she has built up a reputation as "the railroad girl" which is so closely identified with her screen personality that the patrons of the motion picture theater want her in railroad roles.

the egress of air. For the exchanges wishing to have their own projections, a large flue is being installed, running from the basement to the roof, which will be used for the moving picture booths.

Many Exchange Conveniences

"The basement is being laid out to provide many conveniences for the exchanges. A separate large projection theater, capable of seating three hundred people, will be installed at one end and at the back of the basement communicating with the freight elevators will be quarters for the express companies. Additional vaults provided in the basement will be rented to the exchanges at a nominal charge per month. These vaults can be used for storage of films that are but seldom issued.

"The location of the Mather building is one of the most desirable in Washington, as it is near a traffic and junction point, in the very center of the moving picture district.

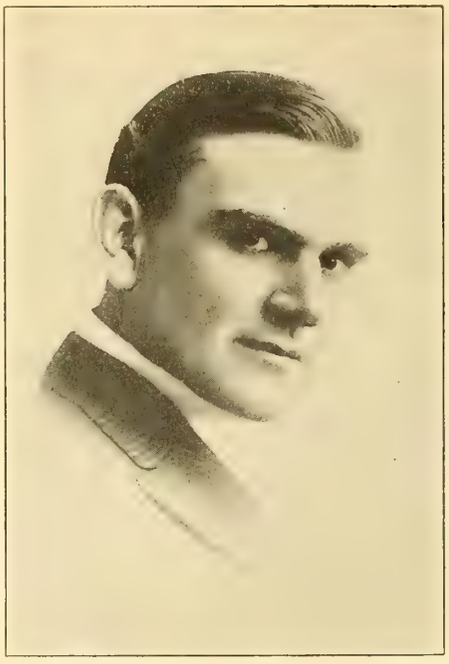
Will Cost $400,000

"The building will cost upwards of $400,000 and the final settlement of this question has caused much joy among the local exchange managers. Several of the exchanges have already signed leases for offices and it is expected that nearly every exchange in the city will take space to protect themselves against being forced out of their present quarters in April."

Unknown Author Has Money Coming

Because one of the staff of the production department at Universal City has a good memory for stories and a poor one for the names of authors, Herbert Rawlinson will soon appear in a five-reel sensation, "The Flash of Fate," that has been created on a chance of its original writer turning up at some subsequent date to claim his recompense. The announcement is made by Universal's publicity department that the amount to be paid, when the real author of the story shall bring proof of his work, will be decided by a committee of play-brokers; one to be chosen by each of the principals to the decision and a third to be nominated by the two referees thus selected.

Quits Screen to Write



Jay Dwiggins, of the Triangle-Keystone staff, has turned his activities to the dramatic end of scenario wrtiing and in the future will write five-reel dramatic stories with a light comedy vein. Dwiggins is an actor as well as an author and just recently gave up his screen career to devote his entire time to thinking up comedy situations for the Keystone comedians.

World Schedule Planned Till March

One Ready-Made Feature Per Week Will Be Released Under Production Program for Early Part of Year

THE World Film Corporation's new release sheet announces the publication of World-Pictures Brady-Made at the regular rate of one each week up to and including March 18.

The list begins with "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," the story of Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr, written by Samuel M. Weller, with many historical scenes in old New York and Washington, D. C., and a star cast including Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Arthur Ashley. Among the subordinate players are Hubert Wilke as Jacob Clingman, Pinna Nesbit as Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, Lionel Belmore as Gen. Israel Putnam, Justice Cutting as Mrs. Putnam, George MacQuarrie as Gen. George Washington, Rose Tapley as Mrs. Washington, Albert Hart as Thomas Jefferson, Jack Drumier as John Adams, Alexander Francis as Gen. Philip Schuyler, etc. This picture was directed by Arthur Ashley, with Lucien Tainguy as chief cameraman. "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" is one of a series of historical romances published by World Pictures. Its two predecessors upon this program—"The Heart of a Hero" (reflecting the life of Nathan Hale) and "Betsy Ross"—were received with such widespread favor as to encourage the producers to return to this field at stated intervals in the pursuit of material.

On January 28 Madge Evans, in "Gates of Gladness," will be the attraction. George MacQuarrie will be featured with her. Parts of this picture play are laid in the art colony around Washington Square, and other parts in Georgian Court, the superb estate of George Gould at Lakewood. Sharp visual contrast is aroused by several faithful reproductions of McDougall's Alley as against the regal ornamentation of Georgain Court. In the cast with little Miss Evans and Mr. MacQuarrie are Niles Welch, Rosina Henley, Gerda Holmes and Mrs. Stuart Robson. "Gates of Gladness" was directed by Harley Knoles; photographed by Rene Guissart.

On February 4 Kitty Gordon in "The Divine Sacrifice" will make her newest appearance upon the World program. The psychology of this photoplay concerns the measure of justification falling to a husband who seeks the human privilege of fatherhood elsewhere when his wife refuses to assume the responsibility of bearing children. The dramatic crisis comes when the mother of the girl thus brought into the world faces the problem raised by a reputable and well-born young man who seeks to marry the maiden without a name. Miss Gordon plays the self-sacrificing mother, and her daughter, Vera Beresford, appears as the child. In the company are Jean Angelo, formerly leading man with Sarah Bernhardt; Selene Johnson, Charles Dungan and others. George Archainbaud directed "The Divine Sacrifice" and Philip Hatkin operated the camera.

"Whims of Society," with Ethel Clayton as its star, will be published February 11—a play in which the stern old factory owner is about to disinherit his son for perfectly honorable attentions to a girl in the factory, but before he can sign the document a disgruntled employe blows up the structure, owner and all. In this picture play, besides Miss Clayton, are Pinna Nesbit, Katherine Johnston, Frank Mayo, Jack Drumier and others. The director is Travers Vale; cameraman, Max Schneider.

June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "Broken Ties" will be seen February 18; Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "A Leap to Fame" (in which Mr. Blackwell performed a startling and dangerous "stunt"), February 25; Alice Brady in a new comedy drama, "The Spurs of Sybil," March 4; Kitty Gordon in "The Wasp" March 11; and Madge Evans in "Wanted, a Mother," March 18.

Recovers After Illness

Ray Moore, location man at the Triangle Culver City studios, is back on the job after several weeks' illness.

Seven Reeler on Triangle Schedule

Alma Rubens Starred in "I Love You," with Scenes Laid in France and Italy — Roy Stewart Appears in New Western Feature

FOR the week of January 13, Triangle will release two features that in every way come up to the diversified program policy of the company. One is a love story of foreign color, and the other a Western story said to give an entirely new angle from which to construct a thriller.

The second part feature to be produced under the new Triangle plan of a seven-reel picture every month, will be released the first part of the week, under the title, "I Love You," with Alma Rubens as the star.

For the second part of the week's program, "Law's Outlaw," featuring Roy Stewart, now recognized as one of the foremost delineators of western characters, will be released. The story was written by Ethel and James Dorrance. The supporting cast in this picture is excellent and Director Cliff Smith is said to have secured unusually good western atmosphere for the production.

"Dimples and Dangers," featuring Harry Gribbon, will be the Keystone Comedy for the week of January 13. Gribbon appears as a dancing master with a class composed of Keystone beauties. In spite of the fact that he is married to Claire Anderson, Gribbon indulges in many flirtations and the picture is replete with action throughout. One funny scene is shown when Gribbon mistakes his mother-in-law for the new maid and welcomes the real maid as if she were a queen. Gribbon's mixing of personalities has him in hot water for a long time.

"A Straight Cook" and "A Marriage Not," one-reel Triangle Komedies, are included in the week's program.

Cleveland Girl Gets Try-Out

Continuous daily publicity for nearly two months has been obtained for William Fox stars in the Cleveland News and Sunday Leader. Pictures of all the principal Fox players and a great variety of information regarding the Fox organization have been published in the two newspapers, resulting, it is reported, in an appreciable increase in the business which Cleveland exhibitors of Fox productions have been doing.

The newspapers, through an arrangement with the producer, agreed to furnish a free trip to New York for one young woman and a try-out of at least one week in the Fox Eastern studios. Several hundred young women ranging in age from upward of sixteen years, entered their photographs for the honor.

Selections of ten were made on the basis of photographs and personal appearance. Film was taken featuring the ten, and from inspection of this the committee chose Miss Ivy Diebel of 10201 Olivet avenue. The successful young woman went to New York the latter part of December and now is taking an important role in a picture being made at Fort Lee.

Mr. Fox is enthusiastic over the result of the plan, and says it will be continued. Not only does he find the idea productive of extensive publicity and of increased business for Fox exhibitors, but he also considers that it justifies itself from the standpoint of developing possible stars. It is recalled that June Caprice was discovered in this manner in Boston.

Displays Mother Love

The ever dominant appeal of "mother-love" is strongly typified in the role essayed by Madame Olga Petrova in the production following "Daughter of Destiny," the first Petrova picture. This picture is now being prepared for a release date, shortly to be announced simultaneously with the title which has been withheld up to the present time. The part in question gives the distinguished Polish actress a chance to display the full scope of the emotional qualities of her art. She has taken full advantage of this opportunity, and her many screen admirers will witness an interpretation entirely away from any of her former picture characterizations.

Finish Sixth Play

Edna Goodrich, star in a series of photoplays for the Mutual Film Corporation, has just completed, at the studios of the Empire All Star Corporation, Glendale, L. I., the sixth of her productions.

The play has not yet been titled, but has been produced under the working title of "Art and the Girl."

Get Fox Feature at No Advance

Exhibitors Contracting For Special Features Before End of January Will Receive "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" Without Extra Charge

THE picture (The Fox publicity department calls it the Big picture) is completed.

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," is its name, and it is the product of the "Big Four," namely:

George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, author.

George Walsh, star.

Carl Harbaugh, director.

William Fox, producer.

The story, first published in serial form in Saturday Evening Post, was read by millions. Additional millions read it later in book form.

William Fox states that he paid more for the privilege of filming "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" than he ever before paid for a similar privilege.

George Walsh, Fox's dashing young star, says his work in the picture is the best he ever did before the camera.

Carl Harbaugh, who directed it, declares his willingness to be judged as a director by the results he obtained in the film story.

Mr. Fox has announced that "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" is to be given, without extra charge, to William Fox patrons, listed January 30, 1918, as having contracted for the Fox Special Features and that nobody else will get it. It is going out as a regular weekly Special Feature, not as an "extra," although General Manager W. F. Sheehan declares "it has the punch entitling it to rank as a de luxe production and is really worthy of being distributed on the basis of an 'extra' at an advanced price."

New Play for Constance Talmadge

The cast of "The Shuttle," Constance Talmadge's new production in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, has been selected, and work on the play is now well under way in the Morosco studios in Los Angeles.

Miss Talmadge's new leading man is Albert Roscoe, who plays the part of Lord Mount-Dunston, and other members of the cast are Edith Johnson, E. B. Tilton, Helen Dunbar, George McDaniel, Thomas Perse, Edward Peil and Casson Ferguson. Miss Talmadge in the role of Betty Vanderpool, unspoiled daughter of New York's greatest money king, has a characterization suited to her personality.

"The Shuttle" has been adapted for the screen by Harvey Thew and Margaret Turnbull from the famous novel of the same name by Frances Hodgson Burnett. It will be distributed by Select.

Drews Help Open New York Theater

The latest of the Metro-Drew comedies, "His First Love," was one of the pictures chosen for the opening bill of New York's largest and newest motion picture theater, the Rivoli.

Wants Everyone to See "Les Miserables"

Among the notable results that have attended the presentation of the William Farnum de luxe production, "Les Miserables," at the Lyric Theater in New York City is the attracting of further attention to the possibilities of motion pictures and the arousing of the interest of persons who seldom express themselves publicly, except perhaps in criticism, on the subject of cinema achievements.

Among a number of such comments which William Fox reports having received recently is one from William Lyon Phelps, Lampson professor of English Literature at Yale University.

"I was deeply affected by 'Les Miserables,'" Mr. Phelps wrote to William Fox. "The artistic and spiritual values of the great novel are both preserved to a remarkable degree in the adaptation, and the acting is excellent. I wish every one in America could see this picture."

Tom Mix Stars in Western Drama

Tom Mix will make his debut as a star of Western dramas in a production entitled "Cupid's Round Up," which will be released January 13 as a Fox Special Feature.

Others in the cast besides the star are Miss Wanda Petit, E. B. Tilton, Roy Watson, Verne Mesereau, Al Padgett, Fred Clark, Eugenia Ford and Barney Furey. The story was written by George Scarborough and the scenario is by Charles Kenyon. Edward J. Le Saint did his first work as a member of the Fox forces in directing this picture.

Ann Murdock Pictures Succeed

Star Returns to Screen and Mutual Will Release "The Impostor," to Be Followed by "My Wife"

RETURNING to the screen with new Broadway laurels, Ann Murdock, starring in a series of Charles Frohman's plays in motion pictures, produced by the Empire All Star Corporation for release by the Mutual Film Corporation, has set new records at many box offices.

The Murdock pictures from Frohman plays rank among the most successful productions, from a box office standpoint, that have been released in the last six months. They started off with "Outcast," followed with "The Beautiful Adventure," after which came "Please Help Emily." "The Impostor" has been set for release on January 14 and it is to be followed by "My Wife." "The Richest Girl" has been completed and will be released after "My Wife."

The amazing results which "Outcast" produced have been duplicated by the succeeding Murdock releases. The public went in droves to see "Outcast," probably because of Miss Murdock's new fame, the title of the play, the fact that it was popular on the stage and because of the story. That they liked it has been evidenced times without number by the attendance at the subsequent Murdock pictures.

"The Impostor" lent itself well to picturization and the result has been, at the hands of Director Dell Henderson, an exceptionally good story, remarkably well told, with wonderful settings and scenes.

"Burglars," is the title of the Strand comedy, starring Billie Rhodes, released January 15. They aren't real burglars, however, only Billie and her cousin, an adventurous young chap, mistake each other for burglars when they both try to break into their uncle's house at night. They're both arrested, but uncle arrives in time to prevent their spending the night in a dank cell.

The Mutual Weekly, released January 14, is up to the minute and contains the usual quota of exclusive subjects. An instance of an exclusive picture is shown in the Weekly released December 31, showing the landing in the Presidio, San Francisco, of Miss Katherine Stinson, the daring aviatrix who set a new American record in flying without stop the 610 miles between San Diego and San Francisco.

Teacher Makes Good as Scenario Writer

Four recent pictures made by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount were written by Julien Josephson. Two years ago, Mr. Josephson was teaching school "somewhere" in the State of Washington at a salary of sixty-five dollars a month. Becoming dissatisfied with the life of a pedant, he essayed newspaper work in San Francisco. His next step up the literary ladder was a modest scenario sent to Mr. Ince. That was four months ago. Today Mr. Josephson is a regular member of the Ince staff of scenario writers, enjoys the distinction of driving one of the smartest looking automobiles in Los Angeles, cares not a bit if the price of gasoline jumps a few cents, and brazenly declares he must have his pair of eggs every morning, no matter what the market quotation.

Finds Plenty of "Pep" in Fox Play

The picturization of "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, is rapidly nearing completion in the William Fox studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

George Walsh, the William Fox star, featured in this picture is enthusiastic over the production, declaring it has more life, "pep," interest and thrills than any picture in which he ever worked.

Mr. Fox reiterates his statement that every exhibitor listed January 30, 1918, as having contracted for the William Fox special features will get "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal" without extra charge and no one else will get it.

Patriotic Picture Is Begun

The big patriotic picture Vitagraph is going to make for State Defense Council of New York, in which Governor Whitman, fighting chief executive of the Empire State, will appear, was started last week. Corinne Griffith and Webster Campbell, who will be featured in the picture, were taken to the guarded portions of the Erie Canal to the State Capitol at Albany and to a guarded point on the Hudson, making secnes at each place under the direction of John Robertson.

Makes First Paramount

Announcement has just been made that the first Paramount picture, which will star Enid Bennett, under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, will be released February 11. The play entitled, "The Keys of the Righteous," is now being filmed at the Ince studios.

Gunn Gets Vacation

R. A. Walsh Remains with Fox

Signs Contract with Goldwyn and Then Learns That Technicality Prevents His Leaving Present Post

R. A. WALSH, the able young director of many successful motion pictures, who recently signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, will be unable to join Goldwyn because of his discovery in his contract with the Fox organization that he had given that organization a further option on his services when signing up with them last.

This discovery was made by Mr. Walsh upon the arrival in New York of papers and other effects from his Los Angeles home and it caused him quite as much surprise as it did Goldwyn, which had entered into an agreement with him upon Mr. Walsh's assurance that he was free to deal with whomever he pleased with regard to his services. Goldwyn, upon the signing and delivery of Mr. Walsh's contract made all arrangements for his first Goldwyn production, which was in readiness for him to start work in Fort Lee.

Mr. Walsh, immediately upon the discovery of his dilemma frankly laid the matter before Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and Mr. Goldfish, following the fixed rule of the organization not to interfere with any person holding a contract with another organization, gave Mr. Walsh his written release from his Goldwyn contract.

"It is a matter of natural regret that Goldwyn should lose the services of a successful and able director like Mr. Walsh," says Mr. Goldfish, "but at no time has Goldwyn wished to have men break their contracts with any other organization. The mistake in this case, as Mr. Walsh himself frankly says, is of his own making. He felt when he came to us that he was free to dispose of his services in any manner he desired, but upon a re-reading of his contract when received from Los Angeles both he and his representatives reached the conclusion that the Fox organization had a valid claim and right to his services upon the exercise of the option in the previously made contract."

The third Ince-Artcraft production, starring Wm. S. Hart, presents the noted actor in a new role. The title of the photoplay is "Wolves of the Rail," and is a melodrama of the west.

Novel Scenic Experiment Succeeds

Hugo Ballin Gets Opportunity to Try Out Idea In Staging Scene for Goldwyn's "Fields of Honor"

IN "Fields of Honor," the Goldwyn drama starring Mae Marsh, to be released Jan. 14, an experiment in novel stage setting has been successfully carried out. Hugo Ballin, the distinguished artist who now designs all details of Goldwyn productions, determined to do something which never before had been accomplished in motion pictures. How he succeeded will be readily seen by those who enjoy the Saturday Evening Post story by Irvin S. Cobb, from which the screen play was made.

Mr. Ballin, long a student of the screen before he actually identified himself with the work of art direction, found his eyes distracted by many focal points in the average setting. For instance, in a boudoir or drawing room, with the principals in the foreground, the spectator finds his attention wandering. A mass of furniture and ornaments, draperies and sharp lined decoration distracts the observer. Subtlety of facial expression too often is lost when the eye is forced to "take in" the prominent but meaningless detail of a portiere hanging from an arch in the background.

Mr. Ballin determined that this should not be if ever he had the power to change the existing order of things in studio settings. It was his contention that the effect of richness and harmony could be achieved without a superfluity of embellishment, and whereas the average art director, to register this, believes that the setting must be elaborate, Hugo Ballin has proved that elimination is the surest way to arrive at the same point. It is but another example of the power of simplicity.

In studying the scenario of "Fields of Honor," Mr. Ballin saw an opportunity to put his idea into effect. He chose the dining room of the Vorhis home to show how simplicity could be carried to extremes yet with no sacrifice of values.

Taking the place of paneled walls was a background of dense black, with no suggestion of the velvet which was actually used. The effect was not that of a scene played before a black velvet curtain, but before no background at all. So cleverly is this device carried out that the spectator loses all consciousness that a definite background is missing.

A study in characterization. Norma Talmadge in two of the roles she plays in "Ghosts of Yesterday," her latest Select production. She first appears as a poor seamstress, and later as a Parisian cabarette favorite.

Serves Horse Meat to Her Guests

Jackie Saunders, starring in Balboa Feature Films, surprised a group of her friends in this city by serving them horse meat instead of turkey for Christmas dinner. Laying her plans adroitly, Miss Saunders assembled her guests at the Astor hotel, telling them she had discovered a substitute for turkey which had been personally endorsed by Herbert Hoover. She refused to tell the name of the new dish, saying it would be soon enough to let them in on the surprise when the feast was over.

Among those present were Mabel Normand and Mae Marsh, both warm personal friends of the Balboa star, Adolph Zukor, head of the Paramount company, and E. D. Horkheimer, treasurer of the Balboa studios.

Set Costs Half a Million

Recently it was announced that Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, were working in a scene of a new picture, the setting for which was valued at $40,000. Now it is stated that the final scenes in the picture referred to are being made in a setting valued at half a million dollars.

The set comprises six luxuriously furnished rooms, supposed to be the residence of an army officer who had seen service in many parts of the world, and who had accumulated bits of rare bric-a-brac and pieces of rare furniture during his travels.

One of the Southern settings of the Select production, "The Knife." A scene from the play in which Alice Brady is the star.

A. E. Smith Seeks Film Thieves

President of Vitagraph Employs Detectives to Trap Pirates Who Are Trying to Steal Set of Serial Reels

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, has employed a national detective agency to run down a band of film pirates who have been trying to get a complete set of reels of "The Fighting Trail," the Vitagraph serial. Mr. Smith declared that the detectives have several clues to the thieves, who apparently have branches in all parts of the country. He says that prior to the release of "The Fighting Trail," the Vitagraph Company, like all other big picture concerns, had been the object of thief operations. But since the fame of "The Fighting Trail" has spread, the pirates have bent their efforts towards getting the full serial for duping purposes.

"There is nothing more despicable or dangerous in the entire motion picture industry than the piratical film duper," said Mr. Smith, "and we are going to do everything we possibly can to break up the particular band that is seeking to steal prints of 'The Fighting Trail' and to put them behind prison bars.

"One reason why film duping has become such a profitable business, is because producers and distributors have been careless in disposing of their old film. Instead of selling it in a ruined state for the chemicals that it contains, the owners have disposed of it in reel form, at so much a pound, and much of this film, regarded as too worn for exhibition purposes, has been duped and sold abroad as fresh product. This puts the entire American film industry in disrepute, because the exhibitors and spectators do not stop to think that this is discarded film. All they know is that it is a bad film, and the company which produced it originally is charged with putting forth inferior product."

Eva Gordon, who has played for several motion picture companies in continental Europe, has been engaged to play the prominent role of Mrs. Woolworth in Metro's "Under Suspicion," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, now under production with William S. Davis as director. Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted the picture from Hugh Weir's story, "The Woolworth Diamonds."

Journeys Miles to Find Snow Setting

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince's brilliant young screen star, will journey three hundred and fifty miles from Los Angeles to film some "snow stuff" in her new Paramount production, as yet unnamed. A story of the big Canadian Northwest, it is said to be even more exciting, and to contain a greater number of thrills to the square inch of celluloid, than any of Miss Dalton's earlier triumphs, not excluding "The Flame of the Yukon" or "Flare-Up Sal." Miss Dalton will have the support of an unusually capable cast, including such well known players as Thurston Hall, Melbourne MacDowell, William Conklin, Carmen Phillips and others.

Goldwyn Pictures in Australia

Harold Bolster Gives Trade Showing of "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine" for Enthusiastic Exhibitors

GOLDWYN PICTURES have negotiated the long trip to Australia and the Orient, now made doubly slow and difficult by the war, and have been privately shown to two groups of exhibitors in the Antipodes. Both showings were arranged by Goldwyn's special representative, Harold Bolster, now touring the world in the interest of the new corporation. A letter, just received at the home office after a long delay, records special trade showings at the Theater Royal, Sydney, New South Wales, on Nov. 18, and at Melbourne on Nov. 25.

Both gatherings brought forth the leaders in the film industry of Australia and New Zealand. Harry Hayward of Auckland, chairman of the New Zealand Motion Pictures Supplies Company, controlling over fifty theaters on the island, made a special trip to Sydney to be present at the showing. On both occasions, the first two Goldwyn releases, "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh, and "Baby Mine," starring Madge Kennedy, were shown. After the showing, Mr. Hayward said:

"They are the best pictures, both for technical perfection and entertainment values, that have come out of America."

Universal intends to specialize in Harry Carey features, directed by Jack Ford, as one of the production plans announced for the forthcoming year.

Vitagraph Begins Making New Serial

"The Woman in the Web" Will Be Ready for Release at the Conclusion of First Run of "Vengeance—and the Woman"

ON Wednesday, January 2, Vitagraph formally inaugurated production at its West Coast studios of "The Woman in the Web," the fifteen episode serial starring Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon, which will be released immediately upon the conclusion of the first run of "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Like its predecessors, "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," this serial is punctuated with hazardous incidents that require unusual outdoor locations such as furnished by the vast tracts of mountain land surrounding the California studios of Vitagraph. The story, which is the joint work of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is of an entirely different nature, however, than that of the other serials and deals with international episodes that require a variety of exterior and interior setting.

The plot carries the players over three-quarters of the globe, from Petrograd, through Russia and many of the warring countries of Europe. Since it is manifestly impossible to film the episodes in the actual locale of the story, Director David Smith, brother of the Vitagraph president, has thoroughly mapped out a tour of the West Coast states, covering those locations necessary for the action of the story.

Hedda Nova is a Russian girl, as is the heroine of this romance. She has spent most of her life among the scenes which the picture depicts. She was born in Odessa and lived for a number of years in Petrograd, where the initial action of the play transpires.

Frank Glendon, who co-stars with Miss Nova, has been featured by Vitagraph in a number of productions, notably the O. Henry subjects, and has just completed work in "The Wooing of Princess Pat," in which he had the leading role opposite Gladys Leslie.

With the addition of a new stage 300 by 150 feet, two new concrete buildings for dressing rooms and storage of sets, and improved photographic facilities of the latest type, the Western Vitagraph studio is perfectly equipped for the production requirements of this serial, which will be more elaborate in scenic investiture than any previous Vitagraph production.

Mike Donlin in Three-H Class

Mike Donlin, former outfielder on the New York Giants baseball team, is a member of the company supporting George Walsh, the William Fox star, in "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal." While a member of the Giants' team Donlin was a pal of "Dummy" Taylor, the deaf and dumb pitcher, and he became very proficient in the sign language.

At the William Fox studio, where "Jack Spurlock — Prodigal" is being filmed, a mute girl is employed as a waitress in the restaurant. Donlin did not know of her affliction and recently, just to "kid" her, said to her in sign language:

"You're very pretty, but I'm hungry and in a hurry. Bring in the dinner."

He was astonished when, in sign language, she replied:

"You're homely, hungry and in a hurry—indeed, you're the three-H kid — be patient and I'll put one right over the plate for you. Don't miss it."

Seek to Book Paralta Offerings

Exhibitors After Securing "A Man's Man" Make Early Request for Barriscale Feature, "Madam Who?"

THE demand for the first Paralta Plays to be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, J. Warren Kerrigan in Peter B. Kyne's "A Man's Man," and Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who?", has been very heavy and is continuing to such an extent that Paralta Plays, Inc., has ordered a large increase in the number of positive prints. Paralta is congratulating itself that the capacity of the studios is now being doubled in order to enable the organization to attempt to meet the heavy demands of exhibitors.

Many exhibitors went to the exchanges after they had booked "A Man's Man" and stated that they wished to book at once "Madam Who?" as well as they did not wish to take a chance of being deprived, owing to heavy demand, of an early chance to show the Barriscale release as well as the Kerrigan to their patrons.

Among the houses which have already booked the first two Paralta plays, "A Man's Man" and "Madam Who?", are a hundred houses of the class which maintain large orchestras and present photoplays for runs. These houses were delighted with the music scores, which are a feature of Paralta Plays. They declared that the music was not only highly appropriate and atmospheric but that it seemed especially suited to their orchestras. This latter quality was brought about by the fact that those who arranged the musical setting of the Paralta Plays had the requirements of the orchestras well in mind.

Bill Boards Boost New Spoor Film

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me" Will Be Exploited in Same Manner as "Uneasy Money," Taylor Holmes Play

MEN Who Have Made Love to Me," George K. Spoor's presentation of Mary MacLane, the authoress, received its final endorsement last week, when run for a final showing in the studio projection rooms.

Twenty-four-sheet bill board posters are about to be placed throughout the country advertising this presentation.

Mr. Spoor believes that his national advertising plan has resulted in a far greater popularity than would otherwise have been gained, using his twenty-four-sheet campaign on Taylor Holmes' "Uneasy Money" as a criterion.

Fruits of this national advertising on "Uneasy Money" are evident in the early booking bids received at the Kleine offices, coming from all parts of the country.

The twenty-four-sheet on Mary MacLane's picture is worked out in five colors, showing a large close-up of the authoress as she sits at her desk, revealing her cryptic face as it is when under the stress of heavy thinking.

In company with his local Chicago advertising plan, Mr. Spoor is using the Chicago motor busses. The first card on "Uneasy Money" is now appearing in all of the busses.

These bus cards are exact reproductions of the twenty-four-sheets, printed in five contrasting colors.

Personal Experiences of Author In Play

The distinguished American novelist, Rex Beach, has raised an interesting question based on a newspaper observation about his new photoplay, "The Auction Block." The newspaper remarked that the scenes of "The Auction Block" bear so many earmarks of having been written from actual experience that Mr. Beach may well be suspected of having lived outside as well as in a drawing room.

When Mr. Beach read this he laughed.

"The best comment I may make on that," he said, "is to repeat the statement once made by Mary Garden in Paris: 'I am no saint. I have lived life, have had my loves, know supreme joys and sorrows, but my existence is an open book.'

"I really did include in 'The Auction Block' a number of personal experiences. I have seen a great gambling raid, but in a manner quite as innocent as that of a policeman; I have seen a rolling mill in operation, although I never actually witnessed the death of workmen in a downpour of molten metal; I have conversed with criminals and wealthy profligates, and I have attended a number of weddings where brides were being sold to the highest bidders. But the main suggestion I would like to make here is, if 'The Auction Block' throws such a sensational light on part of my life, what will critics think of me when they get the record of further experiences in the motion picture versions of my other novels, 'Pardners,' 'Going Some,' 'The Silver Horde,' 'The Iron Trail' and 'Heart of the Sunset?'"

George Hill Joins Army Signal Corps

Goldwyn's director of photography, George Hill, is now in the United States Army Signal Corps. With a first lieutenant's commission in his inside pocket, he made a flying trip to Hollywood, Cal., to spend a day with his parents, following which he reported at Washington for orders.

William Desmond, Triangle favorite, is soon to be seen in the role of a swashbuckling pirate of the Caribbean Sea. He is raising a mustache to aid his appearance in the part of "The Sea Panther," the title of the story.

General Executives Call Conventions

Gather Exchange Men of the Country in Three Meetings to Start Sales Drive of the New Year

AS the first act of a new year which is expected to be attended by greater developments than have yet been witnessed in the motion picture industry, General Film Company called three sectional conventions of its various branch managers for discussion of its new activities already under way or planned by General Film.

The first of these conventions was set for New York City on Saturday, January 5, with executives from the home office and the various branches of the eastern district in attendance. The second of these conventions was dated for Monday, January 7, at Chicago, for the benefit of the exchangemen in the central section of the country, and the third arranged for San Francisco on Friday, January 11.

These sectional conventions mark the first step in an aggressive campaign outlined for the year 1918, each of the thirty-two General Film offices being represented in the deliberations. The various opportunities presented by the enlargement of General Film's usefulness, following its working alliance with the W. W. Hodkinson corporation for the distribution of Paralta Plays through General Film exchanges provided the most important topic for these conventions, which were held under the personal direction of General Sales Manager S. R. Kent.

Take One Month to Choose Title

Following the Biblical injunction, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation had Mabel Normand's newest picture in course of production for fully a week before definitely deciding upon its title. Now, however, the matter has been settled, and Director George Loane Tucker has officiated at the christening of the infant—"Dodging a Million."

Heading the distinguished cast that has been assembled to support Miss Normand is Tom Moore. His work with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," shortly to be released, gave great satisfaction to Director Tucker, who dircted "The Cinderella Man."

Another well known figure in "Dodging a Million" will be Hubert Druce, long familiar to theatrical audiences, before whom he appeared in support of John Drew and other famous Broadway stars.

Others in the cast include Armand Cortes, J. Herbert Frank, Edwards Davis, Franklyn Hanna, Bernard Thornton, Joseph Smiley (who has already appeared in a Goldwyn-Normand production, "Joan of Plattsburg"), Florence Ashbrooke, Lillian Paige, Shirley Aubert and Rita Dane. Miss Dane is a prominent player in musical comedy who sang the prima donna role in the Mizzi Hajos "Pom Pom" and appeared in the Ziegfeld Follies prior to her entering the field of the screen.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Hoffman Has Optimistic Outlook

Declares New Year Will See Motion Picture Industry Placed on Better Business Basis with Bad Features Eliminated

WHEN young Nineteen-Eighteen was brought 'round by Father Time and introduced, another youth of barely seven months hovered near. It was Foursquare Pictures, which has done much for independence in the distribution of superior motion pictures; the firm whose officers are seasoned men of business and whose experienced hands have guided the organization into methods of efficiency and economy that have made a serious impression upon the industry.

Speaking of the coming twelve months, M. H. Hoffman of Foursquare Pictures said: "Nineteen-Eighteen will be a lively year, all around. Some important things are sure to happen that will clarify the present muggy situation and better conditions generally.

"I hope I am right when I say that a great deal of the over-production, extravagance and unbusiness-like methods should vanish during the year to come. I hope, too, that I am right in expressing the belief that there will be fewer pictures made during Nineteen-Eighteen, and the percentage of quality must be higher.

"For some time no heed has been given to warning signs that producers and distributors dealing in large quantities of film merchandise have been going at too fast a pace. It is only within the past few weeks that this fact seems to have been driven home, and that the apprehensiveness caused has been transmitted through the 'nervous system' of the trade to the industry.

"As a matter of fact, there is nothing to worry over. The chances which are inevitably in order will only serve as a purge to rid the trade of elements that are harming it. By the time the new year has gotten well under way the readjustment will have begun. In a few months, the motion picture public will have resumed its patronage to normal proportions (if, even, the people do not flock to the theaters in greater numbers). In a few months the other changes of reduced production and increased quality of pictures will begin to be felt.

"But it were well for everyone connected with the making and distribution of pictures to heed the underlying rules of sound business. Wild-eyed methods (in every branch of the industry) are gradually disappearing. Let us hope that most of those that have been left will be completely gotten rid of before Nineteen-Nineteen, says 'Happy New Year!'"

Sells Charlotte Film for Three States

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has received the following explanatory letter from Harry Weiss, of the Central Film Company:

"We wish to compliment you on your production featuring Charlotte in the 'Frozen Warning.' We consider this production first-class in every respect, and the main fact that we have purchased the rights for southern Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana bears out our contention—as the customers we cater to demand from us the best there is in features."

Mr. Spanuth closed with Jones, Linick and Schafer and Nathan Ascher, owners of the Central Film Company and distributors for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Illinois, southern Wisconsin and Indiana, for "The Frozen Warning" in that territory after a personal screening attended by Mr. Ascher and Aaron Jones.

Think Public Wants Better Stories

That the public is becoming more and more anxious to see pictures that have a story worth while and that stars are fast losing their lustre is becoming more apparent, as is shown by the following letter received at the Kansas City Foursquare exchange by Manager Sidney J. Baker:

"I am mailing you check as a deposit on two pictures I have contracted with you.

"I shall be in the market for more of these pictures if they hold up after the 10th of February. In other words, I am looking for pictures to take the place of stars, the same having failed to draw in my house the past two months.

"I firmly believe that the public is getting tired of stars and prefers pictures that have something in the nature of a plot, rather than baby faces and cute ways. Anyway, I am off of them after I can work my way clear.

"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) EDGAR E. DUNCAN,

Lucille Laverne, who will depict an important role in "The Life Mask," starring Madame Petrova and directed by Frank Crane, is a well known actress of the legitimate stage.

"Boom Coming This Spring"—Hall

President of U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Returns From Trip Filled With Optimistic Views

HAVING returned from a holiday trip through the middle West during which he obtained first hand information as to conditions among exhibitors in that territory, Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, is convinced there is no foundation for the uneasiness over the future of the motion picture industry which has been expressed by skeptics of the trade during the last several weeks.

"To be sure," asserted Mr. Hall in his office in the Times Building, "conditions are not of the best. But the consensus of exhibitor opinion, so far as I have been able to ascertain, is that the existing slump in certain quarters is but temporary and that the early spring will see a general boom throughout the trade.

"A majority of the exhibitors with whom I talked have little complaint to make concerning present conditions. A few have found that the raise in prices occasioned by the war tax had affected their patronage, but none was so pessimistic as to believe that the spring would not see a big improvement in conditions everywhere.

"The demand for big pictures, however, appears to be more insistent than ever before. Exhibitors desire productions that lend themselves to exceptional exploitation, pictures they can 'bill like a circus,' for in these times the amusement-going public ever is seeking the unusual. Commonplace productions that might have filled a theater several months ago are of little value now.

"In view of the calamity howling to which certain individuals in the east have lately given way, I undertook to sound exhibitor opinion myself and the result has been most gratifying."

District representatives of the Booking

Corporation also have submitted reports to Mr. Hall during the last few days in which they set forth their belief that next spring there will be a boom in the theatrical and moving picture fields that will carry business back to flood tide.

Goldburg Signs with Ivan Films

A contract was signed December 27 between I. E. Chadwick, General Manager of The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., and Jesse J. Goldburg, who lately opened offices in The Times Building, New York, whereby Mr. Goldburg will act as special and exclusive sales representative on all Ivan productions.

While the contract specifically provides that the exploitation of the Ivan productions shall not prevent Mr. Goldburg's office from handling the productions of other manufacturers or Mr. Goldburg's service idea for other producers or State Right buyers, it provides that Mr. Goldburg shall give his personal attention to the affairs of The Ivan Film productions.

"Parentage" Is Popular in New England

"Parentage," a Frank J. Seng independent attraction, opened Keith's Boston Theater recently, and during that week played to 51,808 paid admissions. The following Monday it opened a week's run in both the Central Square Theater, of Lynn, Mass., and Fox's Theater, in Springfield, Mass. In the bitter cold weather many persons stood in line for two hours at the Lynn house. Enough were accommodated to break the house record by $238.

Small Territory on "The Warrior" Unsold

With less than eight per cent of the territory for their film spectacle, "The Warrier" undisposed of, announcement was made this week by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of an additional name to the already long list of buyers. The transaction in question involves the disposal of the seven-part feature starring the hero of "Cabiria," to the Midwest Civilization Company of Denver, Colo. The buyers were represented by James W. Burke, president of the Midwest Civilization Company, and Max Schulbach, general manager. The sale entails the states of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming, and Messrs. Burke and Schulbach reported immediately after their acquisition of "The Warrior" that several road companies would be toured over the four states. They are two of the most prominent territorial distributors in the Far West country and have already acquired considerable reputation through their handling of Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization." Three companies are at present representing the latter picture throughout Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming and it is planned to give the "Warrior" the same method of handling.

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin acted for General Enterprises, Inc., in the sale of their feature and reported the territory now left unsold to be as follows: Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, California, Nevada and Arizona. It is expected that these few states will be disposed of within the next week.

Sells Nineteen More States

Herbert Lubin Makes Successful Trip in the Interest of McClure Production, "Mother"—Middle West Likes Picture

FOLLOWING the return of Herbert Lubin, executive of General Enterprises, Inc., to New York this week, an announcement was made by the organization which controls the territorial distribution of the McClure picture, "Mother," that a remarkable series of sales transactions were successfully consummated as a result of Lubin's recent trip throughout the middle west. Immediately after the showing of the George Loane Tucker feature which Mr. Lubin arranged at the Ziegfeld Theater in Chicago, and which was attended by every prominent exhibitor and state right buyer in the middle west territory, bids were offered from all quarters for "Mother." Within two days the General Enterprises, Inc., member had consummated arrangements whereby contracts were closed for the McClure production starring Elisabeth Risdon, with the following prominent state right purchasers: to the Grainger Film Corporation of Chicago, the states of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas and Missouri; to E. M. Allen of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago, the states of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky; to the Westcott Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minnesota, the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota; to M. J. Wohlfarth of Lakewood, New Jersey, the entire state of New Jersey, and to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The above transactions embrace the sale of nineteen states for "Mother" within two days.

"The Belgian" Popular

So great has been the demand for the use of Sidney Olcott's spectacle, "The Belgian," at charity bazaars and patriotic entertainments that the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, by which the production is being distributed throughout the world, has been compelled to devote one print exclusively to that purpose.

Clune Plays Ready

Clune's cinema attractions, "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona," which have been taken over by Shallenberger and Priest and are being sold on the state rights market, are creating great interest among buyers. The advertising and publicity campaign is about ready for launching.

Takes Goldman Book

"The Public Defender," in book form, which was written by Mayer C. Goldman, an attorney of New York City, and which furnished the theme for Harry Raver's photodramatic production of the same name, has been added to the files of the New York Public Library.

Brenon Makes "Lone Wolf" Sequel

Now that "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson is completed, announcement is made of the next production to which Mr. Brenon is to devote his energies.

In a few days he will start to work on a continuation of the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, whose "Lone Wolf" provided him with so successful a vehicle last year. The further adventures of the Lone Wolf are to be recorded on the screen in "False Faces" or "The Sequel to the Lone Wolf," which has just been completed in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post.

Bert Lytell will again be seen in the role which won for him so high a place in the estimation of those versed in the film lore.

Foursquare Now Has 21 Exchanges

Foursquare Exchanges throughout the United States and Canada greeted the New Year in twenty-one different cities; for now this independent distributing organization completely covers this country. The latest exchanges opened, and which started doing business with a rush, are San Francisco, at 191 Golden Gate avenue; Los Angeles, at 514 West 8th street; Dallas, at 1911½ Commerce street, and Minneapolis, at 206 Film Exchange building.

Marson Buys "Peggy"

R. D. Marson, president of R. D. Marson Attraction Company, Boston, has purchased the New England rights to "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland, from Shallenberger and Priest.

Mr. Marson recently decided to enter the independent field as a specialist and secured Selig's big production, "The Garden of Allah," which he released December 1st. He reports wonderful results and proposes to buy one new feature a month.

Goldburg Makes Trip Across Continent

In furtherance of Jesse J. Goldburg's plan of exploitation of independent State Right attractions, he left New York Thursday, January 3, with his first stop at Philadelphia. From there he proceeds to the following cities: Washington, D. C., Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Fort Worth, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake, Denver, Des Moines, Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburg.

Mr. Goldburg, on his trip will not alone exploit the attractions of The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., but will also contract with one State Right buyer in each territory to act as the sole and exclusive representative on all productions to be handled by such exchange in its respective territories.

In addition to the contract to act as exclusive representative for The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., Mr. Goldburg has also closed a contract with Harry Rapf to handle the sale of "The Struggle Everlasting" in which Florence Reed is starred supported by Milton Sills and Irving Cummings, and "An Accidental Honeymoon" in which Robert Warwick is starred supported by Elaine Hamerstein.

Mr. Goldburg has also signed a contract with The Consolidated Film Corporation of San Francisco whereby he acts as the sole buying representative for all productions to be purchased by that concern for the states of California, Arizona and Nevada, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho.

To Join U. S.

LEON BORIES and Murray Beier have been added to the sales forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. Mr. Bories, who has had long experience on the Pacific coast, having served with a number of film concerns, will represent the U. S. in the Seattle district while Mr. Beier will supervise U. S. distribution in the Buffalo territory.

Censors Pass "Those Who Pay"

LYNN S. Card, general sales manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation has been notified of the passage by the censor board of Chicago of the company's second special release, "Those Who Pay," in which Bessie Barriscale is starred under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. Representatives of the concern in the Ohio territory report heavy bookings for the Ince production, which is reported to be one of the best dramatic subjects ever made by that famous master of lights and shadows.

Word also has been received by Mr. Card that the concern's third release, Sidney Olcott's spectacle, "The Belgian," starring Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant, has been approved by the censor board for the Eastern Pennsylvania district.

Greiver and Herz, Chicago, report exceptionally big business on their first Lillian Walker release "Lust of the Ages." The picture is playing in all the Lubliner and Trinz houses in Chicago and has just completed an extended run at the Merrill at Milwaukee.

Big Features Are Tax Solution

Big special productions, such as "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," are the solution of the present war tax problems of the exhibitors, according to Hiller & Wilk of New York, who have handled some of the biggest state rights propositions on the market during the last few years.

The state rights specialists explain that exhibitors, by booking a big production once a month or perhaps oftener, are enabled to raise their admission price to a figure that will allow them to assume the tax and, at the same time, make a profit more than large enough to offset any possible loss through the falling off of patronage when presenting regular five-reel program pictures with the two-reels of comedy and the one-reel filler.

As a concrete case in point, they cite the instance of a Detroit theater which makes a specialty of running a big special every three weeks. During the ordinary program runs this house charges ten and fifteen cents admission, adding two cents to the former price and three cents to the latter figure and making the patron assume the war tax.

During the week on which the big picture is run, the admission price is increased to twenty-five and thirty-five cents and the management assumes payment of the war tax.

The experience of this house has been that the big specials cost them practically the same rental as their regular program features, as they run the special for the entire week, thereby getting advantage of the long time booking rate, while they change their program features daily. With the daily change the house management is forced to use new paper each day, have a new style of window card distributed each day and purchase heralds for each presentation. As little of this form of advertising is purchased in quantities large enough for the exhibitor to demand a price, he usually pays the maximum.

When the special is run for a week, paper and advertising helps are purchased in large quantities and at the lowest prices. The work of posting and distribution is done at one time. Quite a sum is saved in express charges and in other overhead expenses made necessary through the daily change.

Theda Bara in "Du Barry"

Pointed wit, epigrams, and exaggerated compliment were the fashion in speech at the Court of Louis XV, where reigned the famous character whom Theda Bara interprets in the Theda Bara super-picture, "Du Barry," which William Fox has just released.

Brenon Film Successfully Launched

"Fall of the Romanoffs" Is Well Received at The Outset of Its Drive in Eastern Territory

FOLLOWING the announcement of the successful launching of Herbert Brenon's "Fall of the Romanoffs" at the new Forest Hill Theater in Newark, N. J., comes the news of the interest with which the sensational feature was received at the Loew Theater in greater New York city.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" has begun its big drive throughout the east. All the Marcus Loew theaters in greater New York exhibited the film beginning January second. The bookings were made for several consecutive days at a time. The film played at each performance to packed houses.

A wide spread advertising campaign preceded the showing of the picture on the circuit. Special twenty-four-sheets bearing the figures of the Monk Iliodor and the charlatan, Rasputin, around whom the drama centers, were exhibited throughout New York City. The campaign was pronounced a success.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" was first exhibited at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in New York City, in the late autumn. The private showing was followed by a run at the Broadway Theater, where all records were smashed. The original run was extended an extra week. At the end of that time, owing to the impossibility of getting another theater, the run came to a close.

Give Sunday Shows for Charity

Nashville Exhibitors Keep Houses Open on First Day of the Week, First Time in Many Months

MOVING picture shows were operated in Nashville, Tenn., on the Sunday preceding Christmas for the first time in many months. Four of the leading uptown houses, the Fifth Avenue, Knickerbocker, Strand and Crystal Theaters, opened their doors at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and gave two performances between that hour and the time for church services. The performances were given for the benefit of the empty stocking fund in Nashville, and all the proceeds were donated for that purpose. No tickets were sold, all money being collected as a result of voluntary donation.

In spite of the expected customary howl from the professional agitators and ultra-conservatists, the theaters played to overflowing houses. Pleas for closing the theaters fell upon deaf ears, in the face of the spirit which prompted the movement. A total of $420.91 was realized from the voluntary contributions; an even $200 from the Fifth avenue, $104.81 from the Strand and $116.10 from the Knickerbocker and Crystal combined. Not a cent was deducted by the theater men, all lights, film rental and other expenses being donated by the managements. All employes of the various houses gave their services free.

Notwithstanding that it was strictly a charitable procedure, the agitators and alarmists came out in full force, and appealed to the chief of police to stop the shows. The chief was forced to order the managers not to sell tickets and placed uniformed men in front of the box offices to see that the order was obeyed. These men were not called upon to exercise any of the powers with which they were vested, by reason of the fact that no tickets were sold.

Theater Men Form New Circuit

Word has been received of an amalgamation of exhibiting interests in western Canada for the purpose of organizing circuits in the territory and of acquiring desired film productions for these circuits as soon as possible. The amalgamation consisted of an alliance between the Western Canada Exhibitors' Circuit and the Dewees and Schuberg interests of Winnipeg, thus forming what has been called the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Canada. Charter members consist of ten theaters extending from Winnipeg to Vancouver.

Rothapfel Loses Weight

S. L. Rothapfel has lost weight during the past week. Mr. Rothapfel attributes this to the worry of opening the Rivoli Theater and to his great activity in running back and forth between the Rivoli and the Rialto—in his machine.

Orphans Are Guests of Manager

Manager W. H. Wessman of the Knickerbocker theater, Nashville, Tenn., displayed the true Christmas spirit in opening the doors of his house to Nashville poor children on Christmas Eve, at which time 2,000 inmates of this city's orphans' homes and other charitable institutions took advantage of his generosity and paid a visit to "Jack and the Beanstalk," the Christmas booking. The children had just enjoyed the hospitalities of the Elk's Club, where they were each presented with a bag of fruits and toys, but the moving picture performance equaled the trip of Santa in the hearts of the little folks. From the squeals of delight at the film, it was plainly evident that the picture "scored" as no other offering of the year has done.

Improve Show Without Expense

Managing Director of Successful New York Theater Tells How He Overcomes Conditions Caused by War

BY HAROLD EDEL

Managing Director Strand Theater, New York, Writing for Paramount-Artcraft Progress-Advance

IN a recent interview in which I stated that exhibitors should collect the extra war tax from the public, I mentioned that an improvement in the entertainment offered by the exhibitor would have to be evident in order to warrant an increase in admission prices caused by the tax.

In this interview it was also stated that such improvements did not mean the extra expenditure of money and recently there have been letters in my mail from various brother exhibitors asking for a more detailed explanation of the matter.

I repeat that an improvement in a film show does not mean additional expenditures of money on the part of the exhibitor, but it does mean an additional expenditure of time and effort in the presentation of a bill. The art of doing things different demands considerable thought. In order to be absolutely explicit I will mention various ideas worked out at the Strand in the past which improved our shows without raising the weekly expense account.

For instance, educational pictures at their best seldom receive more than a mere ripple of applause. This is not because they are not appreciated, but because such pictures seldom contain scenes that would provoke spontaneous applause.

On a series of pictures showing camping life recently, I experimented with the scissors in an effort to obtain the unusual. Beautiful scenes showing camping life on a mountain lake presented views of exceptional artistic merit but in the way of sustaining interest, the same views showing such acts as the announcement of dinner with the campers preparing for the feast offered nothing unusual.

By cutting out every third picture in the film itself the action of the scene was quickened, so that when dinner was announced the figures just flew around in feverish haste. Hands and faces were washed in a flash, dishes were thrown in front of the campers and the food was consumed in record time.

Several other scenes were speeded up and for the first time in the history of the Strand we were able to show a scenic picture which at every performance was greeted with a riot of applause. In scenes of unusual beauty and actual educational value, we left the film as it was, thus presenting an educational film that was amusing as well as interesting. In fact, this film was one of the biggest hits of the Strand during the week it was shown.

Another instance; one of the most prominent trade paper critics recently commented upon the beautiful tint of one of my educational subjects which caused me to smile. Little did even this film critic suspect that we were exhibiting a straight black and white film, but through a little trick in projection were showing on the screen a film of various beautiful tints.

The idea is so simple and yet so wonderfully effective that it readily warranted my smiling. An assortment of inexpensive color gelatine plates, such as are used in the ordinary colored spotlight, does the trick. These plates are placed over the square opening in the projection booth through which the light is projected from the machine to the screen.

When a black and white picture is received and we desire to show it in beautiful tints, a little window containing a color gelatine is dropped into place and the result is apparent. A change in the color of the tint is made by the operator at a time when a title is on the screen.

A rearrangement of the orchestral program from week to week is another good way of keeping away from the "cut and dried" routine of entertainment. For example, every audience has become accustomed to the usual overture as a curtain raiser; during this overture the audience fusses about and usually it is not before the opening number has well advanced that people settle down and begin to enjoy it.

Recently, for my opening number, I selected the Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 2 with an original piano Cadenza by an artist. To further enhance the presentation of this number I engaged several special musicians. However, it was quite evident that I would have to receive the close attention of the audience right from the beginning in order to have them fully appreciate the effort of my orchestra.

In order to bring about this condition, I staged a special patriotic "bit" first on the bill, as a prelude to the overture. The house was darkened and the audience, expecting the usual overture continued the customary fidgeting. However, as the curtain rose slowly the stage gradually displayed a large American flag, simultaneously the orchestra burst into "The Star Spangled Banner," and immediately the entire house from orchestra to roof came to attention.

Thus I accomplished a two-fold purpose, namely, the presentation of a patriotic "bit," which it is up to every exhibitor to offer every week, and the elimination of the usual fussing at the beginning of a show. By the time my overture was begun the entire audience was prepared to listen from the first note.

It is through the creation of introduction of such ideas that a show may be made "different." True, it demands thought and time on the part of the manager but in the long run it is readily warranted. The public demands novelty in its entertainment and the exhibitor who can supply this demand will not have to worry about war conditions.

Adopt New Plan for Booking

Fifty Exhibitors of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota Accept Hamlin Marketing Arrangements

FIFTY exhibitors, representative of every section of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota, unanimously adopted the Hamlin plan of marketing and distributing film at the annual meeting of Associated Theaters, Inc., in Minneapolis.

This organization is only six months old and has a membership of more than five hundred and fifty theaters. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President, Chas. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; vice-president, Wm. S. Smith, Menomonie, Wis.; treasurer, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn.; chairman board of directors, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; secretary and general manager, Thomas J. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minn. The officers comprise the board of five directors and the executive board is composed of Messrs. Gates, Greene and Hamlin.

"We are going to open one large central film exchange in Minneapolis, where a master booking sheet will be used in conjunction with seven distributing and inspection stations throughout the four states," declared Manager Hamlin.

"Operations will start about January 28, just one month ahead of our previous schedule. I have noticed with great interest the recently published admissions of the leading national film heads, 'that the present system of marketing and distributing film is all wrong and a tremendous waste.'

"When they study our simplified but efficient plan, I predict that they will give it a thorough trial in this zone. In the meantime we will send our organizers out to perfect another zone.

"Any producer or distributer can still maintain his independence and individuality and market his film through Associated Theaters, Inc., at a grand total cost of twenty per cent—ten per cent for marketing and ten per cent for distributing.

"The good feature pictures only get from seventy to one hundred and seventy days run in this territory now, and under our plan they can be assured from twice to treble the number of showings at a bigger gross and net to the producer and a lower film rental for the exhibitor."

Treats 15,000 Orphans and Newsboys

The Gifts Theater, Cincinnati's newest and handsomest moving picture house, had as its guests one day last week the newsboys of Cincinnati and gave two special performances for them.

On two other mornings the different orphan asylums were entertained and "Jack and the Beanstalk" was the attraction. The children thoroughly enjoyed this spectacle.

McMahan & Jackson, managers of the theater, stated that more than 15,000 children witnessed the Fox feature.

Gets School to Boost House

Manager of Brooklyn Theater Makes His Playhouse Popular Through Medium of Pupils, Parents and Teachers

RARE business acumen, coupled with a genuine spirit, will do much to tide the exhibitor over the shallow places of the entertainment business to-day. A number of special plans which proved successful during the holiday season have been notable, but none deserves greater commendation than the idea of Michael Warshower, manager of the Penn Theater in Brooklyn, N. Y.

After enlisting the sympathy and support of the head of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association and Mothers' League early in December, Mr. Warshower selected Public School 149, located in the center of his community, to conduct a motion picture carnival along original lines. Numbered tickets, good any time except after six o'clock on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, were sold to the children and allotted to them for sale to their parents and friends, the various teachers acting as agents for Mr. Warshower. Several teachers made speeches from the stage during evening shows, urging people to attend the Penn Theater regularly.

Half of the value of each ticket presented, was given to a fund out of which food and clothing were purchased for the needy people of the neighborhood. When started, the fund had but thirty-three cents, and during the month the $500 mark was passed. This money provided necessities for many children who would otherwise have been deprived of all Christmas comfort.

During Christmas week a solid Triangle program was run, the following features being selected because of their general appeal: "The Sawdust Ring," "Slumberland," "Sudden Jim," "Golden Rule Kate" and "The Food Gamblers."

The plan increased the popularity of his house to such an extent that Mr. Warshower expects to co-operate with another school in the neighborhood in the same way during January.

Gives Three Shows for Prisoners

The Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn., is doing a different kind of "bit" from what most of the country is doing. This does not mean that the company is unpatriotic, because it is just the opposite, but when everybody is engaged in helping win the war, charity of a different kind is quite outstanding. President Ludekum continues to show a five-reel feature and comedy at the state penitentiary each Saturday for the convicts free of charge with the machine which he installed over a year ago, and at considerable expense. The prisoners regard the affable picture magnate as one of their closest of friends, and although the rental of films is higher and there are other expensive features to be considered, the weekly shows continue to be the greatest source of pleasure for the unfortunates.

Three Thousand Seats Are Too Few

Plans have been drawn by D. J. Spence for the enlarging of the Francais Theater, one of the four theaters in Montreal controlled by the Canadian United Theater Company. The Francais is one of the largest film houses in Montreal, with its three thousand seating capacity, yet it is practically filled at each of the three performances given daily including Sunday. There is sufficient open area around the theater to permit the erection of spacious additions and the work will be undertaken shortly, it is announced. This company recently opened the Princess in Montreal, for vaudeville and pictures. The Princess also has a seating capacity of about 3,000.

Censors Pass on Stage Drama

The Nashville, Tenn., board of censors last week notified the management of the Orpheum Theater, a legitimate house, that no showing of "Her Unborn Child" would be permitted until the picture had been approved by the board. The action of the board was sustained by Mayor Wm. Gupton, who issued orders to Chief of Police Alex Barthell to permit no further billboard or street advertising of the play. The play was at first forbidden outright, but after a consultation by Manager W. H. Moxon and his attorneys with the censor board, it was agreed to run a special matinee on Monday afternoon to decide on the relative merits of the show. After reviewing the play, the board decided to pass it as being O. K., after having slashed a moving picture with a similar title some months ago. The title seemed to be the principal object of complaint in both cases.

Film Thieves Gain Rich Haul

Probably the largest film theft in the history of such affairs occurred in New York recently. Harlan P. Ross, delivery agent for a number of picture theaters on the New Jersey side of the Hudson, was the object of the thieves, who made away with his car and thirty-nine films. Ross was on his rounds of returning films to the exchanges and stopped his car in front of the Mecca building at Broadway and Forty-eighth street in order to take several film cases upstairs. When he returned five minutes later the car had disappeared. An appeal to the police resulted in the return of the motor, but the films, which were valued at $5,000, and Ross' coat, remained in the possession of the thieves. Almost all of the large producing companies suffered in the loss.

Farnsworth Heads Mastercraft Company

F. Eugene Fornsworth, President and Director-General of Mastercraft Photo-Play Corporation.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the forming of the Mastercraft Photo-Play Corporation. The entrance of this new corporation into the field of motion pictures brings to the screen the works of Thomas Dixon, Jr., whose "Birth of a Nation" has not only made more money than any other photoplay production ever produced, but also marked the entrance of the high admission prices into the art of the silent drama.

F. Eugene Farnsworth, who has been associated with the industry ever since the first motion pictures were presented, will be the president and director general of the new corporation. Mr. Farnsworth, during his early life, won an international reputation as an artist after having studied under several well-known masters. After spending several years devoted to his art, he took up photography as a hobby and soon became the most noted photographer in his native city of Boston. When motion pictures were first shown, Mr. Farnsworth became interested in them and became desirous of having a motion picture camera. That was at the time when the Motion Picture Patents Company controlled not only the projecting machines, but also the cameras for making the films. Mr. Farnsworth secured a motion picture camera from the Patents Company—the first motion picture camera that was ever owned in this country outside of the Patents Company. With this camera he traveled all over the world making pictures which he used for lecture purposes.

E. H. Sherburne, one of the biggest sugar men in the country, and who also has been interested in the manufacture of pictures for some time, will be the treasurer of the new corporation. Isaac Wolper, also of Boston, will be a member of the board of directors.

Mr. Farnsworth left New York last week for California, where he will devote his energies to arranging the details at the California studios of the new company, which will be located in Hollywood. Work on the first production is expected to start within four or five weeks. It will be a visualization of one of Thomas Dixon's novels.

In addition to the Western studios, the Mastercraft Photo-Play Corporation has purchased a large tract of land covering a little over fifty acres which is located on the Fellsway, a beautiful natural park at Medford, Mass.

"Daughter of Destiny"

Petrova Picture Through First Exhibitors' Circuit. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

AN offering of uncommon interest is found in Madame Petrova's picture "Daughter of Destiny," which packed the Rialto Theater Christmas week to overflowing. It is a story of the war but a romantic love story is paramount, and there are no war scenes, only allusions to the great struggle and the attempts of an envoy of Germany to annex as an ally the kingdom of Belmark, supposedly a buffer state between Germany and the world.

The daughter of the American Minister in Belmark consents to a morganatic marriage with the crown prince and the major part of the story concerns her fight to keep him for her own, and her final renunciation when she believes that through her Belmark may have peace. The story is beautifully told and staged and it is an ideal setting for the regal Petrova.

Seldom is a picture seen which holds such timely interest combined with such a wealth of romance. Royal personages are always popular in fiction and the drama, and where their popularity is a little on the wane in real life just at present, the screen can exploit them with impunity and be sure of their hearty welcome. Their very illusiveness makes them interesting to audiences and almost anything which concerns them seems probable. An exhibitor may feel certain that he is giving his patrons an offering of excellence when featuring this picture, as it is a vital piece of drama most commendably produced.

Petrova's popularity has much to do with making this picture a drawing card. She gives a notably fine performance of the American girl and she carries conviction by looking her part and maintaining her usual aloof and dignified manner. She is given splendid support by Thomas Harding, Anders Randolph, Henri Leone, Robert Broderick and Richard Garrick. George Irving directed the picture.

The story: Marion Ashley is the daughter of the American Minister to Belmark. She marries Franz Jorn, an artist who is in the employ of the German government. He endeavors to have Marion betray the secrets of the American Government which he knows her father possesses, but when she realizes the true calling of the man she leaves him.

Shortly after, Jorn is visited by a French Police Agent whom he kills, and then placing his own ring upon the agent's finger, he burns the house and escapes to Germany. Marion believes that she is a widow.

She meets the Crown Prince Leopold of Belmark and the two falling desperately in love, Marion consents to a morganatic marriage, the Prince swearing that no other woman shall ever be Queen.

Jorn, under an assumed name, goes to Belmark to incite the people against war, and the Emperor declares that unless Leopold weds the Princess Sophia, the Emperor's cousin, war will be declared and Belmark devastated. Leopold refuses, but, when Marion learns that the peace of Belmark is at stake, she absolves him from his promise.

The she learns that Belmark is to be an ally of the German government and she refuses to give up her husband. Jorn is then brought in and, dazed, Marion realizes that she was never Leopold's wife.

On the balcony of the palace, with the people surging in the square below, Leopold addresses his people and tells them that America will protect his country and theirs. A bomb is thrown at Leopold by one of Jorn's confederates, and Marion, seeing it, hurls herself in front of Leopold.

The balcony collapses and a section of falling marble kills Jorn. Marion and Leopold are miraculously saved, and they have won the good-will of the people of Belmark which is in a fair way towards becoming a republic.

"Molly Go Get 'Em"

Margarita Fischer Comedy-Drama Mutual Release of January 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MARGARITA FISCHER plays her usual comedy role of a harum-scarum girl in this five-reel production. There isn't a great deal of plot to the story and only a few of the situations are in themselves funny. Miss Fischer acts with a great deal of vivacity in an attempt to get comedy from the various scenes with the result that her work frequently seems forced and unnatural. The picture is not as good as the preceding numbers in the series, but it does not fall below standard enough to displease audiences which have liked the earlier comedy-dramas. If you have shown the other Margarita Fischer features to pleased audiences, you can be fairly certain that they will enjoy this, even though it lacks the spontaneity and the "touch and go" spirit of "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," and the "Miss Jackie" pictures.

The photography is very fine, of the usual American Film kind. The supporting cast of players, headed by Jack Mower, does satisfactory work. True Boardman appears as the bogus count. Mal Clements, Margaret Allen, David Howard and Emma Kluge are among the players. Lloyd Ingraham directed the picture from a story by Beatrice Van.

The story: Molly Allison is compelled to remain in the background until her older sister, Julia, has captured a husband.

The bogus Count Renaud, in reality a French crook, is a suitor for Julia's hand, with his weather eye on the Allison fortune. His partner in crime is Gordon Gilbert, who to further their design attempts to compromise Molly by inveigling her to a road-house over night after a framed-up breakdown of a motor car. Molly escapes and attempts to walk twenty miles home, when she is given a lift by a Chinese peddler. Her father, unconvinced by her story, puts her in "prison" for ten days on bread and water. She is released on condition that she make herself inconspicuous while the bogus count is being snared by Julia.

Accidentally meeting Renaud, who is smitten by her vivacious charms, she tells him that she is not related to the Allisons, that her real name is "Molly Go Get 'Em," that her mother was an Indian squaw, and that she is subject to aboriginal fits. This cures him of any interest in her, and he returns to Julia.

A burglar robs the Allison home, taking Julia's famous pearl necklace. Molly discovers the robber at work, follows him, and with the aid of Billy Wilcox, her sweetheart, holds up the thief and his pal while they are dividing the plunder. Unmasked, the robbers prove to be the bogus count and Gilbert.

Julia is prostrated, while Molly, who has proven her right to the title of "Molly Go Get 'Em," elopes with Billy in his motor car.

"Vengeance and the Woman"

Episode 3. Vitagraph Serial. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

BESSIE escapes from the cabin where the bandits have imprisoned her and flees over a swinging bridge to a high rock. She cuts the ropes which hold the bridge so that the bandits can not pursue her.

They leave her to spend the night there, knowing she can not escape, and go to a neighboring town to raid a saloon.

Blake receives a message from Bessie sent by her horse, and hurries to Eagle Rock to rescue her. As he is scaling the rock by means of a rope, the bandits arrive and shoot the rope strand by strand so that Blake falls onto the rocks far below.

This episode is exciting in every sense of the word and fairly takes away one's breath by each succeeding feat of daring. It will more than satisfy those lovers of serial pictures who expect, and keenly enjoy, a picture abounding in thrills.

Carol Halloway and William Duncan are the most courageous of stars and really amaze one by their life-risking accomplishments. Others in the cast are wholly capable and the western scenes chosen for a background are marvels of beauty.

"Framing Framers"

Triangle Picture, With Charles Gunn. Released December 30. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

"FRAMING Framers" is a picture exposing political graft and divulging the crooked methods of two politicians running for mayor. It is entertainingly told in a semi-serious vein. Although there is a great deal of kidnaping, fighting, blackmailing and dirty work in general, the tables are all ably turned in the nick of time by a breezy, ambitious, novelistically inclined reporter, who plays his part in brisk, white-flanneled comedy style. It is a lively entertainment for those who will be satisfied with a production in which the male members are given the preference and the two girls in the cast allowed to appear rather infrequently. No doubt the picture will meet with more approval from the men in the audience than from the feminine patrons for there is a lot of the rough-and-tumble element which the men enjoy.

Charles Gunn gives an enjoyable performance of the star reporter who is mistaken for a park bum and elevated to a position wherein he can give orders to his valet and receive money for doing so. Others in the capable cast are: George Pierce, Laura Sears, Edwin Jobson, Lee Phelps and Edward Martin.

The Story: Gordon Travis is a young reporter who is anxious to write a novel exposing political graft. Harrison Westfall, one of the candidates for mayor, is desirous of having his daughter Marian marry Lonnie Gorman, a worthless society fellow who can further his social ambitions. Sylvester Brandon, the opposing political candidate, hires a cabaret entertainer, Grace Garwood, to keep Lonnie away from the wedding and she ably succeeds in doing so.

Young Travis finds out the truth of the affair and when he refuses to be bribed and keep the secret, Westfall hires his men to beat the fellow up and leave him on a park bench.

Brandon makes a wager with a friend that he can pick out any park bum and elevate him to the position of gentleman by buying him the necessary wardrobe. His idea is to try and marry Ruth Westfall to some tramp and thus hurt her father politically.

Finding Travis on a park bench, Brandon elects him to carry out his scheme. Travis, realizing he can obtain material for his novel accepts the proposition. He meets Ruth Westfall and seriously falls in love with her.

After he is married to her he obtains affidavits from the gunmen and from Grace Garwood of the double frame-up, and taking them to the office of a neutral paper he calls in Westfall and Brandon. He promises to print the story unless they will both agree to make him the next mayor. Travis is thus made sure of the next election.

"Little Red Riding-Hood"

Wholesome Film Offers a Five Reel Juvenile Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

GOOD photography, poor acting, poor direction and no story—thus we may sum up the five-reel production which the Wholesome Film Corporation is releasing and which was acted by the Chicago Children Players. The camera work, to mention the film's best feature first, is unusually good throughout. Some very fine effects have been gained. Two "bits" worth special mention are the little scene of the children dancing on the revolving phonograph disc and the "dream angel" vision. But beyond its prettiness, there is little value to the picture except as a special offering for very young children. No one over ten years of age can be expected to enjoy the disjointed incidents, without a real plot, which make up the picture.

Although entitled "Little Red Riding-Hood," this story occupies only a portion of the last reel. About three reels of pictures show incidents at a children's party. These are not very interesting, and the pranks which the little girls perform have been pictured many, many times before. The last two reels show a series of dreams which the children have and include sketches from various fairy tales. The circus incident is the best of these. The others are uninteresting.

Although the cast is composed almost entirely of children, the picture lacks the naturalness and charm which this kind of feature usually has, regardless of story. These children are painfully artificial and self-conscious. The leading players pose instead of acting natural, and the majority in the group scenes seem unable to keep their eyes away from the camera. To see this picture is to appreciate anew the work of other producers who have used little children in plays and kept them natural and unstudied. The directors of this one have failed to do so.

"Face Value"

Mae Murray in Her Second Bluebird Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

ROBERT LEONARD, the director, and Mae Murray, the star, are credited also with the authorship of this story. It opens with a prologue in which Miss Murray plays a child's role, a ragged waif, with a shrewd commercial instinct, however. This opening incident, in which the youngster promotes a prizefight between the leaders of two gangs of boys, is original and has a mixture of pathos and comedy. Miss Murray, however, is rather unchildlike in these scenes.

The story proper deals with a girl's experiences after she has grown up, when she is still a pathetic, much abused little creature, until a young millionaire adopts her in a moment of impulsive generosity and faith in his own ability to read human nature. From that point on the trend of the plot is apparent.

While the story is improbable and in many respects hackneyed, it has some original twists. It will depend for its appeal mainly on the feeling which the audience has for the star. Miss Murray is very eccentric and artificial, but she is original. Some audiences will enjoy her caprices. Others will be annoyed. The picture is well produced and well photographed. The supporting cast does satisfactory work. Wheeler Oakman plays the generous young millionaire. Clarissa Selwynne plays his mother and looks and acts much more like a real lady of society than many players of similar roles.

The story: Joan Darby is introduced to us as the overworked aid of a washer-woman. She promoted a prizefight between two neighborhood "toughs" and when her employer tried to take the money away from her, she ran away.

Several years later, she meets one of the boys. He has become a thief and by means of threats, he induces her to aid him in a robbery. She is caught and sentenced to reform school. She leaps from the train and thus escapes. She meets a young man and tells him that she was trying to commit suicide because she had no home. He takes her to his beautiful home and induces his family to make her one of them, stating that he feels she is of fine character.

At a party, Joan's former friend, the thief, gains entrance and steals a necklace. Becoming frightened, he forces the jewels upon Joan. Joan returns them to her benefactor and prepares to go away. However, the young man learns the truth about the girl and persuades her to stay and become his wife.

"His Own People"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, With Harry Morey and Gladys Leslie. Released December 31. Reviewed by Helen Rockwell

THERE is an abundance of quaint charm in this Vitagraph offering which tells a simple, pretty little story in a most pleasing manner. The picturesque settings of an old Irish village, a bonny lassie with a wealth of golden curls, and in spite of her ragged skirts, the bearing and pride of a queen, and a big, genial blacksmith who has an eye for this particular bundle of loveliness, are some of the bright spots, which, to be seen, will most assuredly be enjoyed.

When Lady Mary visits the manor house and frankly admires the big brawny son of toil who shoes her horse, there is hate in the heart of the golden haired Molly until she learns that her sweetheart's head can not be thus easily turned, for he shows a preference for his own people.

The subtitles sparkle with Irish wit and are as refreshing as the characters which they describe. There are pleasing evidences of good direction in details which comically exploit dogs, and mules, and cats, and there are some romping children which add to the picture's attractiveness. The picture will please children and charm their elders and leave all in a satisfied state. William P. S. Earle was the director.

Gladys Leslie is delightful and sweet as Molly and remarkably decorative. Harry Morey is a manly blacksmith and Betty Blythe is pleasing as the Lady Mary.

The Story: Hugh O'Donnell is the big-hearted village blasksmith who loves the mischievous Molly Conway. When Lord Percival Cheltenham gives a house-party at his manor, Lady Mary Thorne has a chance to see the genial Hugh, and, impressed by his rugged manliness, asks him to call and make use of the library at the manor.

Molly is piqued and retaliates by flirting with Sir Percival. Hugh sees a way to make Molly jealous and win a promise from her lips so he accepts Lady Mary's invitation.

Molly wistfully steals up to the manor house to spy upon her sweetheart and is caught in the act by Sir Percival who forces her into the library and locking himself in the room with her, forces upon her his unwelcome attentions.

The Lady Mary is impressed by the blacksmith.

In the meantime a mob of angry peasants arrive at the manor to have vengeance upon Sir Percival for having ordered a poacher shot. Hugh, in a mad search for the victim of their wrath, breaks open the library door in time to save Molly from harm.

Molly in shame and terror flees from Hugh's accusing eyes, but later goes to his home to explain, and is happily enfolded in his arms.

"The Wolf and His Mate"

Louise Lovely in Butterfly Release of January 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

WITH its western settings and characters and a romantic little story, this is a pleasing picture play. It is played in an entertaining, rather leisurely fashion. It deals with a love affair between "The Wolf," a "bad man," and a girl whom he marries in order to gain possession of her property, a cabin he has taken a fancy to. The girl stays for spite and although each hates the other in the beginning of the story, in the end of course they fall in love.

The principals, Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie, act their roles very intelligently and the story gains its charm because of their clever playing, for the story itself is not very convincing. But taken as a whole, it will be well liked generally. There is enough action, pretty scenes and love interest, to appeal to the average audience very definitely.

E. J. LeSaint is the director and he has handled his story satisfactorily. Julia Maier and Doris Schroeder are the authors of the plot and scenario, respectively.

The story: Donald Bayne is known through the North as "The Wolf" because of his forceful, domineering methods. When Steve Nolan succeeded in winning a law suit which took away "The Wolf's" cabin, a fight seemed inevitable. Nolan, however, was accidentally killed and in a will left the cabin to Bess Nolan, his niece. Bess and her little cousin went there to live but Bayne ordered them away. When Bess refused to leave, Bayne forced her to marry him and in this way got legal possession of the coveted cabin. Bess still remained firm and Bayne was astonished at her determination. Also he stood in awe of her. Her contempt began to hurt him for he grew to love her. But when he saved Bess's little cousin from other relatives who were trying to kidnap her and train her to be a thief, he won the heart of Bess.

"The German Curse in Russia"

Donald C. Thompson's Pictures from Russia Released Through Pathe. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

OFFERINGS such as this one make us realize anew the wonderful value of the motion picture. Here are five reels of scenes taken in Russia by Donald C. Thompson and showing conditions during the war and the recent revolutions. These pictures impress one as no written words ever could.

They show a variety of scenes, from street speech-making in the Russian cities to "over the top" attacks in the battle lines. They have been very intelligently edited with the purpose of impressing upon their viewers the great damage done by German propaganda and the lies and treachery by which the people were misled. A clever touch is noted in the subtitles, in which the words "german" and "hun" are written without capital letters, even when they begin a sentence, and AMERICA is always "upper case."

The pictures are of great value in instructing our people in the real conditions against which Russia struggled. They certainly should be shown in as many theaters as possible. They are intensely interesting and varied. Among the scenes presented are those in the Russian cities at the time of the overthrow of the czar, the poorly equipped troops and their great bravery, the women's "Battalion of Death," and the noted suffragist, Emmeline Pankhurst, reviewing them, sea battle scenes, and many others of equal interest.

The pictures are, many of them, very gruesome. They impress one with the reality of grim war. The average exhibitor will want to run them just as they are, but there are some theaters, catering largely to women and children, who can with profit cut some of the most terrifying incidents without injuring the picture as a whole.

Thriller in New Hart Pictures

William S. Hart does not, as a rule, present stunts of a sensational character in his photoplay work, but in his newest Thomas H. Ince production to be released by Artcraft, "Wolves of the Rail," the well-known portrayer of western roles performs a feat that for actual daring rarely has been equaled in the history of the screen, it is announced. The plot of "Wolves of the Rail" provides that a gang of Mexican bandits send a "live" locomotive crashing into a railroad train on which is a body of United States soldiers. Hart discovers the Mexicans' plot and, putting spurs to his horse, starts in a mad pursuit of the on-rushing engine. After a spurt Hart swings himself into the engine cab in time to throw the lever in reverse, bringing the locomotive to a standstill and preventing the collision. In making this scene, Hart was compelled to do without the usual rehearsals and to ride a horse that was, in addition to being new to motion pictures, "engine shy."

Buys Newsboys Red Cross Memberships

Douglas Fairbanks last week stopped posing for pictures in Los Angeles for a day to go to San Diego for this city's Red Cross membership campaign, obtaining one thousand new members. His first act upon reaching the city was to draw a check for $100, to buy memberships in the Red Cross for San Diego newsboys.

A preliminary meeting was held and 25 Red Cross nurses were mobilized for the Fairbanks "drive," which started right after luncheon.

The first membership was sold to Mayor Louis J. Wilde in front of the U. S. Grant Hotel, after Fairbanks and the 25 Red Cross nurses in ten automobiles rolled up to the curb, followed by fifty boy scouts. Standing up in the machine Fairbanks took the mayor's money, gave him the membership certificate and then started soliciting the surrounding crowd, which had gathered as if for a "regular" movie performance.

After that the party visited the various department stores, and motion picture theaters, also stopping at prominent street corners, completing a strenuous day's work for an excellent cause.

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

Sudekum Now a Captain

Harry Sudekum, prominent Nashville, Tenn., moving picture and vaudeville magnate, has joined the Tennessee national guard and has been commissioned in the quartermaster's corps, with the rank of captain. Mr. Sudekum began his theater career in Nashville in 1907, and since that time has been manager of the Princess Theater. The Princess has enjoyed a most successful run under his management, and while his duties for the present will permit of his remaining in Nashville, his loss to the city's amusement interests will be keenly realized.

Curtail Shows to Save

Springfield, O., theaters have announced a new plan for helping the government conserve its supply of coal. Hours of opening moving picture houses in that city were shifted from eleven a. m. to 1:30 p. m. and the final show of the day will close at 9 p. m. instead of 10 p. m. This will mean the loss of thirty working hours a week and the receipts equal to the proceeds of three days, but the Springfield exhibitors feel that they are performing a patriotic duty. The theaters observing the new opening and closing hours are the Princess, Fairbanks, Majestic, Colonial, Alhambra, Hippodrome and Victoria.

House Changes Hands

The Kozy moving picture theater in Dresden, Tenn., has been sold by W. A. McCuan to Clerk W. J. Jeter and Deputy Sheriff Bonnie Bullock. The new managers took charge at once and are now operating the theater. L. W. McCuan, who had been managing the house for the last two years, joined the aviation service three weeks ago. The elder McCuan is engaged in other business in this town and felt his inability to operate the theater with his present connections.

Picture Theaters Increase

In St. Paul, Minn., there are now thirty-five moving picture theaters. This number represents a considerable increase in amusement places in the last few years.

Resist Censorship Plan

Moving picture interests of New Orleans are united in their protest against the censorship proposed in a sermon by Rev. C. W. Bishop, pastor of the Free Church of the Annunciation. In a special sermon on the subject of censorship the Rev. Mr. Bishop declared that a moral standard for all photoplays should be fixed and adhered to. Film men declare the minister's stand is unreasonable in that no "set" standard could be arrived at that would apply to all picture productions.

Too Cold for Popcorn

Manager L. Rubenstein of the New Arion Theater in Minneapolis, Minn., has taken in the popcorn stand that occupied his lobby and announced that he would return it to its place again in the spring. Mr. Rubenstein is confident that the small theater owner is about to enter upon the most prosperous period of the industry. In his house, he says, attendance has been increasing steadily of late.

Theaters Aid Red Cross

The moving picture theaters of Harrisburg, Pa., were practically turned over to the Red Cross for the one week membership campaign. Speakers appeared in practically every theater of the city explaining the work of the Red Cross, and urging patrons of the Harrisburg houses to join. Several members of the senior class of the Technical High School, who are especially capable as speakers, took a prominent part in the campaign.

Wants Another Theater

The Adanac Theater, 1398 Queen Street West, Toronto, has been bought by Manley Sine for Mr. J. Campbell who took the house over a few months ago when the weekly receipts were around $55.00. Under changed methods, however, the theater soon picked up a good family patronage. Mr. Campbell is in the market for another theater.

Manages Loew House

A. B. Morrison, a Memphis man, has been appointed manager of the new Memphis, Tenn., Loew house known as Loew's Princess. While in Memphis recently Marcus Loew continued negotiations for building the new Loew theater there, which will replace the Lyceum, the present Loew house. This new house has been contemplated for some time, and will be complete in every detail, to operate on popular prices, combination vaudeville and moving pictures.

Epidemic Closes Theater

The Orpheum Theater of Helena, Mont,. was forced to close for several days recently on account of an epidemic of scarlet fever. An ordinance was passed by the city council prohibiting anyone under twenty-one years of age from attending public performances of any kind. On this account Manager Julius Mitchke decided that he could not operate his house.

Improve Pittsburgh Theater

J. F. Sawyer and B. Reed are planning to make the Olympic Theater in Pittsburgh one of the finest motion picture playhouses in that city. Improvements on the front of the theater which are under way will cost $35,000 and an addition costing in the neighborhood of $50,000 is nearing completion, which will extend the theater from Fifth avenue to Diamond street.

Theater Owner Fined

On a charge of failing to carry a four-foot censorship board announcement on a film shown in his Lyric Theater in York, Pennsylvania, Edward Gentzler has been fined $15 and costs. Gentzler claimed he was not responsible for the omission and placed the blame upon the Baltimore exchange that supplied the film.

Girl Ushers in Uniform

Manager Corbett of the Harper theater in Chicago, is a booster of the Chicago American's "Go to Movie Week"—Christmas to New Year's. As a special attraction for the week the girl ushers of the theater discarded their customary black and white costumes and wore soldier's uniforms and caps.

Bruce played opposite Mabel Taliaferro in the Metro picture,"The Barricade," and as a star in his own right in "The Devil at His Elbow!"

Julian L'Estrange, leading man with Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of the Broadway play, "Daybreak," made his motion picture debut in a screen version of "The Morals of Marcus" with Marie Doro. L'Estrange was engaged to interpret the same character in this picture that he acted in a stage production of the play in England.

Sidney D'Albrook, who played the character role of the Italian in the Metro patriotic special picture, "Draft 258," has been engaged to play a plain-clothes man in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "Under Suspicion," a new Metro play which is being directed by William S. Davis.

Helen Ferguson has just completed her fifth pair of socks for the Sammies. This Essanay actress knits every minute of the day while not appearing before the camera, and has also made two heavy sweaters and three helmets.

Lawrence D'Orsay, the famous English actor, has returned to the New York stage after finishing his work in Taylor Holmes' picture, "Ruggles of Red Gap."

In "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," the story written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, which is being filmed by William Fox, there is a scene in which George Walsh, as Young Spurlock, Harvard student, spars with a bear—the latter with boxing gloves on his front feet. The animal had been trained to box while in vaudeville and proved so shifty while engaged with Walsh that the latter got rattled and kicked him in the ribs. Quite naturally the bear objected to this and started after Walsh in real bear fashion. A window had been left open for an emergency, and Walsh went through it like a meteor. Mr. Bear tried to follow, but was subdued and finally soothed by his trainer.

Mae Marsh is the star of "Fields of Honor." A Goldwyn production written by Irvin S. Cobb.

Upon completion of her George K. Spoor photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," Mary MacLane gave an autographed copy of her book: "I, Mary MacLane," to each member of her company, including Arthur Berthelet, her director.

While trying to show her director how to sit astride a pack mule on their descent into the Grand Canyon of Arizona, Virginia Valli was tumbled head first over the animal's head onto the rocks. She suffered only a few bruises.

On the day preceding Christmas Theda Bara distributed many gifts among the employes of the studio at Fort Lee, where she is working under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Not even the property boys were forgotten.

In honor of Margaret Mayo and A. M. Kennedy, managing director of the Goldwyn Studio, a banquet was given by the employes of the plant. There were good-fellowship speeches and handshakings without number given by everyone to everyone else, and to Miss Mayo and Mr. Kennedy were presented handsome loving cups as well.

Robert G. Vignola, who for two and a half years has been one of Famous Players' most successful and artistic directors, has just renewed his contract for a year. Of late, Mr. Vignola has been personal director for Pauline Frederick in almost all of her Paramount pictures.

It was 28 degrees above zero in St. Augustine, Florida, at the time when Pauline Frederick and a company of Paramount players were there to film scenes for "La Tosca," Miss Frederick's newest production for Paramount. As Tosca never acquired the habit of wearing fur-lined gowns or of dressing for the rigors of winter time, Miss Frederick sustained a severe chill during the taking of one of the scenes, and it was only by the application of hot-water bottles, steaming hot tea and a bribe to procure from the hotel management an extra amount of steam heat, that Miss Frederick was brought back from the imaginary Greenland's icy mountains to a more normal temperature condition.

Herman Lieb, who plays the attorney in support of Emily Stevens in Metro's picturization of the Broadway play, "Daybreak," is a pioneer of the motion picture business, having written and directed one-reelers for Essanay in Chicago in 1909.

Immediately after the holidays Marguerite Clark began a new production for Paramount. Miss Clark's newest starring vehicle is to be "Prunella," adapted from the famous play-fantasy of that name.

The camera man filming scenes of Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap" ground his camera until his blood ran cold one day while taking scenes in Arizona. A horde of several hundred cattle becoming fascinated by the camera before them, charged straight at it. "And I thought that we'd have a hard time trying to keep them before the camera," laughed Mr. Holmes.

Mildred Davis has been engaged to play the role of Margery Gordon in "The House of Hearts," starring Viola Dana, which is an adaptation of Myrtle Reed's novel, "A Weaver of Dreams." Miss Davis made her motion picture debut recently at Universal City, where she appeared in "Fighting Mad," a Bluebird production.

FOR EXHIBITORS WHO WOULD KNOW THE STORY OF THE PICTURE

Feature Programs

Bluebird

Face Value—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 14.—Mae Murray is the star of this feature, which is her second Bluebird production. Wheeler Oakman plays opposite. The story concerns a little waif who is adopted into a wealthy home on faith. She proves worthy of the faith. Robert Leonard and Mae Murray are the authors of the story. Reviewed in this issue.

Butterfly

The Wolf and His Mate—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 7.—Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie play the leads. A western story with appeal. Reviewed in this issue.

Exhibitors Circuit

A Daughter of Destiny—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 7.—This is a story which fits the regal Petrova very well, since it concerns royalty and has an atmosphere of stateliness and dignity. It concerns an American girl who becomes the morganatic wife of a European prince. There is a timely element in the story, and the present war is woven into the plot, although there are no battle scenes. Reviewed in this issue.

Goldwyn

Thais—(FIVE REELS)—DECEMBER 25.—Mary Garden is featured in this screen version of the story by Anatole France. Hamilton Revelle plays opposite. "Thais" tells the story of a beauty of ancient Alexandria, notorious for her many love affairs. A wealthy young man named Paphnutius is attracted by Thais, but leaving her home one evening is set upon by a jealous rival whom he slays in self-defence. Having lately become a convert to Christianity from his pagan belief, he knows that murder is a crime against heaven, and in his great remorse he becomes a monk and goes far out on the desert to live in expiation of his sin. While he becomes known throughout the world for his sanctity, Thais becomes the very queen of riotous living. Then Paphnutius conceives the idea that it would give the cause of Christianity great impetus if he could convert Thais, so he goes to her home dressed in the rich garments of a friend over his coarse monk's robe. At first she is amused, then frightened, as he follows her everywhere. And at last she yields to him, gives away or destroys all her worldly possessions, and follows him off into the desert where she becomes a nun. Flushed with his victory over sin Paphnutius returns to his holy brothers. But despite his high resolves he has fallen madly in love with Thais. For days he fights off his passion. But eventually it masters him and he deserts his priesthood to cross the desert to her. In the meantime Thais has won a great victory over herself, and when Paphnutius reaches her he finds her dying but consecrated to God.

New Play Picked for Taylor Holmes

George K. Spoor has begun production of Taylor Holmes' next picture, "A Pair of Sixes," by Edward Peple.

"A Pair of Sixes" is often called Mr. Peple's most successful stage play although he is well remembered for his "The College Widow," "The Prince Chap" and others.

The story concerns the farcical and mirthful results of a game of cards as a result of which T. Boggs Johns, an illustrious pill manufacturer, becomes the valet of his business partner. There is a wealth of opportunity for Mr. Holmes' inimitable fun and his dramatic genius, a strong love element and a surprise finish.

The production is in the hands of L. C. Windom, who produced "Ruggles of Red Gap," "Uneasy Money" and all other Taylor Holmes pictures.

Following "A Pair of Sixes," Taylor Holmes will start work on "The Rainbow Chaser," an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "Mr. Williams Takes a Chance," by Freeman Tilden.

Mme. Schumann-Heink meets Taylor Holmes. The scene took place at Albuquerque, N. Mex., where Mr. Holmes was making exteriors for the George K. Spoor feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap." Madam Schumann-Heink was on her way to California.

Mutual Pictures

Molly Go Get 'Em—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICAN—JANUARY 7.—Starring Margarita Fischer. A comedy drama dealing with the experiences of a lively girl who detects the false count who is courting her sister and shows him up as a thief. Reviewed in this issue.

Pathe

The German Curse in Russia—(FIVE REELS)—Donald C. Thompson photographed these scenes, which are very impressive and give a clearer idea of Russia's problems and conditions there. The picture is reviewed in this issue.

Triangle

Framing Framers—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 13.—Featuring Charles Gunn. A melodrama with excitement and humor. Reviewed in this issue.

Vitagraph

His Own People—(FIVE REELS)—DECEMBER 31.—Featuring Harry Morey and Gladys Leslie. An Irish story in which a poor young man attracts the attention of a wealthy lady but remains true to his first love. There are many complications of the comedy drama type. Reviewed in this issue.

Universal Program

Universal Screen Magazine No. 54—JANUARY 19.—Nature studies showing the life and the work of the bee. Preparedness and the part the dictagraph has played in secret service work. This device registers sounds that occur within 100 yards of it. It will be used by our boys in France to ward off surprise attacks. Engineering. Roadmaking. Agriculture; picking dates in California. Art; sculpturing in mud.

More Serials Planned By Laemmle

Carl Laemmle recently stated, in a forecast of Universal's activities for the forthcoming year, that his organization would go into the work of producing serials more extensively than ever. For six years the Universal forces have been making and distributing serials and had five chapter-stories either released, in the making or arranged for, when the year 1918 began.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are now appearing in "The Mystery Ship" and before that serial shall pass the tenth episode of its sixteenth-chapter career, Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed will start "The Bull's Eye" on its way. Supporting these stars will be an unusually numerous cavalcade of riders, for the plot of the piece deals exclusively with events upon the sheep and cattle ranges of the Southwest.

Lumsden Hare, who will soon be seen in the second vehicle starring Madame Olga Petrova, has returned to the spoken drama. The English artist is now appearing in "Lord and Lady Algy," at the new Broadhurst Theater in New York.

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Latest News of Chicago

The Fox Film Corporation filed a plea for an injunction in the Superior Court last week, denying the right of M. L. C. Funkhouser to censor Chicago's motion pictures. The suit, handled by Attorney Charles P. Schwartz, is directed against the city, the mayor, Superintendent of Police Schuettler and Major Funkhouser, asking that they be restrained from interfering with the "Cleopatra" film, in which Theda Bara is starred. The bill also attacks the ordinance under which the city imposes its censorship upon motion pictures.

Work has been started on a new picture theater to be erected at 4624-42 Sheridan road, just north of Wilson avenue. The building, which is to be erected by Walter W. Ahlschlager, the architect, who has drawn his own plans, will be one of the largest theaters in the outlying sections of the city. It will be known as the Pantheon and will occupy a frontage of 200 feet with a depth of 150 feet, east front. The theater will contain 3,050 seats. The remainder of the building will be given over to stores. The total investment, with the land, is approximately $600,000.

Through a blizzard little Mary McAlister went to South Bend, Indiana, Friday of Christmas week, to appear personally in the Auditorium Theater. The train was struck by a snow storm on the return trip to Chicago and for four hours the little Essanay actress "had the time of her life" watching the trainmen clearing the tracks. Mary addressed a full house at South Bend, spoke at the showing of "Young Mother Hubbard" and gave a new, impromptu speech.

A special showing of the Wholesome feature, "Little Red Riding-Hood," was given at the Castle Theater Thursday morning for the many children who had appeared in the production. The youngsters enjoyed the event greatly and applauded vigorously as their members appeared on the screen. They finished by giving three cheers for Manager Weil and the Castle Theater.

The new officers of the Theater Owners' Association, elected this week, are: President, Thomas Beatty; vice-president, George Henry; treasurer, Louis H. Frank; secretary, A. Powell; financial secretary, A. Kesner; sergeant at arms, A. Zilligen. The executive committee consists of H. A. Gundling, A. J. Krug, W. J. Mulligan and J. Cooper.

Richard R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, Inc., was received into the third degree of Masonry on the evening of January 5, at Birchwood Lodge, Rogers Park, Chicago. All his Masonic friends were present and made the welcome a momentous one.

Eddie Hearne, noted race pilot, drives the Roamer Special in William Russell's sixth feature production for the American Film Company. Barney Oldfield is in the picture, too, with his record shattering feat of a mile in 45 seconds flat. So that aside from Mr. Russell himself, the big feature of the picture, there are a good many other thrilling features.

Lee Mitchell, employed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the last ten years in various capacities, has been appointed manager of the Supply Department. Mr. Mitchell is a pioneer film man and is known by every exhibitor in the city.

W. A. Bach, general service manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., passed through Chicago last week, on his way to New York.

Eli Van Ronkel of the Chicago Jewel office, spent several days last week in Milwaukee in the interest of his firm.

The Schaefer Brothers' Theater Company, Chicago, has increased its capital stock from $6,000 to $600,000.

TRIANGLE

TRIANGLE

IS OPERATED
ON U. S. RAILROAD PRINCIPLES

While the Railroads of the United States represent an investment of billions and Triangle investment is but a fraction of this great sum; and while the railroads are a great governmental institution and Triangle but a private enterprise—yet principles of a common nature govern both and make Triangle worthy of more than passing attention.

Triangle in stabilizing the production and distribution of its pictures and issuing them in a program of the highest merit and utmost box-office power, has solved the problem of exhibitors who wish to be constantly certain of consistent service and ever-growing patronage.

Triangle has first and foremost the welfare of the exhibitor at heart. The success of Triangle exhibitors means the continued success of the Triangle investment of millions at the Culver City studios, and of the great Triangle distributing organization.

Triangle strikes at the heart of commercial weakness—waste. Like the government it will have no empty freights lying on side switches because of inefficiency. Every dollar of investment brings its proper return. Directors are artists who plan before they produce. Waste is as hateful in Triangle as a snake to a plainsman. The standing order is "Kill Waste."

There is a to-morrow, Mr. Exhibitor, which is as important as to-day. To-day should bear its profits, but to-morrow will see the public convinced that you and not your competitor are to be the continued success. Triangle exhibitors face to-morrow confidently, knowing that they are more than making good with the public to-day.

Film Clearing House Is Prospect

FIVE FIRMS REPORTED ORGANIZED IN MONEY SAVING PLAN

MERGER talk that has been rife in moving picture circles appears to have some foundation, according to the latest product of the "rumor factories." It is understood that five big corporations are about to announce the formation of a clearing house that will save the members well over a million dollars and will include the following firms: Metro Pictures Corporation, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, World Film Corporation, Mutual Film Corporation and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Negotiations Reported Progressing

During the last week negotiations reached the point where figures were discussed. All preliminary arrangements have been done away with. No contracts have been signed yet, but the papers will be ready for signatures some time next week, it is reported.

This is not to be a merger nor an amalgamation. None of the organizations involved will lose its individuality. It will mean the establishment of a clearing house for the selling of motion pictures, with each of the firms involved represented under the same roof but by its own salesmen. These combination headquarters will be established in all the cities where exchanges are located.

All Pay Manager's Salary

An office manager, who will be paid by the combination, will have supervision over each office, but he will not interfere in any manner with the selling of pictures.

It is easy to see where a tremendous overhead can be saved by such an arrangement as is now nearing completion. Numerous employes will become unnecessary, while the office rents saved will run into the thousands each month. There are other items involved which will bring the saving of the combination to between $30,000 and $40,000. One company alone, with twenty-five exchanges throughout the country, stands to save about $7.500 weekly, provided the arrangement goes through, as it now seems likely.

Official Announcement Expected

Nothing official has been reported regarding the deal. No one in any of the five organizations mentioned in the deal would comment officially, but enough has leaked out from the meetings held recently to warrant the assertion that all are in harmony with the proposition they have under consideration. Only minor details hold up its consummation.

Months ago the contemplated move was first projected. Since then the air above the local film colony has been rent continuously by the cry of merger and amalgamation. Still nothing definite ever was accomplished until now. There were conferences—daily gatherings. During the last week there have been several gatherings at the Hotel Astor in New York.

Other Firms May Join

It is quite possible that before the deal is thoroughly completed two more organizations will become interested. However, it can be authoritatively stated that Metro, Goldwyn, World, Mutual and First National are involved.

Such a move as is contemplated has long seemed inevitable. Prominent exhibitors have been clamoring for the move, believing undoubtedly that it would result in cheaper rentals. Only recently one of the biggest exhibitors in the United States came out with a lengthy statement urging an amalgamation.

Zukor Gives Birthday Dinner

Adolph Zukor was the host at a dinner last week to forty-five executives, district managers and department heads of the Famous Players-Lasky Company. The gathering marked Mr. Zukor's forty-fifth birthday, a fact which was touched upon by Jesse L. Lasky in a speech in which he introduced Mr. Zukor to a loving cup, the gift of the executive committee of the concern. Others who spoke were Elek J. Ludvigh, Jules E. Brulatour and John C. Graham, the firm's representative in Great Britatin, who has just returned from London with a report of the growth of American film interests abroad. Among the guests were Eugene Zukor, Arthur S. Friend, Emil E. Shauer, Walter E. Greene, Morris Kohn, Hiram Abrams, Al Lichtman, B. P. Schulberg, Ralph Kohn, Hugh Ford, Whitman Bennett, Frank Meyer, Robert MacAlarney, Arthur S. Kane, John C. Flinn, Charles C. Burr, Frederic Gage, J. Albert Thorn, Charles Moyer, Norris Wilcox, J. K. Burger, Pete Schmid, Alfred Botsford, B. P. Fineman, Herman, Wobber, C. E. Taudy, J. V. Chamberlin, Harry Asher, A. D. Flinton, W. L. Sherry, W. E. Smith, Max Goldstine, Lewis J. Selznick, Joseph Schenck, Carl H. Pierce and Julius Steger.

ARTCRAFT

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Brought capacity business around the holidays. Not as well liked as Rebecca."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Splendid. I cannot understand why the second day's run fell flat, but it did."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"The greatest picture we have run in some time. People liked it better than Joan the Woman. Broke all house records."—F. J. Dietlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"Wonderfully spectacular. Costumes and settings rich and sumptuous. Miss Farrar's 'Tezca' was fascinating, I thought. A picture that will lend prestige to any house. The public does like spectacle once in a while and this picture is the crowning achievement in that line."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"A fine picture which played to a large crowd on Christmas but it is not a picture that will please all classes of people, although they will all appreciate that it is a large production."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Neb.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"A knock-out. The kind of a play that the general public likes 'Little Mary' in."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

Down to Earth, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"A different though pleasing offering. We played to capacity three days."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

BLUEBIRD

Mother o' Mine, with Rupert Julian (Bluebird)—"We put this picture over to packed houses New Year's Day, using the good old music, such as 'Silver Threads,' and they're talking about it yet. One of the six best pictures I've run in five years."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

FOX

The Scarlet Pimpernel, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"I did not see this picture myself. Patrons expressed disapproval. Costume pictures are never money-getters here."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

Camille, with Theda Bara (Fox)—"Business fell down on the second day of a four-day run. Gradual decrease. With the right vehicle, Bara is always a drawing card."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

North of 53, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A good picture that pleased a good house. Farnum always gets them out to see him here. The only trouble is that Fox knows he is a drawing card and puts most of his pictures at prices above the average exhibitor."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

This Is the Life, with George Walsh (Fox)—"Walsh is great in this one. He is getting to be a big favorite. He is the best star on the Fox program."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

This Is the Life, with George Walsh (Fox)—"A good gymnastic exhibit with a fair story."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

All for a Husband, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"A 'surprise' picture that did not take. Favorable reviews are hard to understand, as two-thirds of my patrons were disappointed."—J. H. McDonald, Strand Theater, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Honor System, with Milton Sills (Fox)—"A wonderful production that played to good business on a two-day run in cold weather."—F. J. Deitlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Conscience, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—"A fine picture but you must see this picture from the beginning and pay close attention. It can easily be called a special."—F. J. Deitlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Thou Shalt Not Steal, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"A good picture, if you see it from the start. Good business."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The House of Terrible Scandals, with Ritchie (Fox)—"A very good slap-stick comedy but it would have been better in two reels instead of three."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Stolen Honor, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"A very good picture."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

GENERAL

Stingaree, with True Boardman (General)—"A wonderful picture. Patrons well pleased. A drawing card."—L. A. Keller, Lyric Theater, Middlebourne, W. Va.

GOLDWYN

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Good business. Goldwyn's best to date."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"A good comedy drama but it could have been better. Price is high."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"This star is liked. An O. K. comedy-drama."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"I can't say much for this. The people here were disappointed in this production."—Earl Mitchell, Jefferson Theater, De Soto, Minn.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Goldwyn)—"Rex Beach's best picture. Went over big for three days."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—"Drew big business. The only criticism is that it is too long and has too much action. They crowded in too many scenes."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

For the Freedom of the World, with E. K. Lincoln (Goldwyn)—"Business poor. Picture good but the first reel should be cut."—Mrs. R. G. Jordan, Hinsdale Theater, Hinsdale, Ill.—High class suburban audience.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—

"Splendid production, with a big race that is different. We charged 25 cents and 50 cents, gave 17 and 32 cents to the Red Cross, 3 and 5 cents to Uncle Sam and I kept 5 and 13 cents. My competitor, running The Little American, for 25 cents, advertised that he was not charging 50 cents for a 25-cent picture but was charging 25 cents for a 50-cent picture. But we did a fine business in spite of his knocking. This star is great." —J. P. Lannan, Swan Theater, Clarinda, Iowa.

JEWEL

The Man Without a County, with Florence La Badie (Thanhouser)—"This production is one of the best of its kind. Capacity business."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

KLEINE

The Land of Long Shadows, with Jack Gardner (Essanay-Perfection)—"This is a good picture and went over big here."—Earl Mitchell, Jefferson Theater, De Soto, Mo.

Skinner's Baby, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-Perfection)—"Drew well and pleased well. Its nature is rather risque."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

Black Beauty (Edison-Conquest Program No. 7) —"If this is a sample of Conquest Programs, I want to say that they are O. K. I think there were more pleased people in my house on this program than any regular program shown in a long time."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Pants, with Mary McAlister (Essanay)—"Excellent for any audience. Good business."—Mrs. R. G. Jordan, Hinsdale Theater, Hinsdale, Ill.—High class suburban audience.

METRO

The Millionaire's Double, with Lionel Barrymore (Metro)—"Fine picture. Star good. Good crowds."—Lon Burton, Marion Theater, Live Oak, Fla.

The Voice of Conscience, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"Business good. Metro is the best program here."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"Mediocre. Too drawn out the principal objection. That seems to be the fault of most Metros."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"Very good but bad weather hurt business. Bushman and Bayne are well liked here."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

The American Widow, with Ethel Barrymore (Metro)—"The star is no drawing card here. We just show to our average audience when we have her."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

MUTUAL

Snap Judgment, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Lively type of play that will please right well. Good business as Russell is becoming popular."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

Charity Castle, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Decidedly a most charming picture, refreshing, sweet and clean. Everybody, young and old, liked it and said so."—George A. Bleich, Empress Theater, Owensboro, Ky.

Peggy Leads the Way, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A splendid feature and this little star makes good, too."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Peggy Leads the Way, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Patrons are beginning to care more for Mary Miles Minter but it has taken a long time to get them thinking about her. Each picture now draws a larger crowd and they generally come away pleased with her work."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Her Country's Call, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"In my opinion this is the best Minter to date. Well produced. Big business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Molly Go Get 'Em, with Margarita Fischer (American-Mutual)—"A very poor title. When so much money is spent on pictures, we wish the producers would add a few more dollars and hire a good title writer for, after all, upon the title depends a big per cent of the drawing power of a picture."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

A Daughter of Maryland, with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—"A very pleasing drama of the South but the ending spoils the story."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

PARAMOUNT

Molly Entangled. with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Just an average picture. Paramount seems to be working this star hard as she has made more pictures than any other star in their series."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Third of the 'Bab' stories. The star does not seem to draw as she did in such releases as Snow White and The Valentine Girl. The picture is pleasing and that is about all that can be said about it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"About the same as the other Bab stories. Not much to them."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Tom Sawyer, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"Extra fine production and good from box-office angle."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Trouble Buster, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Did not please as well as this star's usual productions. Too light and kiddish."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Trouble Buster, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Good except for the same old sex and struggle stuff. A girl's blouse is torn off. Our patrons walked out. The incident was evidently simply worked in to use a fight. Why not keep such stories clean?"—Mrs. R. G. Jordan, Hinsdale Theater, Hinsdale, Ill.—High class suburban audience.

The Antics of Ann, with Ann Pennington (Paramount)—"This picture was great, with a star as good as Marguerite Clark."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Rise of Jennie Cushing, with Elsie Ferguson (Paramount)—"Everybody was pleased with this picture. The star is well liked although she is still new."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"I showed to more people on this than I did with Fairbanks in The Man From Painted Post the week before. The star is a big hit here and this picture seemed to please them all."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Jack and Jill, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A good picture. Business fair on a rainy day."—F. J. Deitlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

David Crockett, with Dustin Farnum (Paramount)—"Very good. All like him."—James E. Harris, Regent Theater, Prairie Du Chien, Wis.

The Cheat, with Fannie Ward (Paramount)—"A strong, powerful play."—James E. Harris, Regent Theater, Prairie Du Chien, Wis.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Miss Clark is a delightful Bab. A pleasing picture."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

Nan of Music Mountain, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"A very good picture, well received by a critical audience."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

The Eternal Temptress, with Lina Cavalieri (Paramount)—"A very pretty actress, who uses rather too many gestures. The play reflects slightly the foreign type of picture although effort has evidently been made to keep it as American as possible. There is not much to the story as a whole but Cavalieri's beauty offsets this. It is a picture better than fair and one that gets the money."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

PATHE

Stranded in Arcady, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—"First of this series. Aside from beautiful outdoor scenery and fine photography, a poor offering."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Stranded in Arcady, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—"My patrons did not seem to care for this picture. Not a compliment was given it by patrons as they passed out of the house."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Blind Man's Luck, with Mollie King (Pathe)—

"A very good play. Fair business. Star is good."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Painted Doll, with Russian players (Pathe)—"Poor business. Too many sub-titles. It's like reading a book."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

War and the Woman, with Florence La Badie (Pathe)—"A good picture, liked by all who saw it. Not too much war."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

SELECT

The Secret of the Storm Country, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"Six reels. Story is from the sequel to 'Tess of the Storm Country.' The star's acting is good. We played this at advanced prices."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Secret of the Storm Country, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"The plays with this star never fail to get me business. This one is the best yet. Big business."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Scandal, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—"Borders on suggestiveness but never reaches it. Settings good. This star will be a winner soon. The title is good for our box-office."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Her Silent Sacrifice, with Alice Brady (Select)—"Not for children. Title good. The story is taken from 'The Red Mouse.' The picture is no better than those the star made for World, but we have to pay more for it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Idolators, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A good picture which proved a big drawing card when advertised as the greatest vampire picture this star has ever made. The Triangle comedy with this subject had a good many laughs in it."—F. J. Deitlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

An Even Break, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"This ranks second to The Flame of the Yukon and pleased everybody. Miss Thomas is a coming star."—F. J. Deitlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Three of Many, with Clara Williams (Triangle)—"A fine picture. Book it and please your patrons.—F. J. Dietlein, Princess Theater, Opelousas, La.

Bawbs of Blue Ridge, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"A very good mountain story but this stuff has been worked to death."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Maternal Spark, with Irene Hunt (Triangle)—"Fair picture. Star unknown."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Good Bad Man, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"A repeat booking to capacity business in ten below zero weather."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Seeking Happiness, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Very good. Pleased my patrons. Business fair in stormy weather."—J. P. Lannan, Swan Theater, Clarinda, Iowa.

Wolf Lowry, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"A good picture. Business great. This is a re-issue but goes over just the same."—J. P. Lannan, Swan Theater, Clarinda, Iowa.

His Picture in the Papers, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"S. R. O. for three days. Fourth run."—J. W. Alexander, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

American, That's All, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"Only fair."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

American, That's All, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"This failed to register at any stage."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Love or Justice, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"The best picture Miss Glaum ever made."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

The Sudden Gentleman, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A good program picture."—A. K. Pay, Colonial Theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Sudden Gentleman, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"An excellent picture for entertainment value. A witty, humorous Irish play that will be liked in any locality."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

One-Shot Ross, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"One of the best western pictures I have ever shown. Broke all house records. Cast is great."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

Wild Sumac, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—"A dandy play of the Northwest mounted police. Big business. Star and cast very good."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Firefly of Tough Luck, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"Some western comedy-drama. Very well produced and well liked by my patrons. The cast is great."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Man Who Made Good, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"A fair production, played to big business."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Wild Winship's Widow, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"A well produced picture, handicapped by a poor title."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Hell's Hinges, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Greatest western made up to date. More people were turned away than could get in. This is the third run, at that."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

The Millionaire Vagrant, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"A fine picture and it pleases."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Wolf Lowry, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Did a good business but was not liked as well as other Hart vehicles."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Jim Bludsoe, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—"An average Triangle. Business fine."—J. W. Allender, Lyric Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Cassidy, with Dick Rosson (Triangle)—"A well-produced 'crook' picture. Dick Rosson will stand watching. His work in this is wonderful."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

The Ship of Doom, with Claire McDowell (Triangle)—"Of its kind a fine picture. Strong melodrama. Business extra good."—J. H. McDonald, Strand Theater, Walla Walla, Wash.

Up or Down (Triangle)—"A poor picture, bad title and no 'draft.'"—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Gown of Destiny, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"A fine show but it did not seem to appeal to a Saturday crowd."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Framing Framers (Triangle)—"A splendid feature but spoiled in christening. A very poor title."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

VITAGRAPH

Within the Law, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"Nine reels. A picture you can recommend to your patrons. Advertise it big as it is a box-office winner. Play up the title and feature the fact that it is a well known stage play. This picture could run two or three days in almost any neighborhood."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Dawn of Freedom, with Charles Richmond (Vitagraph)—"A great picture. Fine scenery. Patrons well pleased. Wonderful star."—L. A. Keller, Lyric Theater, Middlebourne, W. Va.

Arsene Lupin, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"An excellent mystery story and clean. Our people liked it."—Mrs. R. G. Jordan, Hinsdale Theater, Hinsdale, Ill.—High class suburban audience.

WORLD

Betsy Ross, with Alice Brady (World)—"Film in good condition. Subject timely, picture extra good. Star well known and popular. Attendance 80 per cent above my average. This program picture was advertised as a special and prices advanced to fifteen and twenty cents."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Volunteer, with Madge Evans (World)—"A novelty, something different. I had many complimentary remarks from our patrons on this picture, although it did not draw so well. Madge visits Ethel Clayton, Kittie Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montague Love and June Elvidge in actual studio scenes."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Dancer's Peril, with Alice Brady (World)—"Picture good. Star good. Fair crowd."—Lon Burton, Marion Theater, Live Oak, Fla.

Diamonds and Pearls, with Kitty Gordon (World)—"A love story with plenty of finery. Title O. K. as a box-office attraction. It was fairly good. Patrons liked it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

SERIALS AND SERIES

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter seven. This episode is an improvement over the last. Holds the interest well. All in all, a good serial. Attendance improving."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

Gloria's Romance, with Billie Burke (Kleine)—"This was very well liked here. Drew good crowds."—L. A. Keller, Lyric Theater, Middlebourne, West Va.

Who Is No. One? with Kathleen Clifford (Paramount)—"A cracker-jack serial. Has lots of pep to it."—James E. Harris, Regent Theater, Prairie Du Chien, Wisconsin.

The Neglected Wife, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—

"This serial proved a failure with us. Too strong. Business poor."—Lon Benton, Marion Theater, Live Oak, Fla.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph—"This serial is a complete success with us. Stars are good. Business fine."—Lon Benton, Marion Theater, Live Oak, Fla.

The Mystery of the Double Cross, with Mollie King (Pathe)—"Best serial I ever ran. The star is popular. Story keeps them guessing. Good business."—John H. Morgan, Majestic Theater, Jenks, Okla.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

On Trial (Essanay)—"A very good play, but it did not pull well for me."—R. V. Griner, Ideal Theater, Centralia, Wash.

On Trial (Essanay)—"A very good picture but it brought poor business."—Raymond Haas, Antoinette Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Barrier (Rex Beach)—"If all pictures were as good as this one, exhibitors would not need to worry their heads as to booking their programs. Excellent business. Patrons pleased."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Neb.

The Whip, with Irving Cummings (Paragon)—"Four days to fine business. The sort of melodrama that draws big."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

Alimony (First National Exhibitors' Circuit)—"Great advertising possibilities. Proper exploitation will get the money with this picture. Plenty of sustained interest."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

The Mormon Maid, with Mae Murray (Lasky)—"A sensation of its kind. Cannot be termed a good picture but it gets over."—Sylvia Grogg, Grogg's Theater and Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal.

My Country First (Tom Terriss)—"This may have been a good picture once but you cannot tell it now."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

Beware of Strangers, with Thomas Santschi (Selig)—"We did a very nice business on this production. It is a picture that all should see."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kan.

The Cold Deck, with W. S. Hart (Doll-Van)—"As a 'Hart' picture, this has a little of all his tricks, gambling, dare-devil horse-back fall, stage hold-up, hand to hand fight, pathos and heart interest. I liked it and so did all of my patrons. It has one draw-back. As this is a picture of the days of '49, Hart wears a high plug hat and a long black coat. We are so used to seeing him in his large brimmed hat and western togs that he seems out of place in the clothing of the early days."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

News Weeklies Aid U. S.

The Association of News Weeklies, of which Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, is president, has received a communication from George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information at Washington, officially mobilizing the news pictorials as part of the government organization. Mr. Cohn, E. B. Hatrick and Pell Mitchell are appointed as employes, assigned to the Division of Pictures at the nominal salary of $1 a year. All three men will take the oath of office, swearing allegiance to the United States.

Mr. Creel's letter is in part as follows:

"I have taken this unusual step because the so-called News Weeklies are becoming so much a part of the government work—in that they bring to the people pictures of the war, our preparations here, our work—that I want the co-operation to be the closest possible, and I feel that this will firmly cement your work with ours."

Change World Picture Title

The title of Ethel Clayton's next World-Picture, Brady-Made, has been changed from "Two Women," which was rather vague, to "Whims of Society," which has the advantage of carrying a distinct suggestion. The rich young man in this photoplay sets the beautiful but misused factory girl up in a fine apartment without any evil motive whatsoever, but gets himself disowned, just the same—which makes it look for a time as if the "virtue is its own reward" adage worked backward. In the end, however, the young couple are literally bombed into happiness and plenty.

Returns to Advertising Field

Lee D. Balsly, who for the last nine months has been manager of the Standard Film Corporation exchange at Kansas City, Mo., has announced his intention to resign his position with that organization to accept the situation of director of creative advertising for the Union Bank Note Company of Kansas City, one of the largest concerns of its kind now in operation. Six years ago Mr. Balsly was manager of the Aladdin and the Landers Theaters of Springfield, Mo.

Directors Return After Holidays

Director Cliff Smith, director of Western features at the Triangle studios, spent the Christmas holidays on a motor trip to San Diego. He was accompanied by his wife. Director Raymond Wells spent the Christmas holidays at Santa Catalina Island fishing for tuna, and is said to have had much luck. He is now back at work preparing to begin work on a new story, and it is expected he will start shooting within a few days.

Artcraft Releases War Drama

The next release of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation is an Elsie Ferguson photoplay, "Rose of the World," presenting a thrilling emotional war drama adapted from the popular book of the same name by Agnes and Edgerton Castle. This will be Artcraft's first offering for the new year and is released on January 7. Maurice Tourneur directed the production.

The Exposition

IN spite of the criticism and pessimism directed at the last two expositions, there is no denying that every exposition held boosts the picture industry along. The benefit may be intangible; what profits accrue from the big show may go mostly to a few individuals, and the trade that spends money for maintaining booths may record a loss; but the good influence is there just the same.

As a matter of general business principle, it would be hard to spend that much money in one place without getting considerable results. Charged up entirely to co-operative advertising it would still be bound to show ultimate returns enough to pay out. But it has a lot of other virtues, chief of which, perhaps, is its demonstration to the visiting exhibitor that the producers are real people, dependent on his success for theirs.

We have always thought that the people who make projection machines and signs and automatic orchestras and announcement devices and so on had a good bit the better of it at the expositions, because they always have something mechanical that the crowd can gather around and ask questions about and discuss. And so it seems to us that these particular people would make a big mistake not to present to the admiring view of the visitors all the working models and ingenious contraptions they can get together. There is nothing an exposition crowd likes better than to see the wheels go round.

The accessory side of the motion picture industry is not overworked. There is a great deal of opportunity in it that has not yet been properly energized. There are a good many manufacturers of meritorious accessories who are trying to feel their way into the game, uncertain whether they will be welcomed or not. The exposition is their chance to find out. It is a combination of display advertisement and personal introduction that gives a final report on the acceptability of anything new. In fact, it is the one logical place for the premiere of a new device, and we hope to see some of them there the second of February.

Consider the Big Exhibitor

REMEMBER the little exhibitor, we said last week, because the little exhibitor needs remembering. He needs help and encouragement and a reasonable merchandising scheme back of him, because he is not big enough to work out his own complete trade circuit from production to box office. He needs help not for his own sake, not because anybody should be sorry for him, but for the sake of the millions of entertainment-starved human beings who are dependent upon him for color in their gray lives. Maintaining a decent supply system for the small exhibitor is a work of welfare for the people.

We need not be so careful of the big exhibitor, because he is able to take care of himself. The consideration he gets at the hands of the supplying trade is practically dictated by him.

He gets what he wants because he is strong enough to demand it. Not even a boycott of producers would stop him; he would combine with some of his fellows and organize a producing company of his own. He pays the highest prices for pictures because in the broadness of his scheme any possible economy on film service would be insignificant and uninteresting. The best producers cater to him, are eager to show their products on his screen, because he presents them perfectly and with dignity and circumstance. His position gains publicity for his house and the producers who supply it. He is the direct connection between the best pictures and the best people.

The big exhibitor is entitled for his own sake to all the consideration he gets. His patrons need no uplifting and no welfare work. They get the best because they are willing and able to buy it, and it is the business of the best producers to supply it. The little exhibitor should have consideration because of his patrons, regardless of his own claim to it. The big exhibitor must have consideration because of his own great ability regardless of his patrons' claim to it. He is as much a big business man as any high-class merchant.

It is just as nearly true that every big exhibitor was once a small exhibitor as that every big business man was once a small business man. We think it is more nearly true that every small exhibitor may become a big exhibitor, than that every small business man may become a big business man. While theaters close for want of capital; want of business enterprise; want of ambition; want of ingenuity and resourcefulness, opportunity knocks louder and louder for those who remain.

Any increase in the number of failures generally serves to cast gloom over the rest of the industry. The pessimism is more psychological than logical, because every removal of a weak member increases opportunity for the rest. The closing of an abnormal number of small houses may distress their patrons, who must now go farther for their entertainment. It should not alarm their competitors and fellow exhibitors, whose own position is thereby improved rather than unsettled.

Naturally, small houses fail most frequently because of unprofitable operation. Lack of profit shows either an extravagant expense sheet or inadequate attendance. Almost always the latter is the reason; almost always the inexperienced exhibitor blames the expense, and tried to cut it down—a fatal error. It is a notable fact that the houses that spend lots of money seldom fail; the houses that skimp on operating expense often do.

The big exhibitors spend money—not extravagantly, but in a large way. They are big because they spend money. That is the only way a small business or a small business man can grow—can be made big; by spending money. That, then, is the essential difference between the little exhibitor and the big exhibitor. The little fellow keeps trying to cut down his expenditures. The big fellow keeps trying to increase them, so that he may attract more income.

Big success isn't just a matter of spending money. It is a matter of familiarity with infinite detail, and ability to form an organization competent to handle it. But every exhibitor should be master of such detail. He should, if he studies his business, be prepared to undertake any task it offers. He should be confident that nothing but lack of capital withholds from him the choicest position in the profession. He should be able to say to himself, with absolute sincerity, "I would be a big exhibitor if I had only capital, for I have everything else that is necessary."

When an exhibitor can say that and have it true, it is surprising how easily capital comes. There is nothing easier than financing a sure thing. There is nothing surer than a man of good character, thoroughly familiar with his business.

Picture theater failure is largely a matter of insufficient capital; not Wall street capital, but the local, home grown variety that finances the small town bank. Because the theater business is a cash business, people are too apt to think it requires no capital. Cash comes in as patronage enters, but good will accumulates slowly. It is good will that pays the profit. It is good will that must be financed until it has grown strong enough to support itself.

Compared with the profits of successful business, capital is cheap and should not be skimped. For though it is delightful to "shoestring" an enterprise up to goodly size, the resistance is great. It is safer to use the other fellow's money, give him his profit on it, and take yours out of the constantly expanding activities of your company. That is generally the very point which decides whether the little fellow shall become a big fellow. P. H. W.

Non-Taxable Music List Grows

MORE SELECTIONS LISTED THAT CAN BE PLAYED IN THEATER FREE

THE list of non-taxable music being compiled for the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, by Miss Katherine C. Melcher, continues to grow, putting before the owners of theaters an augmented supply of selections available for use without the payment of the tribute demanded by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Exhibitors and musicians will be particularly interested in seeing listed the publications of Sherman Clay & Company, of San Francisco, a music house that controls a large number of Hawaiian selections.

Export Films Are Censored

Censorship of motion picture films for export, to assure that anti-American propaganda will not be sent to the world, has been begun in Chicago. Rivers McNeill, collector of customs, under orders from Washington, inspected 60,000 feet of movie pictures to be shipped to South America one day last week.

The object is to halt any film offensive to the United States government or its allies, or which might give away war secrets or other information which could be of use to the enemy. Whenever film is to be shipped from Chicago, Mr. McNeill will sit as censor with an advisory board of army and navy officers.

Affidavits will also be required of the shipper as a guarantee that the film will not reach Germany or its allies as combustible film can be made over by a process of reduction, into war materials. The government has also served notice that it will keep track of exported films until they are destroyed.

It is claimed that certain films hitherto exported to South America have eventually fallen into hostile hands and the object is not to let this happen again. The origin of each picture will be looked into and the film will be inspected closely to ascertain whether there is any hidden meaning in the pictures or anything in the sub-titles which might contain a secret code by which messages could be conveyed by enemy spies.

Big Pictures For Small Exhibitors

TOO MANY GOOD PICTURES ARE NOT OFFERED TO LITTLE FELLOWS

BY ONE OF THEM

Speaking from the standpoint of the small exhibitor—and by that I mean the really small town exhibitor—the man in the town of 500 to 1500, the producer instead of encouraging and fostering the men who turn in a constantly increasing volume of business seems rather to be the greatest enemy to advancement which we are now facing. Inordinate greed is, of course, the motive which inspires the actions which handicap the small town man. I am not speaking especially of the fifteen cent reel tax either—enough has been said regarding that matter.

Every year hundreds and hundreds of splendid and timely pictures are produced and go into the discard without ever being thrown on the screen of the small town theaters. This is not because the exhibitor does not know about them and wish to show them to his patrons, but because they are not available at living prices until worn out, both as to physical condition and timeliness.

Fewer Films—More Prints

Why does the producer not make fewer pictures and more prints? Give the small town a look-in at a big timely picture in something less than a year to a year and a half and at a price that will allow a profit without putting an exorbitant tax on patrons in the way of admission price.

I tried a few months ago to secure a really worthy war picture and was prepared to pay four or five times my regular rates although the picture had then been released three months. The answer named a price that absolutely precluded my using the feature even by raising admissions and, with perfect weather, I could not have cleared. They added the cheering news that all prints were working and it would be far in the future if I was granted a date even at the figure which approached larceny.

Serial Prices Too High

Why not invest some of the many thousands of productions overhead in extra prints rather than extra features which they grind out so fast these days. The same applies to the serials. There are several now dealing with war and kindred topics. Before we can secure a dating at living prices the war will be over or conditions so changed that the picture would be laughed off the screen. Give the small towns a print within three months or less of the big town and let them be thus placed on a better footing before patrons and also profit by the big campaigns.

This story, written by a small town exhibitor, contains much interesting thought fodder. If you agree or disagree with him write and tell Motography. We are glad of an opportunity to give your views on these or any other exhibitor difficulties.

It is useless nowadays to hand us the old stock tale of the traveling film salesman. "A picture is good just as long as the story is good."

It is not true.

People Keep Informed

People know all about pictures and if they cannot go to the larger towns they read about the shows there and compare them with the home offerings. When a year or eighteen months after the large town dailies have carried a big display on some feature they see your modest announcement and ones and threes—all we can afford at present prices charged by the exchanges—they are apt to say, and with justice, too:

"That's too old for the price. Why doesn't he get something somewhere near new?"

Invited to a trade showing a short time ago, I became enthusiastic over the feature and wanted to book it. I was quoted a price that settled the matter at once and in addition informed that they were not featuring it in the small towns as yet.

Every Show a Gamble

In my town, and the same is true with all of the small town men, we gamble on weather, local conditions and many other things. A real large lodge gathering or social will sometimes spell the difference between loss and a fair profit. The larger town has a transient element that holds him up and a constantly changing local following. A dozen of the faithful may be absent but a dozen come who have been at some other show, etc. The small guy has no other dozen to draw in.

Stunts Bring Crowds

To hold and gain patronage in a small town I have found stunts the best of all things. That is, tacked on with good pictures—as good as we can get and make a profit. I do not mean the stunts and helps outlined by the busy gentlemen, who smoke their cigarets in some big city office and dream of sending costumed men and sandwich board men about the city, etc., etc.

The time-worn "grocery night" may be used, varying the gifts to suit the seasons and holidays. Potato admissions for children, seed corn admissions, rebate checks good some other night of the week, red haired people admitted free, birthday week in which people with birthdays that week, no matter what age, are admitted free. Right now we are advertising that all young people over a certain age, say sixty, are to be free. That gives the old folks a chance.

Seeks Valentine Plan

I am studying on some good plan for Valentine's day. Who knows a good one that will work out with a good feature? Make the people talk about your show and ask each other if they are going. We never yet brought in a new patron for a "stunt" that he did not come again.

Another thing! The small town man must not be stingy with complimentaries. Don't overdo the matter but don't let the folks call you "tight."

But to help the small chap hold up his end the producer and exchangeman should do a little thinking about the matter of extra prints and living prices on specials.

"Superb," Says Divine Sarah of Mary Garden

"Superb! Marvelous! Exquisite!" Such are the words of Sarah Bernhardt for the art of Mary Garden, as the great French actress witnessed it at her visit to the Strand Theater, New York, to see the screen "Thais."

Mary Garden's screen debut naturally drew record audiences to the Strand. Besides a great outpouring of the general public, distinguished persons in all the arts came in great numbers. Practically all the stars of the Metropolitan passed the brass ticket box during the week, and with few exceptions every stage star appearing in New York went to wonder at the marvel of the Garden pantomime. The motion picture studios were represented also, there being present all the directors who wished they might have fathered Mary Garden's debut in the cinema, not to mention scores of screen players who envied their colleagues the distinction of playing with the Goldwyn luminary.

Mme. Bernhardt entered the Strand in her wheel chair, accompanied by M. Deneubourg of her company, a secretary, and Hamilton Revelle, who plays in "Thais."

A trio of Artcraft stars—Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart, and Douglas Fairbanks

Hart Plays "Blue Blazes Rawden"

"Men with the Bark On" Figure in Compelling Story—Strong Cast for Film, to Be an Artcraft Release

WILLIAM S. HART, one of the world's most virile screen heroes—a figure of unforgettable qualities, tremendous vitality and compelling forcefulness—will be seen in "Blue Blazes Rawden," an Artcraft picture ideally suited, it is said, to the dramatic talents of the Thomas H. Ince star. Work on this photoplay which will follow "Wolves of the Rail," the next Hart picture, has already started in California.

In the cast appear beside Mr. Hart, in the title role, Maud George, Gertrude Claire, Hart Hoxie, Robert McKim and Robert Gordon. Every one of these possesses unlimited talent and each has been chosen because of special suitability to the character he or she will be called upon to depict.

The story of "Blue Blazes Rawden" concerns the adventures of a giant lumberman of the North Woods, who leaves the wilderness in search of the life and lights of the lumber camp saloons. He strikes Timber Cove like an avalanche and finds "Ladyfingers" Hilgarde, a renegade English gentleman, who is the big man of the camp. The instant dislike and conflict engendered between the two by virtue of their individual capacity for leadership, culminate in a fight wherein Hilgarde loses his life. Dying, he bequeaths to Rawden the task of explaining to his mother and brother, who are on their way from England. Blue Blazes swears the camp to secrecy before they arrive. Meanwhile, Babette, favored of the late leader, has transferred her affections to Rawden and resents the influence of the gentle old English woman over the rough lumberman. The latter, however, puts Babette out of his life and with the fury of a woman scorned she plans revenge. She tells Hilgarde's brother that Rawden killed "Ladyfingers." Inflamed by liquor, the boy accuses Blue Blazes and wounds him with a revolver shot.

Blazes prepares to take the long trail alone. Babette, now repentant, tries to make him take her but he puts her aside, and, like a wounded lion, but an entirely changed man, goes forth to take up a new life with the blessing of the mother's love as his benediction.

Lewis Deserts Screen

Sheldon Lewis, popular character actor of the screen and stage and husband of Virginia Pearson, will return to the spoken drama, upon conclusion of his present contract with Pathe.

Walsh Fits Role of Jack Spurlock

When George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, wrote "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," he selected Harvard as the school from which to requisition his hero in fiction. And Harvard is the place to find young men measuring up to the standard of Mr. Lorimer's Jack Spurlock—young chaps full of "pep," adventure, some spirits delighting in seeking strange experiences and more delighted in finding them, as they usually do.

"Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," now nearing completion at a William Fox studio, with George Walsh as star and Carl Harbaugh as director, will do credit to Harvard and bear out its traditions of having "live wires" among its students. The film story is virile in plot, interesting in action, fascinating in its horse sense philosophy and irresistable in its humor. The tale fits George Walsh to a dot and Walsh fits the tale—a strong combination.

Rothacker Declares Cash Dividend

Seven Per Cent Is Paid to Stockholders of Chicago Corporation for Fiscal Year of 1917

AT a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company held at Chicago, a cash dividend of 7% was declared on the preferred stock for the fiscal year of 1917.

General plans for a large extension of business activities were outlined by President Rothacker and approved by the board.

While the details of these plans will not be divulged to the trade until later, it is understood that they embrace special operations in New York and on the Pacific Coast, as well as some new ventures of magnitude at the Rothacker Studios.

A vote of thanks was given to the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for their expressions of praise for the work done on First National releases by the Rothacker Laboratory.

Freuler Announces "Screen Telegram"

Twice-a-week Current Events Reels to Be Distributed Through Mutual Film Corporation

"THE SCREEN TELEGRAM," a twice-a-week news reel, of a new type, is announced by John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation and various allied film enterprises.

This release is to be available at Mutual exchanges beginning the week of March 4, according to Mr. Freuler's announced plans. It will follow up and supplant the Mutual Weekly, which is one of the long established news reels in the film trade.

"We have laid elaborate and promising plans for the production and assembling of the Screen Telegram," said Mr. Freuler, discussing the new release at his New York offices. "We have arranged for an extensive system of foreign camera correspondence with a war news service from some new angles, which we expect will give an unusual attractiveness to the reel.

"I have been giving the news reels particular attention for a long period and I have come to the conclusion it has been a rather neglected field among the film producers. Improvements in this field have been very slow to come. Yet the enduring success of the Mutual Weekly and some of its better competitors, and their obvious value to the best theaters, prove the permanence of demand.

"In this production and assembling of the Screen Telegram we shall take advantage of all of our long experience in news film manufacture and distribution. While we are not ready to announce the complete staff of the 'Telegram' organization it is sufficient to assure that we have arranged for the services of the best available experts in the newspaper and news film fields.

"The Screen Telegram will be a true screen publication presented with refinements of make-up and dress which will make it a fitting unit in the best programs of the best theaters.

"The mechanical work of the Screen Telegram will be handled at the excellent laboratories and printing plant of the American Film Company, Inc., which is I hold a guaranty of a film product as near technical perfection as the market affords.

"This means that the Screen Telegram reels will be of the same high physical quality as the feature productions of that concern released through the Mutual Film Corporation. The American Film Company is famous for the quality of its prints and the excellence of its development, tinting and toning processes. This plant with its million feet a week capacity can give us all the speed we can use.

"The location of the printing and shipping plant of the Screen Telegram in Chicago at the American Film Company will afford the release special advantages as to time for the whole United States, while supplementary arrangements have been made for the printing and shipping of Screen Telegram 'extras' from New York and other important points when extraordinary conditions call for such a handling of the subject.

The Mutual from its Chicago offices is conducting negotiations with camera men in a number of points yet to be covered by the Screen Telegram. This detail of the organization is being handled through the office of Terry Ramsaye, the Mutual director of publicity.

Fox Cameraman Writes from France

"You will probably be interested in knowing that I am getting some good stuff both in movies and stills and in spite of the many inconveniences am really enjoying myself as a soldier."

So writes Leon H. Caverly, a former Fox Film Corporation cameraman, who is now in France taking war pictures for the United States Marine Corps. His letter, written November 28 from some point not indicated, was received in New York a few days ago. It was sent to E. D. Waldo, auditor of the Fox Company, a personal friend.

Mr. Caverly is a quartermaster sergeant in the headquarters company of the Fifth Regiment, Marine Corps. He went to France about eight months ago.

Overton Stars In "Blue Ribbon

Vitagraph Leading Man Appears with Corinne Griffith in "The Menace," Released January 21

"THE MENACE," featuring Corinne Griffith with Bert Overton is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the Blue Ribbon feature to be released during the week of January 21. It was directed by John Robertson, who now has Miss Griffith and Webster Campbell under his direction in the big picture which Vitagraph is making for the State Defense Council of New York in which Governor Whitman and other notables will appear.

Evart Overton and Corinne Griffith in a scene from Vitagraph's "The Menace," a Blue Ribbon feature.

In "The Menace," the Vitagraph president declares refined melodrama is brought to the screen in its very best form. The story is exceptionally well woven and designed to hold suspense until the very end of the production. The theme deals with a supposed hereditary taint, a leaning toward crime in a young man, and a girl's loyalty to the youth who does not know himself.

The production has been given splendid settings and many of its scenes were made on the Long Island estate of Percy Williams, former vaudevalle magnate. Mr. Williams' home is admitted to be one of the most beautiful in the east and its splendors are shown to the greatest advantage in the forthcoming Vitagraph production, it is said.

Thousand Dollars for Club's Fun

Among the workers at the Goldwyn studio a unique organization has been formed. They call it the Goldwyn Pleasure Club. Its object is to have a good time at frequent intervals. That the times will be good and the intervals many goes without saying, for all the stars have contributed generously. Margaret Mayo headed the list with a check for $1,000.

Hutchinson Says "Stand Firm"

DECLARES THERE IS STILL MUCH GOOD IN PICTURE MAKING

BY SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON
President American Film Company

THERE has been everything but wisdom and foresight in the manner in which some of the film trade went forth gaily to meet conditions of which they knew nothing—and cared less. As long as the revenues continued to roll in, they jubilantly continued on their way, secure in the thought that the goose that laid the golden egg would hang around the premises permanently.

But when the revenues began to slow down, they stopped short in their tracks. They betrayed considerable resentful bewilderment and began to blame everybody but themselves for a condition which they created in their own wilful ignorance.

Blame Wrongly Placed

They have blamed the present situation in the film industry on the war—on taxes; on the apathy of the people; on the misunderstanding of the legislators; on everything but the right thing.

They are in a situation that they have created for themselves and they are tangled in a web of their own weaving. For, to paraphrase a well-known quotation, "where there is no vision the pictures must perish."

Some of us who have been in the film business since it was started—who have learned to read the signs ahead and to look after our engines and see that they will carry us through in bad weather—who have sought to make the merit of our pictures speak for itself and who have tried to do business on the principle that there are still plenty of people in the country who like to be entertained with a wholesome picture of a tonic quality and a clean atmosphere—those of us who have learned this are more than ready to do our share in helping to adjust the interests of the film industry to the changed conditions of today.

Creative Period Ahead

We are loyal to the motion picture. We have been depending too largely on emergency action, as I view it. But before us there is a creative period in which we may utilize the apparent dullness of the industry to gather momentum for a future balance of prosperity and sincerity. There may be deflated values here and there, but such film producers as have had the vision to prepare for the reaction that we know must follow the first swift flights of fancy in the business may hope to come through this crucial period with a greater financial security than before.

That is, if we eliminate the non-essentials and get down to brass tacks—and WORK.

There is no great demand for pessimists in the picture business and the sooner they "grouse" themselves out of the industry the better for the industry itself.

First picture showing Constance Talmadge in her forthcoming Select release "The Shuttle."

Capable Cast in "The Shuttle"

The cast of "The Shuttle," Constance Talmadge's new production in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, has been selected, and work on the play is now well under way in the Morosco studios in Los Angeles.

Miss Talmadge's new leading man is Albert Roscoe, who plays the part of Lord Mount-Dustan, and other members of the cast are Edith Johnson, E. B. Tilton, Helen Dunbar, George McDaniel, Thomas Persse, Edward Peil and Casson Ferguson. Miss Talmadge in the role of Betty Vanderpool, unspoiled daughter of New York's greatest money king, has a characterization supremely suited to her personality. Betty possesses charm, an engaging directness and a penchant for getting her own way, all of which Miss Talmadge is well qualified to interpret. The picture is being directed by Rollin Sturgeon. It will be distributed by Select.

Look Who Is Here

Kate Price again will be seen on the screen in the support of Henry B. Walthall in his second Paralta play, "Humdrum Brown."

Margery Wilson is featured in "Flames of Chance." J. Barney Sherry is star of "Evidence." Both are current releases of the Triangle program.

"Evidence" On Triangle Program

J. Barney Sherry Is Featured Player; Margery Wilson Appears in "Flames of Chance," a Ladies' Home Journal Story

CAN a man of wealth and influence commit deliberate murder and by engaging competent counsel go free, in spite of the fact that he confesses? Such is the assertion often made by prominent attorneys and it is upon this premise that the Triangle drama "Evidence" is based.

"Evidence," scheduled as the first releases of the week of January 20, was written by Jack Cunningham of the Triangle scenario staff and is described as a drama of professional life, offering an entirely new theme for a dramatic production. The principal characters are John Corbin (J. Barney Sherry), a well-known New York attorney, and his closest friend, Dr. Richard Hyde (J. Howard Davies). Walter Edwards directed "Evidence."

Margery Wilson who did commendable work in "Without Honor," has the leading role in "Flames of Chance," scheduled for release the second part of the week. This story is an adaptation of "Three Godsons of Jeanette Contreau," by Francis W. Sullivan, which recently appeared in The Ladies Home Journal.

In this feature, Miss Wilson plays a dual role, first appearing as Jeanette Contreau, a pretty stenographer, who is desirous of aiding the boys at the front. Later she resorts to "camouflage" and transforms herself with a wig and old-fashioned clothes, from a pretty girl to an old woman. German intrigue is also shown at work in "Flames of Chance." Miss Wilson is supported by Jack Mulhall, a recent addition to the Triangle playing forces. Others in the cast are Wilbur Higbee and Anna Dodge. The picture was directed by Raymond Wells.

Gallons of trouble are turned into barrels of laughter in the Keystone comedy, "Courts and Cabarets," also released January 20. There are four sets of triflers in this comedy and they trifle with each other's hearts with such rapidity that they are all landed in court. And it so happens that Max Asher, appearing as the judge, has purchased a bracelet for one of the ladies in court and Max has to do some explaining before he clears himself.

"Their Indian Uncle," and "The Price of His Head," one-reel Triangle Komedies, complete the week's releases.

Celebrates First Year in Films

Miss Wenda Petit has been a film actress just one year. During this time she has been with the William Fox forces exclusively. She has advanced rapidly from small parts to the position of leading woman and has appeared with several of the Fox male stars, including William Farnum, George Walsh and Tom Mix. The principal pictures in which Miss Petit has been cast are "The Derelict," "The Broadway Sport," "This Is the Life," "The Heart of a Lion" and "Cupid's Round Up." She has worked in both the Eastern and Western studios, being now at Hollywood, Cal.

Deitrich Films Rinehart Story

De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Announces Doris Kenyon's First Picture Will Be "The Street of Seven Stars"

THE first feature to be presented by the new producing firm, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., starring Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, will be "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., concluded negotiations last week with Mrs. Rinehart for the motion picture rights to the story. It appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post and proved a "best-seller" in book form, attaining a sale of 250,000 copies.

"The Street of Seven Stars" is Mrs. Rinehart's most widely known story. By its publication in the Saturday Evening Post and its wide circulation in book form, it is estimated that fully 12,000,000 persons in the United States alone have read "The Street of Seven Stars."

Many attempts have been made to secure from Mrs. Rinehart the motion picture rights of this delightful story but she had withheld them pending a proposition whereby a suitable star could be secured for the portrayal of the charming heroine of her most beautiful story. As soon as Mrs. Rinehart learned that the story was intended for Miss Kenyon, she agreed to the sale of the rights to De Luxe Pictures, Inc., declaring Miss Kenyon to be ideal for the part. The heroine of "The Street of Seven Stars" is a musician and Miss Kenyon's well-known musical talent well fits her for the role.

"Miss Kenyon's great beauty, her girlishness and her personal charm, together with her marked dramatic ability will be important factors in tending to the great success of her appearance as the heroine of 'The Street of Seven Stars,'" declared Mrs. Rinehart. "I consider 'The Street of Seven Stars' my most beautiful and artistic story."

Trend of 1918 in Motion Pictures

"AN AWAKENING IS COMING TO THE FALLACY OF 'TRUSTING TO LUCK'"

BY M. H. HOFFMAN

THE trend of 1918 in motion picture is very clear to whomever will read what is written indelibly upon the signboard of progress. It is unmistakable.

For months past the forebodings of changes that are to better the industry have been rumbling, each week marking some new beginning which has been as inevitable as the tide.

Metaphorically speaking, tomorrow will usher in another departure; the day after yet another. Before summer breezes commence to blow, the present apprehensions will have melted before the assuaging influences of corrective measures that will reinvigorate every branch of the industry and benefit all who are striving sincerely to build upon a substantial foundation.

Nervousness Is Natural

It is not at all strange that so large a part of the trade should be nervously shaking. The making, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures are callings which are still young. The growth of the industry as a whole has been like a mushroom—so swift, indeed, that changes have ensued before those concerned in them had time to give them sufficient thought.

But another era of awakening is at hand. And profiting by past experiences, enlightened by the procedure of those men who are beginning to convince others of the efficiency of the "rule of wisdom," those who have been loath to cast off the shackles of charlatanism at last see the need of heeding the handwriting on the wall.

Days of Bluff Are Passing

The days of bluff and bluster; of broken promises and false values; of extravagance and careless management, are numbered. The "hip-hurrah" man, grown suddenly rich in spite of his pitiable conceit and limited store of brains, is commencing to realize that, after all, motion pictures must be treated as a commercial business and forever divorced from whatever will not tend to put them upon a sane business basis.

The war tax has been the final element to prod the obstinate into a realization that many of the methods in the making and distributing of motion pictures have been wrong. Most of those directly concerned have not known exactly what has composed the roots of the troubles; they have only known that they were somewhere about and should be pulled up.

One of the roots is the long existing fallacy of trusting to luck, of talking big about something small and doing nothing to help stabilize the industry.

Trust Too Much to Luck

We are all acquainted with this man, whether he has conducted his affairs either as an individual or corporation. Lying like a pirate, he has sought to profit at the expense of others; a leech sucking at the blood of honest business.

But he is doomed. A destroyer, he will be slowly trampled under the foot of progress. A few of his type, fattened by unearned and dishonorably gotten profits, will hang on for a while, but the rank and file of him has already been shunted upon the toboggan for a slide into obscurity where he can do no more harm.

During 1918 the stars will fall. Not all of them; not those who legitimately are stars, of course. I mean the $100 a week actor or actress who has been paid ten times his or her actual worth.

Before Father Time introduces to us youthful Nineteen Nineteen the readjustment of stars will have taken place. And the exhibitors will likewise have discovered that name alone will not hold his patrons; that the all-sided perfection of a picture, which he can rent at a livable price, is what his people really want.

And the dear old programs—they, too, are in for a change so severe that when the job is done their own progenitors won't know them. Going, going—presently to be gone—are the bookings of everything in sight put out by a single producer-distributor firm.

In its place is coming, on a scale that will sweep the country, the rise of the independent booking. No longer the club, to compel the exhibitor to rent five bad pictures in order to get one which is good. This weapon is being encased in waddings of thick cotton batting, so that its hardest wallops won't hurt a fly.

Beginning very soon will be the selection by exhibitors of the picture which has merit all the way through. He isn't going to be satisfied with a star unless that star appears in a photoplay that has for its basis a fine story that has been well told. The exhibitor will not book that picture, either, unless the star (or player of ability and repute) is cast for a role for which she or he is absolutely fitted. Nor will the exhibitor book that picture in preference to a better one unless it has a complete cast of players who "fit" their respective parts, and the entire picture—in direction, production, photography and lighting—be what a fine picture should be.

Hard Knocks Will Help

The industry is in for some hard knocks, but they will be constructive ones which are to bring it benefits. So let them come, for the industry is in sore need of a lusty chastisement to bring many in it to their senses.

For the concerns that survive there will be some excellent profits for 1918. And in these the sagacious exhibitor who moves with the advancing tide will share.

But let us not deceive ourselves. We will all profit most, and build more enduringly, by squelching the calamity-howler and the vociferous optimist and setting to work to right wrong conditions. So buck up, buckle down and get at the task which shall make 1918 the most memorable year in the industry.

Noted Producers With Paramount

John Emerson and Anita Loos Are Engaged by Jesse L. Lasky to Make Pictures for His Organization

AN announcement of exceptional interest to the exhibitor, the public, and to the entire motion picture industry has just been given out at the Paramount New York offices. It is to the effect that John Emerson, one of the greatest stage and motion picture directors in the business and his equally successful collaborator, Anita Loos, have been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky to provide a series of photoplay dramas for release by Paramount.

The pictures will be distinctly individual and will be known as the John Emerson and Anita Loos Productions for Paramount.

Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos, at the termination of their association as director and scenario writer for Douglas Fairbanks productions for Artcraft pictures, recently came to New York and it was not wholly unexpected that their future activities would be in connection with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The fact, however, that they are to be given carte blanche in their new association and are now enabled to continue to put forth the result of their best effort in their new productions for Paramount, is undisputably good news for the motion picture world.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, and in charge of all productions of that organization, said on the occasion of the signing of the Emerson-Loos contract:

"There is little need for me to point out the fact that this new affiliation is one that we are all glad to see consummated. The work of Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos speaks for itself. Judged by their past achievements, their success in the future is assured. Exhibitors and public have come to know the value of the Emerson-Loos collaboration in the picture drama, a collaboration, however, that demands and must receive the support of an organization prepared to give the proper artistic attention to the needs of production.

"I believe Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos will find in their new activities for Paramount, that artistic attention without which the best brains in the business cannot get results."

John Emerson today is a big figure in the screen world, just as a few years ago he was a commanding figure in the stage world. He is an example of what can be accomplished by highly specialized and constant training in the field where his activities lay. His education was received at the University of Chicago. Throughout his preparatory years he studied the stage, stagecraft, dramatic writing and acting constantly, until he had received a training such as few directors enjoy. He appeared on the stage in many notable productions and eventually was made general stage director for the Shuberts, under whose management he produced, among many plays, Clyde Fitch's last drama, "The City."

In 1911, Mr. Emerson was made general stage director for Charles Frohman, making all productions under that famous management until he appeared as a stage star in "The Conspiracy," of which he was the co-author.

Mr. Emerson was one of the first stage figures of leading prominence to see the present value and future possibilities in motion pictures. His first activities in the newer field were with Triangle in the production of "Old Heidleberg."

As general director for Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. Emerson attained his greatest degree of motion picture fame in the production of such pictures as "His Picture in the Paper," "Down to Earth," "The Americano," "Reaching for the Moon," "In Again, Out Again," and "Wild and Woolly," for Artcraft, in all of which Anita Loos acted as collaborator of scenario.

Miss Loos dates all her experience in pictures from the time she became production assistant to D. W. Griffith five years ago. Since that time she has had more than 250 scripts produced, which have attained for her a success and a degree of fame that is remarkable. Her training was received under the most favorable auspices, and the results showed in the remarkably fine titles written by Miss Loos for "Intolerance." As a title writer she is exceptionally facile, with a sense of humorous satire that has greatly pleased motion picture audiences all over the country.

The John Emerson and Anita Loos Productions for Paramount will deal with the highest class comedy dramas.

Pictures War Starting Shot

Killing of Austrian Archduke Is Graphically Reproduced in Goldwyn Production "Fields of Honor"

THE shot that rang around the world —the murder of the Archduke of Austria—never was more vividly reproduced than in "Fields of Honor," the Goldwyn picturization of Irvin S. Cobb's stirring story, starring wistful Mae Marsh.

For realism and fidelity to detail, the scene portraying the assassination of Francis Ferdinand at Sarajevo, Bosnia, has never been approached. So realistic is the screen version of the tragedy that one is forced to doubt whether it could be more so had a photographer clicked the actual killing—the event that transformed a peaceful world into a bloody battleground.

The archduke is seen chatting and laughing in his automobile with his aides, seemingly at peace with all the world. A second later bedlam reigns as the heir to the throne of the dual monarchy is seen to collapse when the smoke of the fatal shot dies away. Hundreds of Bosnians are depicted flocking around the vehicle, the majority of them undecided whether to aid the stricken archduke or join in the mad dash to apprehend his assassin.

"Fields of Honor" is replete with historic scenes, though the tragedy at Sarajevo will perhaps be best appreciated because of its significance in connection with the world war. Mae Marsh avails herself of every opportunity to prove her right to the title, "The Bernhardt of the Screen."

Mae Marsh is the star of "Fields of Honor," written for Goldwyn by Irvin S. Cobb.

Plays Different Role

Marguerite Clark has begun work on her next photoplay, "Prunella," for Paramount. Her role in this play is in striking contrast to that of her last picture, "The Seven Swans," and a comparison demonstrates the great versatility of the diminutive star.

Empey Story Promises Large Success

"OVER THE TOP" IS VITAGRAPH PICTURIZATION OF BEST WAR BOOK

SERGEANT Arthur Guy Empey, author of "Over the Top" and the most widely known personality developed by the war, who signed a contract with Albert E. Smith, President of the Vitagraph Company, to appear in a big special feature to be called "Over the Top" has started work.

Lois Meredith, specially engaged to appear with Sergeant Empey, plays the feminine lead. The production will be directed by Albert E. Smith, assisted by Wilfrid North and Sergeant Empey.

Empey, an American who volunteered for service with the British Expeditionary forces in France immediately after the sinking of the Lusitania, served eighteen months in the trenches. He was thrice wounded in battle and won his promotion for bravery in action.

To the exhibitors of the United States and Canada, President Smith avers, Empey offers the biggest possible attraction that could be brought to the screen at this time.

Empey Book Widely Read

His book, "Over the Top," the best known of all the war books, in only six months has been read by more than 2,500,000 persons on this side of the Atlantic alone. His publishers declare this to be a record in the book market.

The advertising his work has given him since his return to this country is enormous, and his magnetic personality has made him one of the real individuals of the nation. So appealing, so forceful is this remarkable young man that he has to his credit the sale of one million, eleven thousand dollars worth of Liberty Bonds in the second Liberty Loan Drive.

He has collected for various "smoke" funds more than $50,000.

Lois Meredith, who will play opposite Sgt. Empey in "Over the Top."

He has been an active worker, by lecture and personal appeal, in behalf of the Red Cross and autographed copies of his book, sold at auction for the benefit of smoke funds and the Red Cross, have brought as high as $2,000.

He has lectured in many of the principal cities of the United States and is booked for many months to come, so that by the end of his tour he will have lectured in practically every city and town of importance in the country.

A series of twelve special stories written by him is being printed in eighty-two big newspapers in all parts of the country. Among those publishing it are the New York Tribune, Baltimore Sun, Chicago Examiner and Boston Post. For these stories he has been paid the highest price ever given for special syndicate articles. Following these special articles, his book "Over the Top," is going to be syndicaed in newspapers all over the country.

A new book, called "First Call, or Guideposts to Berlin," is now on the presses of G. P. Putnam & Sons, publishers of "Over the Top," and was off the press on January 5.

Lectures Prove Popular

Empey's lectures, which bring the facts of the war and the trench life close to his hearers, have proved the sensation of the year. Wherever he has spoken he has been greeted by packed houses. Six lectures at Carnegie Hall, New York; five at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, and two at Symphony Hall, Boston, were "turn-away" affairs and were fair examples of the audiences he has encountered all over the country.

Thousands of men have enlisted in the army and navy as the result of the stirring pictures of German frightfulness presented by Empey.

Shows Box Office Value

These facts are offered by Vitagraph to show what a tremendous asset Empey will be to the exhibitors of the country. The deluge of advertising and publicity that he has already received and that will continue to come to him, make him one of the best known figures in American life.

This picture of Sgt. Arthur Guy Empey has appeared in hundreds of newspapers in America.

The signing of Empey for his appearance in "Over the Top" is a distinct accomplishment on the part of President Smith, of the Vitagraph company. Four other companies previously had made overtures to the Sergeant to appear on the screen, but he had refused them. He also has turned down several flattering offers to appear in vaudeville at enormous pay, declaring that he had no desire to make a show of the sufferings which the American soldiers and their allies are undergoing in the cause of civilization. He signed up for the Vitagraph production, he says, "simply in the hope that a motion picture adequately depicting conditions on the other side may serve further to awaken America to a realization of what we are up against."

Immediately upon the signing of the contract Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, wired all of his branch managers as follows:

"Vitagraph has just signed Sergeant Empey, author of 'Over the Top' and most widely advertised and best known hero of the European War. This is the biggest scoop for exhibitors ever obtained in the industry. The sale of Empey's book and the amount of publicity he has received in all newspapers large and small are unprecedented. So successful are his lectures that he is sought for by every community in the United States and Canada.

"The picture 'Over the Top' will be a drama but will contain Empey's actual experiences, staged and directed by himself. Work on the production starts January second."

The screen version of "Over the Top" has been prepared by Robert Gordon Anderson of the Putnam Company, a very close associate of Sergeant Empey and his publishing adviser. He has woven a thrilling love story in between the stirring events which Sergeant Empey's book details.

Motor Boat Chase Is Film Thriller

Madame Sonia Markova's second production as a William Fox star will be released to exhibitors January 20 under the title "A Heart's Revenge." This Fox Special Feature is said to contain a number of thrilling scenes, the climax being in an exciting motorboat chase on Buzzard's Bay. It is heralded as a picture replete in action and one that shows the new star to better advantage even than did her first production, "The Painted Madonna."

Erect Outdoor Screen

In connection with some experiments being conducted at the Paralta Studios in camera science and projection, a large outdoor screen has been erected, also a small building some distance away from which the pictures will be projected. The object of this research is to obtain some especially fine photographic effects for Miss Bessie Barriscale's next Paralta Play.

Three Goldwyn Releases Announced

Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor," Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" and Madge Kennedy in "Our Little Wife" Scheduled

GOLDWYN Pictures, having just launched the massive and impressive production, "Thais," starring Mary Garden, opens the new year with three pictures which present three distinct varieties of star and story-appeal.

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn's first star, is presented January 14 in a screen play that calls upon her for that fulness of emotional expression, that quality of pathos shot with wistfulness, for which the young actress is particularly noted. It is "Fields of Honor," made from the popular story by Irvin S. Cobb which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

It is a tale of trials and triumphs of a young French girl, who comes to America with her brother, her sister and her sister's Teutonic lover, just before the war. The fatal shot at Sarajevo, which incidentally, is splendidly portrayed on the screen, plunges the little family into sorrow just when America has begun to smile upon them. How the heroine wins happiness at last, after the French boy and the German have met on the battlefield, supplies the climax to the story. In the cast will be seen Vernon Steele, who appeared so successfully with Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," and Marguerite Marsh, who has acted already in a number of Goldwyn Pictures. The director is Ralph Ince.

The second Goldwyn star scheduled is a player in marked contrast to Miss Marsh—Mabel Normand. Her unique personality, long familiar to "fans" through her pioneer work in screen comedy, will be seen once more in motion picture theaters on January 28, through a vehicle supplied by Edgar Selwyn, playwright and manager, and A. M. Kennedy, director of productions at the Goldwyn studio. It is called "Lodging a Million" and it displays a Mabel Normand clad in silks and ermine.

As a maid in a modiste's shop, Miss Normand learns of a heritage of untold millions which is hers through the death of an unknown Spanish relative. The maid promptly blossoms forth in the richest of Hickson gowns and moves to the Ritz, where a wealthy young man, in the person of Tom Moore, makes her acquaintance.

With the addition of a mysterious stranger, who insists on edging his way into all of the heroine's daily comings and goings, the two pursue an eventful career involving a bottle of poison, the cat of a millionaire corset maker, irate bill collectors and the threat of death. The settings provided by the story include a fashionable restaurant where ice skating is the vogue, a glimpse of the Russian Ballet at the Metropolitan Opera House, a complete Fifth Avenue modiste's shop with mannequins and frocks galore, and a battery of express elevators. The director is George Loane Tucker.

The last of the Goldwyn trio, to be seen Feb. 10 in first-run theaters over the country, is the Goldwyn "discovery," Madge Kennedy, who has proved so popular and effective in "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married." As a contrast to the tense drama, shadowed by war, which is told in "Fields of Honor," and the swiftly moving mixture of comedy, mystery and thrills provided in "Lodging a Million," the newest vehicle for Madge Kennedy—"and her eyes and her smile"—will be "Our Little Wife," the famous Broadway play by Avery Hopwood.

It revolves about the perplexities of a bride who takes her three rejected lovers on her honeymoon and discovers that she has a violent and jealous husband who doesn't relish the consequent situations in the least. To the comedy of the initial situation is thus added possibilities of wrecked happiness which make the whole story swing back and forth with telling effect between contrasts of farce and genuine drama. Edward Dillon, formerly with D. W. Griffith's coast staff, directs "Our Little Wife." In the cast are Marguerite Marsh, George Forth, Walter Hiers, Kempton Greene and Wm. B. Davidson.

This Is Worth Knowing

Mary MacLane shows in her first and only screen appearance, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," the feminine manner of holding a cigarette. The cigarette is suspended from the right index finger by a thin silver wire. "It prevents the smoke from discoloring the fingers," she explains.

Clara Kimball Young in a scene from "The Marionettes," and Alice Brady in one of the scenes from "The Knife," both Select pictures.

"The Knife" Delayed By Illness

Alice Brady's New Select Production Held Up While Sets Are Rebuilt and Scenes Retaken

WORK on Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Knife," which is now being filmed under the direction of Robert C. Vignola at the Fifty-sixth street studio, has been held up by the illness of W. J. Kane, a member of the cast.

Kane, who was playing the part of Detective Ellis in the story, was taken seriously ill about a week ago and under doctor's orders was unable to resume his duties at the studio. With production at a standstill, Director Vignola was forced to appoint someone in his place and Frank Evans was chosen for the role. Three entire sets had to be rebuilt for the scenes in which Kane had appeared and retakes on these scenes are being rapidly rushed up-to-date. Consequently Miss Brady is enjoying an unexpected rest and will be absent from the studio for the next few days.

"The Knife" is another of Eugene Walter's famous Broadway successes and has been prepared for the screen by Charles Maigne. In the excellent cast provided for Miss Brady's support are Frank Morgan as her leading man, Craufurd Kent, Helen Lackaye, Paul Doucet, Alice Hollister, Jonnie Walker and Frank Evans. The story centers about a charming southern girl who comes to New York and falls into the hands of a white slave gang. It provides an excellent vehicle for the star and a role of great emotional force. As one of Miss Brady's Star Series, "The Knife" will be distributed by Select.

Fox Forecasts February Films

Announces Features Starring George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, Jewel Carmen and Tom Mix in Specials

WILLIAM FOX has announced his Special Features releases for February. George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, Jewel Carmen and Tom Mix will be the stars featured.

The first release will be the "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal" production which George Walsh is completing under the direction of Carl Harbaugh. This is down for February 3, and is the picture which the Fox management is advertising as a big extra-special production, made exclusively for those who have contracts for Fox Special Features. The story is taken from the book of the same name written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and the claim is made that more was paid for it than for any other story purchased by Mr. Fox during 1917.

"The Moral Law," starring Gladys Brockwell, to be released February 10, shows the star in a double role. The two characters are half-sisters of very different dispositions. One is a scheming, self-centered girl, dominated by her vicious and debased mother, and the other of a beautiful young woman characterized by noble-mindedness. Most of the scenes are laid in South America. The picture is being made under the direction of Bertram Bracken.

Jewel Carmen's second picture as a star will be entitled, "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," and will be released February 17. The story is that of a girl who drifts into a life of lawlessness and is reformed through the influence of a man on whom she had brought trouble in her own efforts to escape arrest. Scenes in Alaskan prospecting camps furnish the background for the story which throughout has the atmosphere of the west. C. M. Franklin is directing the production.

The February 24 release will be of a Tom Mix picture, "Six-Shooter Andy," which is being made under the direction of S. A. Franklin. The cast, which is reported to be an exceptionally strong one, includes Enid Markey, Georgie Stone, Buddy Messenger, Lewis Sargent, Virginia Lee Corbin, Violet Radcliffe, Marie Messinger, Bert Woodruff, Sam Degrass, Charles Stevens, Patrick Crysman, Robert Fleming and others.

"To the Sick All Are Sick"—Selznick

PRODUCER HITS AT CARL LAEMMLE'S RECENT UTTERANCES

BY LOUIS J. SELZNICK

THE calamity howlers are loose again. Certain producers who kept telling us not long ago that moving pictures were in their infancy, now say that they are on their deathbed. Is the disease infantile paralysis or old age? Do these gentlemen know that to the sick all men are sick, to the insane all men are crazy, to the dying man the world is coming to an end?

Carl Laemmle confesses that Universal has "close to a million dollars" tied up in short pictures that they can sell only at a loss. Therefore, he wails, the picture business faces disaster. Everyone, producers, distributors and exhibitors, "will become ripe for the receiver." The only salvation he can see is for some one to pay him more for his dead stock pictures than he ever asked for them.

Ridicules Laemmle Wail

Mr. Laemmle doesn't seem to figure that brains are of much use in his business. He says that even after they found eighteen months ago that they could not sell his kind of pictures at a profit they went on and made a million dollars worth more. If he were in the clothing business and found there was no money in a certain style, would he turn out a million dollars worth more of the same style, and tell the retailer the only thing to do was raise the price on them? Not if he wanted to keep out of Bloomingdale. Yet this is what he did in the picture business!

Mr. Laemmle's cure for the condition he himself has created is higher admission prices. But the truth is that Mr. Laemmle has proved that he doesn't mean what he says about admission prices. Together he and I leased the Broadway Theater, charging 25 cents to $1.00 admission. He insisted upon reducing the price to 15 cents, so I sold him my interest and let him do it. Mr. Laemmle, the exhibitor, apparently does not take much stock in the theories of Mr. Laemmle, the producer. I always have to laugh when I see a man quarreling with himself.

Disagrees With Goldfish

Samuel Goldfish is also quarreling with himself. He recently said the film business would go to the dogs if producers didn't stop paying big salaries to stars. And yet he has paid some of the highest salaries in the history of the industry. Is this an admission that he buncoed himself? If not, what is it?

I violate no confidence when I tell Mr. Laemmle that there are no Fairbanks, Clara Kimball Young, Pickford or Talmadge pictures stored on shelves waiting for the business to regain its health. And everyone who has common business brains knows that the high salaries for stars will cease the minute the public ceases to pay those salaries at the box office. We have stars because the public wants them!

Industry is Ailing

The industry is not in its infancy. Neither is it on its deathbed. But it is afflicted with several minor ailments.

Russel Heads Mutual Offerings

American Film Company Actor in Star Production "In Bad" Will Be Seen January 21

WILLIAM RUSSELL whose feats of valor extraordinary have won him wide popularity with motion picture audiences, is scheduled to appear in another knocker-out in his next American production which is released by Mutual January 21, under the title of "In Bad."

This picture, which is typically "Russelistic," was produced under the direction of Edward Sloman, who showed that he understands the Russell temperament thoroughly in such features as the uniquely original "New York Luck," "Snap Judgment" and "The Sea Master."

The action throughout "In Bad" is speedy, the plot develops situations that give Russell opportunity to expose a brand of comedy distinctly his own, and subtle touches which his admirers did not suspect were in his repertoire. Wholesome comedy, the humor arising from ludicrous situations, in which the chief actor is entirely oblivious of the droll complications which he causes, should make this the most popular of the productions in which "Big Bill" has appeared.

In the cast is the captivating Francelia Billington, who has appeared opposite Russell in all American-Mutual productions, "Bull" Montana. an ex-pugilist and wrestler of note, and Carl Stockdale.

"Their Little Kid" is the title of the Strand comedy, featuring Billie Rhodes, scheduled for release January 22. It is a splightly little farce built around the dilemma of a young couple who mistake the meaning of rich uncle's message that he's anxious to see the "kid," and make frantic efforts to borrow a baby before he arrives. They finally kidnap one and are almost pinched, when uncle comes to the rescue, explaining that he meant the wife.

The Weekly of January 21 will keep in touch with significant topics of the day and maintain its established high standard.

William Russell in one of the tense scenes from "In Bad," a Mutual-American production.

One of the worst of these is the presence in its midst of men who blame general conditions for their own stupidity. If a soldier deliberately stands in full view of the enemy and is shot, it does not mean the whole army is defeated.

When the war tax was imposed I said it was a good thing, as it would force out of business the producers of bad pictures. I do not know what corpses we are about to find scattered along the roadside, but I do know that there will be few mourners.

Spend Ten Days on Wild Island

William Duncan, star and director of the Vitagraph serial "Vengeance—and the Woman," celebrated the holidays by retaking scenes by day for two later episodes of the serial and cutting scenes by night. Notwithstanding the cold weather and the fact the company lived in tents, many beautiful scenes were taken during a sojourn of ten days at Santa Cruz Islands, off southern California. While there, Carol Holloway and Mr. Duncan jumped from a fifty-foot cliff on a horse's back into the sea. This thrill is but one of the many which appear in the tenth episode.

Service Star Wearers Are Favored

"The girl I left behind" is being favored above all other young women at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Ince has instructed Tom Walsh, who has charge of engaging the extra players that are required for the big scenes in the Paramount and Artcraft photoplays in which are starred Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett and William S. Hart, to give preference to the wives and daughters of the soldier and sailor boys, and a young woman has slight chance to get employment at the Ince studios if she is not very closely related to a wearer of khaki, or the blue of the navy.

A Statement

That no advertising or publicity announcement purporting to be endorsements by them of any state right features is to be considerad authentic unless their signatures are attached to these comments, was stated last week by Hiram Abrams and Walter E. Greene. Testimonials regarding photoplays other than Paramount or Artcraft Pictures without this reproduction of their signatures are not to be accepted as emanating from the offices of Messrs. Greene and Abrams with their consent and knowledge.

Cheating the Public" is a Fox 1918 cenimelodrama with an all star cast.

Today's Problems Bases of Film

William Fox Production, "Cheating the Public," Abounds in Up to the Minute Situations

PROBLEMS of the hour—food profiteering, child labor, the relation of employer and employee—are the bases of a new production of a strongly melodramatic type which has just been completed by William Fox and which will be released shortly under the title "Cheating the Public."

The production is heralded as a powerful story of business brutality and ruthlessness and is declared to be rich in dramatic contrasts of poverty and plenty and human greed and unselfishness.

The story itself is described as a masterpiece of dramatic construction. It tells of a poor factory girl's struggle for existence as the provider for her poor invalid mother and a family of children; of her discharge because of protecting a mistreated crippled child who was unlawfully employed; of a strike in the food plant due to a decrease in employees' wages co-incidental with arbitrary increases by the same employer in the prices of food; of the girl's unfortunate attempt to reason with the grasping employer; of his assault upon her; of the firing of shots and his death; of the girl's conviction of murder after a trial replete in surprises and suspense; of the real murderer's unexpected and boastful confession to the murdered man's son; of the automobile race to reach the governor on his train and then to reach the prison in time to save the girl from the electric chair and, finally, of changed conditions in the factory and in the girl's life which lead to the altar.

The wealth of contrasts, both in human conditions and human conduct and the virtual downpour of stirring heart interest scenes—literally one thriller after another—make the production, it is claimed, a most unusual offering. The subjects dealt with all are matters of public interest today—subjects growing out of the inhumanity of the industrial side of the war, and emphasizing most graphically the fact that not all of the enemies of the people are gun-bearing soldiers under the command of the German Kaiser.

Deserts Comedy for Drama

Claire Anderson, well-known ingenue with the Triangle-Keystone comedy forces, has deserted slap-stick for the drama and is now cast with Triangle director E. Mason Hopper in "The Answer," a gripping screen drama written by E. Magnus Ingleton, which will be released as the seven-reel special feature on the February program.

With the consolidation of the Triangle and Triangle-Keystone playing forces at the Culver City, it is probable that the casting directors at the dramatic end of the lot will take advantage of the many new types made available by the removal of Keystone from Hollywood. Miss Anderson is the first of the comedy stars to be drafted for the regular program features.

Bluebirds Three Months Ahead

Two Appearances Are Arranged for Nearly Every Star Starting with Carmel Meyers

DEFINITE arrangements for the Bluebird program carry the schedule into the middle of April and provide two appearances for nearly every star in Bluebird's constellation within that period. Carmel Myers, in "The Wife He Bought," with Kenneth Harlan featured as her leading man, Feb. 4, and Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, in "Hungry Eyes," Feb. 11, have already been referred to in full detail and the new announcements are listed in the ensuing paragraphs.

Mae Murray will make her third appearance as a Bluebird star, week starting Feb. 18, offering H. Sheridan Bickers' story, "The Eternal Columbine," prepared for the screen and directed by Robert Leonard. Miss Murray is again scheduled for March 25, to be seen in Mr. Leonard's production of "The Eleventh Commandment," a story by F. McGrew Willis.

"Breeze Bolton Blows In," starring Franklyn Farnum, will be the Bluebird for Feb. 25, with Juanita Hansen and Fred Montague featured in the support. Joseph F. Poland furnished the story and Joseph De Grasse, who has lately directed all of Mr. Farnum's features, made the production. Charles A. Kenyon, the author of "Kindling," furnished the scenario.

Features starring Carmel Myers will be offered March 4 and April 8, captions being "The Green Seal" and "Bona." The first named attraction resulted from Charles Edmund Walk's story and will introduce Ashton Dearholt as Miss Myers' leading man. "Bona" will have Kenneth Harlan playing opposite the star with Rex Roselli, Harry Mann, E. A. Warren and Katherine Kirkwood in support. Harvey Gates furnished the story and scenario. Both of these attractions were produced by Stuart Paton, who has abandoned serials at Universal City to direct Miss Myers.

Two features presenting Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford will be forthcoming on March 4 and April 15, both following the type of scenic "Westerns" that have made these stars destinctive among Bluebirders. Rupert Julian directed "The Highest Card" and plays an essential role in Elliott J. Clawson's story. "The Heart of the Desert" will be credited to Mr. Salisbury and Miss Clifford's new director, Wilfred Lucas, who created the April 15 Bluebird from a story by Honore Willsie, editor of the Delineator.

Dorothy Phillips will present "Her Fling" as the feature for March 28, with William Stowell featured as her leading man. Ida May Park prepared her own scenario and directed Miss Phillips in Katherine Leiser Robbins' magazine story. Juanita Hansen, George Chesebro, Joseph Girard, Edward Cecil, Claire Du Brey and Sallie Starr will have supporting roles.

Gets New York Atmosphere

A number of familiar New York landmarks will appear in the screen version of "The House of Glass," the new Select production now being filmed by Clara Kimball Young and her own company. Jefferson Market and the Penn station, Blackwell's Island and the Tombs all figure prominently in the action of the play and several scenes have been shot at each location.

Chooses Sales Promotion Manager

Vitagraph Obtains Services of J. Lawton Kendrick to Succeed Gordon Laurence Who Has Gone to War

J. LAWTON KENDRICK has been appointed sales promotion manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization to succeed Gordon Laurence, now in training for the Naval Reserve Flying Corps.

Mr. Kendrick has a wide acquaintance in theatrical, newspaper and business circles. He was formerly sales manager for the Stewart-Hartshorn Company, roller shade manufacturers, but for several years has devoted his attention to editing and publishing two trade journals of which he is proprietor. These are the American Carpet and Upholstery Journal and the Tobacco World, authorities in their particular fields.

Since his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania, Mr. Kendrick has traveled several times around the world and has been a careful student of trade conditions and sales methods. He has acted as advisor on numerous big sales campaigns for national advertisers, has made special industrial surveys for the government and has appeared before Congress in connection with various trade subjects. He also has addressed many leading trade bodies on subjects of vital interest to them. In addition, Mr. Kendrick is regarded as one of the greatest rug experts in the United States and has been a regular visitor to the rug marts of the near east.

Mr. Kendrick is a recognized writer on trade topics and has been a contributor to the North American Review, the Scientific American and others.

As part of his work as sales promotion manager, Mr. Kendrick will edit "The Vitagraph Family," a weekly house publication devoted to Vitagraph efficiency and service.

Mary Miles Minter, star of the American-Mutual pictures, "Beauty and the Rogue."

Title "Beauty and the Rogue" Chosen

"Beauty and the Rogue" has been selected as the title for Mary Miles Minter's forthcoming Mutual-American feature release, a five-reel production scheduled for January 28.

"Beauty and the Rogue" was produced under the working titles of "Bobby" and "Mlle. Tiptoe." It was directed by Henry King, who was responsible for the series of successful Gail Kane productions from the American studios and who directed Miss Minter in "The Mate of the Sally Ann," her last release.

Peggy Hyland, the well known screen star, whose services were recently acquired by William Fox, will soon begin work on a new picture.

Triangle Directors Keep Busy

Production at Culver City Studios Goes Forward at Rapid Pace with Variety of Attractions Being Made

ACCOMPANIED by some of the huskiest members of the Triangle playing forces, Director Raymond Wells and company are at Colton, Cal., for a week doing the opening scenes of a coming Triangle offering, "The Hard Rock Breed," a screen adaptation of Frederic Bechdolt's magazine story of the same title. Four other drama companies are in various stages of production at the Culver City studios and four directors, Cliff Smith, Walter Edwards, Jack Dillon and Jack Conway are waiting for new vehicles. All four of these directors will receive new stories within a week.

Director Wells' new story deals with the life of those sturdy men who spent their time burrowing into the bowels of the earth for hard rock, the foundation of civilization. J. Barney Sherry and Jack Curtis are two typical hard rock men in this story. Both begin life as bosses in the quarry, and Sherry rises to head of the company, while Curtis, through drink, remains where he started. Then Jack Livingston, as the son of the successful Sherry, comes to the rock quarries, where his father has sent him to make a man of himself. Here he meets Margery Wilson as the daughter of Curtis, and there is a pretty romance in which Margery helps Livingston to make good. Others in the cast are Lee Phelps, Aaron Edwards, George Chase, Louis Durham, Thornton Edwards and Marion Skinner.

Cliff Smith, director of Triangle western thrillers, in which Roy Stewart, cowboy star, plays the leads, has just finished his latest picture, "Keith of the Border," for February release. Smith and his company of cowboys spent the last day of the old year at the ranch studio, Hartville, with an impromptu rodeo in which the punchers tried out the bucking horses in preparation for the next western subject of the Triangle, which calls for some outlaw bronco riding.

The working title of Director Smith's new picture, which will be cast in a few days, is "Boss of the Lazy Y," a screen adaptation of Charles Alden Seltzer's novel by the same name.

Director E. Mason Hopper is well under way on his latest Triangle story, "The Answer," featuring Alma Rubens and including in the supporting cast Joe King, Francis McDonald, Jean Hersholt and Claire Anderson, the last-named a well-known Keystone ingenue.

An entire glass stage was covered by a spacious hotel set at the Triangle studios this week and was used for the opening scenes in Director Gilbert P. Hamilton's latest Triangle picture, featuring Belle Bennett. The working title of this picture is "A Soul in Trust," a story of Southern society life. Supporting Miss Bennett in this picture are Darrel Foss, J. Barney Sherry, Lillian West, Grover Franke, Wilbur Higbee and W. A. Jeffries.

The famous Clara Morris wardrobe, one of the treasures of the Triangle Culver City costume department, is being used in the filming of "The Sea Panther," a story of swashbuckling pirates in which William Desmond is seen in the title role.

Roy Stewart usually appears in cowboy togs in Triangle productions.

Clara Kimball Young in Auto Smash

Clara Kimball Young, the well-known Select Pictures star, had a narrow escape from death last week when the automobile in which she was riding, collided with a street car at Ninetieth street and Broadway, New York.

Miss Young was trying out a new machine which she had just purchased, and was on her way to the studio in New Rochelle. As the chaffeur turned into Broadway at Ninetieth street, the tires struck a glassy surface of ice and skidded sharply, throwing the back wheels of the automobile on to the tracks directly in front of an oncoming car.

In the collision that followed, the street car tore a great hole in the back of the machine, barely missing Miss Young. The actress was showered with falling glass and splinters, but she escaped without a scratch. This is the second machine that Miss Young has had damaged within the week. The first accident occured at New Rochelle when her limousine which was being hauled up an improvised runway into the studio broke from its moorings and plunged down into the yard, breaking its crank-shaft and smashing its windshield.

Earle Williams Busy on New Play

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond, his leading woman, are now in the midst of their first western production, an adaptation from one of the O. Henry stories in the "Cabbages and Kings" group. They began work on January 2nd, under the direction of Tom Mills and already are well advanced on the production, which probably will be released on the March program of Vitagraph.

Lee Children Go to Florida

Members of the company headed by Jane and Katherine Lee, working for several weeks on a new production, left the New Jersey studios last week for Jacksonville, Florida, where additional scenes are being taken. Although advance arrangements had been made for hotel accommodations the New Yorkers were informed on their arrival that there were no rooms available and in consequence the whole company spent the night in the hotel lobby.

Jane and Katherine Lee and their mother left Jacksonville a day or two later for Philadelphia, where they were billed for fifteen or twenty personal appearances during a Fox "Baby Grand" special celebration.

Launches Novel Scenario Plan

Paralta Opens Eastern Scenario Office with Harry Chandlee in Charge of Department Devoted to Screen Stories

IT was with the idea of branching out along new lines that Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., established the eastern scenario department of that organization at the company's New York offices.

Mr. Anderson knowing the dearth of good picture material which exists at present, understood the hopelessness of trying to get a sufficient number of stories up to the Paralta standard through the usual channels—when many companies are fighting over such material as may be available. Paralta maintains a producing scenario department at its Western studios—and many of its stories are written by staff authors—but to assure enough material with proper variety of subject and treatment, it is Mr. Anderson's intention to purchase a large number of stories from outside authors.

Every producing organization has experienced the disappointment which results when a good story is received—but which, when considered from all angles proves to be not quite adaptable to the conditions existing in that particular company. It may be that the star part carries with it a requirement which none of the company's stars can meet; or that the locale makes the picture impossible of production. Again, it may be that a story written by one not familiar with picture conditions, is excellent—but impracticable for some reason. Or there may be a hopelessly amatuerish story containing the basis of what would be a wonderful picture if rewritten by an experienced man.

It was with the idea of taking advantage of these near-opportunities to acquire good stories, that Mr. Anderson placed Harry Chandlee in charge of the eastern scenario department of Paralta Plays, with instructions to decline no story until certain that it contained nothing of value as picture material for Paralta, giving him a free hand in management of the department otherwise.

Mr. Chandlee has associated with him a force of persons experienced in the scenario end of the industry—notably Helen Christene Hoerle and Elizabeth Peterson—both of whose screen stories are well known. When a story is received which, with a few changes, would prove available, an outline of the changes is worked out and the author is then called into conferences—whenever possible—the changes being discussed with him and the form of the revised story being decided upon, with the result that a story which might otherwise be declined, is made often available. In addition, the author becomes familiar with Paralta requirements, and can be guided in his future work for the company. An added advantage lies in the fact that the story, when finally sent to the Los Angeles studios, is worked out from a picture standpoint, and thus the making of the continuity is greatly facilitated.

Harry Chandlee, manager of Paralta's Eastern scenario department

Already, the eastern department has increased the available material something over one hundred per cent.

Delve into History for Pirate Lore

The research department at the Triangle Culver City studio is busy poring over the life and infamous deeds of the renowned Captain Kidd and other well-known pirates, in quest of the "atmosphere" needed for a massive Triangle production, "The Sea Panther," in which an all-star cast has started work under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron.

Much of the thrilling action takes place about 1680 and Count d'Elba, the director in charge, has looked to Captain Kidd's history for much of the necessary material, as it was in that period that the king of pirates started his romantic career. A large collection of rare and highly colored prints have been obtained by the Triangle wardrobe department as models from which to fashion the costumes for this thrilling pirate play.

Go to Desert for Two Weeks

William Wolbert, Vitagraph director, and his company, of which Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are featured players, will shortly pass two weeks in the Mojave desert photographing scenes for "The Home Trail," a strong drama of the west to be released as a Blue Ribbon Feature. The players will travel from the Vitagraph Hollywood studio to Ransberg, California, one time gold center, in automobiles and thence in prairie schooners to a spot chosen for its wildness and which Director Wolbert has long had in mind for just such scenes as he will film for this story.

The players will live two weeks in tent-wagons. They are looking forward with pleasure to this experience in near pioneering.

Mutual Plans Special Features

Separate Organization Working on Coast Will Make Big Productions to Meet New Market Needs

NEGOTIATIONS preliminary to the production of a number of big special feature pictures are being conducted in New York by Samuel S. Hutchinson and John R. Freuler.

According to present plans it is said that the specials will be made by a separate organization working on the West Coast with the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., as headquarters. It is to be assumed that these specials will be made available to exhibitors through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, although no official announcements to that effect have been made.

"We have found certain market tendencies will assure us that to a considerable proportion of theaters a series of big special productions will have a particular value in the coming year," said Mr. Freuler. "There are basic reasons for this trend, representing an evolution in the business of presenting pictures. This will not affect our handling of star productions featuring 'big stars only,' including the Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, William Russell, Edna Goodrich, the Charles Frohman plays and others.

"We are starting amply in advance to insure careful preparation for every aspect of these pictures. I am not just now in a position to make any announcements relating to the stars and casts of these specials, but I can say most assuredly that these pictures will, unlike those of today, present both a real star and a real story."

Need Standardized Rental Prices

PRODUCER POINTS NECESSITY OF GIVING EXHIBITORS A SQUARE DEAL

BY HERBERT BRENON

BEYOND a doubt rental prices must be standardized. Unless some agreement is reached whereby the exhibitor is not obliged to pay more than the true value of a picture, disaster will come upon the industry.

As it is, dissatisfaction is rife amongst exhibitors.

I realize more fully today, and I think every manufacturer should realize it now if he hasn't before, that unless the exhibitor gets a square deal the entire motion picture industry must collapse. Huge intermediate profits must cease.

Exhibitor Knows Public

The time has come when the manufacturer must come in contact directly with the exhibitor. After all, it is the exhibitor who reflects the real pulse of the public. His bank book contains the true statement of facts as they really are. Words mean nothing to him. If the business at the box office is slow, he knows the reason, and it is useless to try and disguise the true state of affairs to him.

During the coming year a marked difference will be seen in the relations between the producer and exhibitor.

The man who makes the picture and the man who buys it for the public will come closer together.

The time has come when exhibitors will cease to pay the same price for a short inferior production what they are compelled to pay for a Fairbanks picture. Pictures henceforward will have to stand on their own merits, and not depend on a few of the higher type pictures to boost their sale for them.

An exhibitor wrote to me not long ago complaining bitterly of the prices that are now asked for pictures.

"A certain concern," he says, "last fall attempted to raise their rentals from $270.00 to $600.00 a week, upon which basis it was an easy matter to figure a loss before we started, even though we had advanced our admission prices and played to the same number of people under the new price as under the old. We, therefore, refused to sign the new contracts.

Riches House Survives

"Now then, here comes along the independent producer and smaller distributors. They know, of course, that we must have goods of a certain standard, and instead of co-operating and selling their goods at a price at which we can make a profit, and be a real competitor of the other program, they take advantage of a situation to get all the money they can get, regardless of whether the house can stand it or cannot stand it.

"The manufacturers have brought about a condition locally, that is going to mean simply a survival of the house that has the most money to lose, and it will be simply a question as to what house can hold out the longer."

The comment of this exhibitor came unsolicited. They are the staightforward statements from a man who speaks from experience, a man who knows. His remarks speak for themselves.

The sooner the man who makes the picture and the exhibitor come to a direct understanding, the sooner will these disastrous conditions cease to exist.

Co-operation of producer and exhibitor will mean the standardization of rental prices.

Comedy and Thrills in World Picture

An entirely unusual quantity of comedy contrasts with the numerous exciting moments of "His Royal Highness," the next Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley photoplay for World-Pictures Brady-Made, which is to be published next month.

The hero is the star football player of his college, a light hearted, reckless young fellow whose thoughtless manner of plunging into every adventure that presents itself keeps him in hot water most of the time. His chum at the university is a studious young foreigner who is summoned to Paris by cable and invites his friend to go along as his guest.

In Paris the two start to explore the night life and incidentally try to rescue the girl of the head Apache, precipitating one of the most vehement upstairs-and-down battles ever screened.

Officers Visit Studios of Paralta

Capt. Peter B. Kyne, accompanied by Capts. T. C. Gregory and Robert L. Bently, all of the 144th Regiment of Field Artillery, were visitors at the Paralta Studios in Los Angeles last week. They came in behalf of General Lyon to invite Miss Bessie Barriscale to attend a military masque ball to be given at the Coronado Hotel in San Diego. Captain Kyne is a well known fiction writer and playwright. He is the author of "A Man's Man," in which J. Warren Kerrigan recently made his debut as a Paralta star. After calling on Miss Barriscale, Capt. Kyne was shown around the studios by Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, and J. Warren Kerrigan.

Big Alaska Feature in the Making

A. I. Smith in Chicago to Put Finishing Touches On New Feature in Which Lottie Kruse Appears

A. I. SMITH, manager of Smith Films, is in Chicago at the Rothacker laboratory-studio putting the finishing touches on the continuity and general assembling of his new Alaska feature which will soon be presented to the public. Mr. Smith produced the picture entitled "Alaska Wonders in Motion" which made a big hit when released by the Educational Films Corporation of New York City.

Mr. Smith promises much for his new production which is a photoplay of unusual scenic value and general interest inasmuch as it not only features the natural beauties of Alaska scenery, but gives the public a glance at the real character known as the "Sourdough."

On May 1, 1917, Miss Lottie Kruse, formerly of the Fine Arts Company, was selected by Mr. Smith to appear in the feature role and Henry Bolton, formerly of the Balboa Company, was chosen as the masculine lead. After securing some of the scenes in and around Pasadena, Cal., the party left for Seattle from which point they took passage aboard the Steamship Alaska bound for Anchorage. While en route many scenes were staged aboard the ship.

The company made its first stop at Cordova where they went up the Copper River to Miles and Chiles Glaciers, the largest glaciers in the world, both of which were featured in Rex Beach's novel "The Iron Trail."

Eight days were spent in this scenic wilderness and many wonderful views of Chiles Glacier were obtained showing the ice continually falling its full height, over four hundred feet, into the Copper River. It was here that Miss Kruse made her famous dip into the icy water and narrowly avoided a serious accident, for the boat, from which she was thrown, a few minutes later was demolished by tons of falling ice.

One of the features of the new Smith picture is a real northern dance hall scene in which an exciting fight was staged between Mr. Bolton and the notorious Young Viking. Three hundred fifty true northern characters were selected to appear in this scene, many of them old-time gamblers and famous gun men who crossed the Chilcoot Pass during the gold rush in '98.

This new feature is in six reels and as soon as the finishing touches on the sample print have been made by Mr. Smith, it is to be brought on to New York for a special trade showing that will be given previous to offering to the feature buyers.

Miss Lottie Kruse formerly appeared in such productions as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "The Half Breed," "The Planter" and other pictures of big calibre.

Adds to Production Staff

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces the engagement of Frank Bangs, well known theatrical photographer as consulting photographic expert, and of Henry Houry, of Paris, as technical advisor for the company's eastern studio. These two appointments, Mr. Smith declares, are part of his recently outlined plans for the expansion of Vitagraph in all branches of the production department.

Prisoners Like Mae Marsh Film

The success of Mae Marsh and "The Cinderella Man" with holiday audiences—permeated as the screen play is with the Christmas spirit—has been as nothing compared with the reception won by star and story before America's most remarkable audience, the members of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing Prison. The humor, the pathos, the charm and the sympathy, which Director Tucker has drawn from Edward Childs Carpenter's play found a phenomenal response in the hearts of the men who have linked their best impulses in Sing Sing's Welfare League.

William Farnum Begins New Picture

"Rough and Ready" Is Tentative Title of De Luxe Production Under Way at the William Fox Studios

WILLIAM FOX announces for forthcoming release a new de luxe production of unusual dramatic strength and intensity, in which the distinguished actor, William Farnum, is starred, and on which the actual photographic work was begun a few days since. The picture bears the tentative title of "Rough and Ready," and is being made under the supervision of Richard Stanton, whose directorial abilities, says a statement from Mr. Fox, assure the photodrama of a splendid mounting.

"Much time has been devoted by Mr. Stanton and his staff in the preparatory work for this new Standard Picture," says Mr. Fox, "and the supporting company is of exceptional quality. The names of the members will be made public during the week. The 'script is by Mr. Stanton and Ed. Sedgwick from an original story of which they are the joint authors.

"The combination and co-operation of William Farnum and Richard Stanton on a film of precisely the kind for which Mr. Farnum is best known and in which he shines so brightly, insures picture-goers of an extraordinary feature. Our present intentions are to issue this subject late in February.

Spoor Gets National Publicity

Producer of Mary MacLane Feature Sends Large Volume of Boosting Material All Over Country

REALIZING the power of publicity on such a national character as Mary MacLane, George K. Spoor is scheduling an unusual quota of advertising and publicity matter to precede and accompany her picture, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," to be released through the Kleine system late in January.

The cumulative effect of the publicity already given the forthcoming screenic appearance of the famous authoress and writer of "I, Mary MacLane," Mr. Spoor believes, has created a nation-wide curiosity about the woman—one that will go far toward lining up the public at box office windows.

Mr. Spoor's publicity department has just completed a special news matter sheet, distinct from the customary four page slip sheet that goes with all Mr. Spoor's Ultra features. This special sheet carries impromptu poses of the authoress as she really is.

It gives, in amusing detail, the recipe for the famous "Cold Boiled Potato Highball," a concoction as startling as it is unique. A photograph accompanies this story, showing Miss MacLane mixing the drink.

This special sheet is to be sent out broadcast to newspapers and magazines, which received previous stories at various intervals, together with cuts and mats.

Miss MacLane was given a special showing of her picture in the studio projection room last week and expressed herself as pleased and even surprised at the outcome of her efforts before the camera. She made the trip from New York especially to see the picture.

Mr. Spoor's "Ruggles of Red Gap," featuring Taylor Holmes, is now in the cutting room. Work is being finished on the subtitling which will meet, if not excel, in artistry the quality of previous Ultra Features. Bill board and poster advertising on this picturization of Harry Leon Wilson's Saturday Evening Post story is now being designed.

Urge Each City to Control Its Films

MUNICIPALITIES LEAGUE SPEAKERS FROWN ON STATE CENSOR

THE subject of the regulation of commercial amusements, particularly of motion pictures was discussed at the third annual convention of the New Jersey State League of Municipalities, held on Friday, January 4, at Trenton. The league has a membership of about one hundred and ninety cities, towns, boroughs and townships. The general opinion of those joining in the discussion was in favor of home rule.

The municipal officials expressed themselves in favor of the Sunday opening of motion picture houses for the great mass of the people. There was no suggestion of criticism of the classes of pictures which were shown generally. The discussion brought out the fact that the representatives believed that motion picture performances were designed for adults and that children should be supplied with entertainments adapted to their needs.

Cocks Delivers Address

The chief address was made by Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review. Among other things, he said:

"Every mayor, police commissioner, and commissioner of public welfare realizes that the regulation of commercial amusements is a difficult one. It is one of the big human problems which he is forced to face in a town of any size. He finds people of all ages, of several races, of both sexes, and of many degrees of education or refinement who are seeking in their own way to play when the work of the day is done. Some of the more fortunate are able to furnish their own amusements but the great majority find their way out into the streets and there pay for their pleasure.

"The motion picture has become the great amusement for all the people in the municipalities of New Jersey. It has established its own basis of public demand and like the theaters it is offered to the people with the adult population in mind.

Parents are to Blame

"Its appeal to children is directly the result either of the indifference of parents or their willingness to allow their children to see thrilling and attractive stories because they are cheap. In most of our considerations of the regulation of motion pictures, we have utterly failed to recognize that the parents have a primary responsibility.

"In dealing with this amusement for which the people pay, every responsible official has discovered that he is face to face with an intricate question of morals. It is unfair to insist that he listen to the opinions of the few. He simply must find out the attitude of the whole public and insist that only those things are excluded which offend against public morals rather than against private taste. It is the attempt to define and enforce this public opinion which makes the task of the police commissioner, the licensing authority, or the mayor such a difficult and thankless one.

Producers are Students

"It must be remembered that the business man who offers the films for daily entertainments is a shrewd student of human nature and tries with all the energy he has to furnish the people with what they really want. He cannot be held entirely accountable when the people he gathers from the four corners of the town express their appreciation of his offerings in a substantial manner at the box office.

"The regulation of audiences is a difficult one. New Jersey has a law prohibiting the admission of unaccompanied children under sixteen, but it is impossible to enforce this ruling. The only way this source of criticism of the motion picture as a commercial entertainment can be met is by providing satisfactory substitutes for the children. Even though elaborate processes of education of the parents were carried on, they would still believe that the motion picture theater is a fairly satisfactory place for their children to attend. When once a wise and thoroughly attractive entertainment is furnished for the children of the common people, then and only then will this problem be satisfactorily solved.

Make Audience Behave

"The conduct of the audience can be further regulated by proper lighting of the auditorium. Loitering about the entrances can be handled satisfactorily by the police. A further method which is beyond the scope of official regulation is by the development of a public sentiment in favor of family nights, when all members of the families of the town will be sure to see pictures which are thoroughly amusing and entertaining.

"It is an impossible plan to attempt the regulation of films on a state-wide basis. The people to be entertained are so diverse that it is inevitable that even sincere state boards shall be forced to make their judgments on pictures sufficiently liberal to satisfy the largest cities of the state."

Soldiers Help Make Picture

Officers and Men of United States Army Appear with Norma Talmadge in "By Right of Purchase"

MORE than 100 men in Uncle Sam's fighting uniform who are soon to join the American expeditionary force in France, will be seen in Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select production, "By Right of Purchase," in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck. The picture calls for the reproduction of a scene in Hero-land, the great patriotic bazaar staged recently in the Grand Central Palace, and the soldiers and sailors of various ranks who took part in it were asked to appear in Miss Talmadge's picturization of the spectacle. Their response was generous and aided greatly in the successful filming of the scene.

With the lights turned on the gaily decorated booths which formed the background for the scene, the studio was bright with khaki, navy blue and gold braid, standing out against the bright evening dresses of the "extra girls" and the white uniforms of the Red Cross nurses. Ensign Robert F. Chapman of the Eastern division recruiting station was in charge of a number of officers of the naval reserve who were reinforced by several members of the naval reserve flying corps, and privates and officers of the army were also on hand in large numbers. As a background for this military throng, the property man provided a suitable setting of Bliss torpedo shells, Mitchell-Armstrong cannons and Gatling guns. More than three hundred people took part in the scene.

In "By Right of Purchase" Miss Talmadge will again be supported by Eugene O'Brien as leading man. Mr. O'Brien has appeared with the star in a number of her more recent successes, such as "Poppy," "The Moth" and "Ghosts of Yesterday," and heads a notable cast in which are the names of Ida Darling, William Courtleigh, Jr., Charles Wellsley and Florence B. Billings. The picture is being directed by Charles Miller, and when completed will be distributed by Select.

Offers Nature Studies

The distribution of the Finley Nature Series of fish, bird and wild animal nature studies, through Universal exchanges, began Jan. 14 with "Wild Birds and Animals at Home." These pictures will be carried in one reel form whenever the length will permit, and in other instances the reel will be split with selected scenic. William L. Finley, supervisor of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission, has been three years assembling these motion pictures of wild animal life.

Comedy Troupes Seek New Record

Triangle-Keystone Funmakers Attack Year's Work with Renewed Vigor After Holidays—Five Directors Busy

WITH three new comedies under way and two undergoing their finishing touches the Triangle-Keystone funmakers opened the new year with a rush.

Albert Glassmire, supervisor of comedy direction, has a long list of subjects ready to be put on in film form. To meet the big demand which will be made upon the Triangle-Keystone force within the next twelve months the various companies have been augmented by the acquisition of several well-known performers.

Director Charles Avery, who completed "A Janitor's Fall" last week, is already busy on a new offering called "A Good Elk." It is replete with novel situations and the action never falls below the whirlwind pace. In the cast are Joseph Belmont, Ruth Langston, Eugene Corey, Myrtle Reeves, Arthur Moon, Frank Bonn and Marion Torrey.

Director Harry Edwards has begun work on "A Rough Diamond," and has made rapid progress on the filming of some lavish interior sets. Featured in the big cast will be Paddy McGuire and Chris Richards.

Rae Godfrey, one of the Triangle-Keystone beauties of former days, is again back with Triangle comedy companies and is also working at Culver City under the direction of Edwards in "A Rough Diamond."

Director William Beaudine has been engaged for several days with an all-star cast assisted by a big troupe of extras in picturing exteriors for "Slinging It."

Director Reggie Morris' latest work "Did She Do Wrong," has an unusual novel twist to it and is said to be a "scream" from start to finish. Harry Gribbon, Myrtle Lind, Frank Bonn and Milburn Moranti were among the well-known players in the cast. All were imbued with the happy holiday spirit during the filming, resulting in one of the funniest pictures ever released under the Triangle-Keystone banner.

"Thais"

Mary Garden Stars in Goldwyn's Version of Opera Story. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN elaborate and worthy production has been made of this picturization of Anatole France's story, which introduces Mary Garden, opera star, to the motion picture public. The singer's fame has reached that large portion of the public who have never had an opportunity to hear her in opera and they will be glad of a chance to see her enact a favorite role, even if they may not hear her.

Goldwyn has an artistic picture to offer in "Thais," as well as a star with drawing power and a famed story. The combination is one which should interest all exhibitors in high class theaters. Mary Garden films well. She makes an effective picture in all scenes. The settings of the play are excellent. Fine taste has been exercised in these and in the handling of the story. The photography is brilliant, the tinting very artistic. The whole production has an air of polish and clever workmanship.

Miss Garden's acting, however, is the weak feature of the play. She is evidently camera-conscious and she poses rather than acts. Occasionally there are fine bits of interpretation, but on the whole the character she plays awakens little of the sympathy she should. Hamilton Revelle, opposite, does some of his best work. The supporting cast is good.

This feature offers an opportunity to the exhibitor, especially in the smaller towns, to bring into his theater a class of patrons he has not yet reached. He should interest the "society" element in his city in this picture, sending special invitations to drama leagues, literary societies, and the like. The production is artistic enough to warrant their interest, and they are the people who will be interested in the star. The musical accompaniment should also receive special attention for this occasion.

The story: Thais is a famous beauty of ancient Alexandria, in the days when Christianity was beginning to get a foothold. A wealthy young man, who had once loved Thais, becomes a monk and believes it his duty to convert Thais. He attends one of her parties and points out to her the evil of the life she leads. She is impressed and decides to become a Christian. The monk takes her to a colony of Christian women in the desert. Thais and the young monk are in love with each other. Thais struggles against this love and wins. The monk, however, deciding to give up his faith, comes to her. He reaches the colony as Thais is dying, a martyr. Her strength brings back his faith.

"Evidence"

Triangle Production Featuring J. Barney Sherry. Released January 20th. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

CAN a man of wealth and influence commit murder and get away with it? Based upon this theory, and carrying it along to practical use, Triangle have produced a drama which leaves open to discussion many points as yet unsettled in the minds of many people. We have witnessed even recently an example of similar nature. A prominent society matron is charged with murder; she engages an equally prominent member of the bar as her counsel, and probably individually, the jurymen are of the belief she is guilty but as a whole they pronounce her innocent.

Corbin is grilled by the district attorney.

So it goes in this picture. J. Barney Sherry, as John Corbin, a prominent member of the New York legal circle, commits a crime and through the efforts of his friend he is adjudged demented and escapes the penalty of death. Preaching this doctrine, of prominence having the preference over the law, the picture is one that makes you come away thinking and at the same time provides excellent entertainment. Howard Davis and Pauline Starke lead the supporting cast under the direction of Walter Edwards.

The story: John Corbin discovers a man in his wife's boudoir and following the natural impulse kills his wife, being convinced of her duplicity. He surrenders himself to the police and his friend, Doctor Hyde, with the aid of noted alienists and expert counsel, turn the decision in their favor and the jury brings in a verdict of not guilty on grounds of mental disability. Corbin is sent to a sanitarium for criminally insane, although in full possession of his senses. His son and the doctor's daughter are engaged to be married but when the tragedy occurs the boy believes it best not to marry. The doctor is greatly disconcerted by the boy's decision and exerting all his influence the boy changes his mind. Arrangements are made for the wedding and when the happy day comes the senior Corbin surprises all by making his appearance at the ceremony. Doctor Hyde seems rather upset by this unexpected appearance and Corbin senses something is wrong with his friend. After the wedding is over the two men adjourn to the smoking room and the conversation centers upon events leading up to and immediately following the tragedy.

From his remarks Corbin deduces that the doctor is in possession of more facts than had been brought out at the trial. When the doctor puts the question, "Do you think you would recognize the man who was with your wife?" Corbin replies, "I hope not, for our children's sakes," and leaves the other alone, wondering how much he knows.

"Convict 993"

Mrs. Vernon Castle in Another Exciting Pathe Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AGAIN is Irene Castle a detective, in her latest Pathe mystery picture. But until the last scene, this is not revealed and she seems to be an escaped convict. The surprise finish is well handled, indeed the entire story is well presented. It is interesting, frequently exciting and always enjoyable. It is one of the best, if not the best, in the series.

Mrs. Castle is provided with a suitable and varied role. There are as usual a few "stunts" to perform, in this picture a leap from one building to another, and there are many opportunities for the wearing of pretty costumes, although the star is introduced in convict garb. The sets, too, are fine, and the photography is uniformly good. Harry Benham, J. H. Gilmour, Helene Chadwick and Warner Oland have important roles in the supporting cast. William Parke directed. As a whole, the picture is a worthy one. It is good entertainment for almost any class of patronage.

The story: Roslyn Ayre (Mrs. Castle) is in prison, "Convict 993." She explains to Neva Stokes, another prisoner, the manner in which she and her uncle managed a jewel theft and the mishap through which she was captured. Soon after "Convict 993" escapes.

Later Roslyn is shown living a life of luxury. She becomes interested in Rodney Travers, a young man of good family. Neva works out her sentence, then goes back to her old associates, who are led by Dan Mallory, the brains of the gang. Neva sees Roslyn and threatens to tell the authorities that she is an escaped convict unless Roslyn pays her well. Roslyn agrees, and through her meets Mallory. Mallory makes further demands, asking that Roslyn permit his men to rob the guests at a house-party Roslyn is planning. After an apparent struggle, Roslyn agrees. She tells Mallory that her money was not inherited, as she had said, but that she is living on the fortune the stolen jewels brought her.

Mallory urges Roslyn to aid him in "double-crossing" his own gang and to accompany him to South America after they have robbed the guests. Roslyn agrees and the plan is carried out, except that at the last minute the police rush in, and Roslyn reveals her true role, that of a detective who had tricked the criminal she could capture in no other way. Rodney Travers, who had seen enough to become suspicious, is overjoyed to learn that Roslyn had not been a thief, and he wins her promise to marry him.

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Starring Nell Shipman Released January 14th. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

VITAGRAPH releases this Blue Ribbon feature with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman playing the leading roles of Winnifred Hollywood and Harold Burton. The story deals with the adventures of Winnifred in her search for relief from the stern, quiet, conservative life as modeled by her parents. Containing as it does a little touch of circus life, and with each successive scene gathering momentum and throbbing with human interest, the picture as a whole is pleasing and should prove to be a good attraction. George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester are responsible for the story, which is directed by William Wolbert.

The story: Before announcing his engagement to Winnie Hollywood, Harold Burton arranges to have his parents meet the Hollywoods. Each family pride themselves on a long line of chivalrous ancestors and enforce upon their children's minds the necessity of following in the footsteps of their illustrious predecessors. A dinner party is arranged and Winnie, indifferent to these admonitions, in a moment of freedom, engages in a rather indiscreet dance with Kingsley Royce, a ne'er do well. Later continuing her escapades she rides a circus horse at one of the performances and is severely disciplined by her parents for her actions. The discipline takes its effect and shows a marked change in the girl, and for a while she is content with her lot. But the wild impulse again breaks loose within her, and one night she takes her favorite horse and rides out into the country searching for adventure. Overhearing a plot to rob the bank of which her fiancee, Harold, is an executive, she hastens to a roadhouse to warn him of the plot. There she meets Royce, who is directly responsible for the plot, and unknowingly she tells him of her discovery.

Harold in the meantime has called at the Hollywood home and finds Winnie out. He follows in search of her and arrives at the roadhouse to discover Winnie struggling to escape from Royce, who plans to hold her until the robbery can be effected. Harold attacks Royce and is set upon by a gang who are overpowering him when Colonel Bull, owner of the circus, arrives on the scene with his men of the circus and they proceed to administer a well deserved whipping to Royce and his gang. The bank is warned in time to prevent the robbery and Royce is taken away.

Winnie and Harold return home to find the house in an uproar at learning that they had been out all night. Realizing that further discipline will do no good, Winnie's mother makes the revelation that one of her "illustrious ancestors" was an Italian brigand only to have Mrs. Burton make a similar revelation to the effect that one of Harold's ancestors had been a pugilist and with a cheer for both all present proceed to drink a toast to the future happiness of the younger generation.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me"

Mary MacLane, Writer, Stars in George K. Spoor's Ultra Picture. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE intention of the Essanay Company, when they planned making this picture, was to capitalize the notoriety which the writer, "I, Mary MacLane," had won through her eccentric books. The drawing power of this picture was assured before a foot of film was exposed in its making. It is that drawing power which will induce the average exhibitor to book it. He can make money with it, in almost any theater.

Its power to please patrons is another matter. If the audiences came just to see Mary MacLane, as most of them will come, they will have their wish, for the star appears in almost every scene in the play. The picture lives up to its promise in this respect. It does not precisely live up to its title, however, for in some instances it is a case of "Men to Whom I Made Love."

The production, seven reels in length, adds nothing to the artistic advancement of pictures. It is a series of six disconnected incidents in the woman's life, in which six different men figure. Miss MacLane seems to have been unfortunate in the men who were attracted by her, for none was worth thinking about twice. The picture shows a tendency to become risque, but in general gets no further than the tendency. The best one can say for it is that it is "harmless" and satisfies the curiosity.

Mary MacLane brings her notoriety to the production, which is based on that alone. She does not bring beauty or that charm and distinction which sometimes surrounds celebrities. However, she avoids camera-consciousness and acts well for a first attempt. She is less successful in mastering the art of screen make-up.

The subtitles are taken from Miss MacLane's book. Cigarettes and profanity are emphasized. A close-up of the writer, speaking, with her own version of each affair in a subtitle, introduce each of the six episodes. The six men who figure in the story are the Callow Youth, the Literary Man, the Younger Son, the Prize Fighter, the Bank Clerk and the Husband of Another. Each was a more or less unpleasant experience. But for the many who have read the book, "I, Mary MacLane," the picture will satisfy curiosity as to how the writer looks, dresses and generally conducts herself. And as that is the reason they will come to see it, it fulfills its purpose.

"Jules of the Strong Heart"

Paramount Production Starring George Beban. Immediate Booking. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

IN this latest Paramount release George Beban adds to his popularity gained by his portrayals of Latin characters. With the picturesque great northwest for a background and with a story which provides ample opportunities for him to exhibit his interesting character study, Beban was never better. A lumber camp in the wilds near the Canadian border furnishes adequate atmosphere as the story is centered there. The presence of a baby as the chief point of mystery adds a little more than the average human touch to this picture play and as the baby is kept in the foreground all through interest is never lacking.

George Beban portrays the character of Jules Lemaire, a French Canadian, and notwithstanding the fact that his greatest successes were the outcomings of his Italian impersonations, his work is truly that of a finished artist. A supporting cast, headed by Helen Eddy, capably directed by Donald Crisp, who is responsible for many of the Beban successes, beautifully photographed throughout, this picture is really up to the usual Paramount standard.

The story: Jules Lemaire, a happy-go-lucky French Canadian, comes to the camp of the Nemo Lumber Company. Having a baby with him causes no end of curiosity and he evasively replies to all questions regarding the child. Jules is given work by the boss and incidently meets his daughteer, Joy. Her interest in the child brings a strong bond of friendship between Jules and the girl. Jim Burgess, the camp bully, forces his attentions upon Joy and Jules goes to her defense. A false story circulated by Burgess, to the effect that Jules had beaten his wife and run away with the child, reaches Joy and when she attempts to get a denial from Jules he evades a direct reply, saying that he never had a wife. Joy misinterprets his statement. The men in the camp having been under restraint for some time, break loose, and when pay day comes and the money is not in evidence, they threaten to lynch Joy's father. Jules volunteers to go for the money and though a fierce storm is raging he takes a boat, which is the only means of travel. Burgess volunteers to help him manage the boat but in the midst of the storm he attacks Jules and gets the best of him. Burgess wrecks the boat in his attempt to find the money order and Jules, bound hand and foot, is helpless.

Morning brings Joy and a stranger in search of Jules and they find Burgess beating him. Burgess is overpowered and the party return to the camp. Then the stranger explains that the baby is his and that Jules had been caring for the child. This mystery cleared and with Burgess out of the way the stranger leaves with his child and Joy and Jules confide their love for each other.

"The Impostor"

Ann Murdock in Empire Production Released Through Mutual. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

UPON Ann Murdock's popularity the value of this picture depends. Taken from a stage play, it is based on a favorite farce situation in which one character pretends to be someone else in order to avoid embarrassment and gets deeper and deeper into trouble. While the story itself is not of great value, it is prettily produced, with good photography, beautiful sets and skilled acting. David Powell plays opposite Miss Murdock. Lionel Adams has an important role. The picture is not as good as the others Miss Murdock has appeared in for the Mutual series, but it will be enjoyed as a light, diverting bit by the average audience, and Miss Murdock's admirers will be pleased by much of her work in this role, even though they regret that the story is not as clever as "Please Help Emily," for instance. The acting and setting will "put it over."

Dell Henderson directed. Leonard Merrick is the author of the play. The large cast of supporting players enact their various roles well.

The picture is released January 14.

The story: Mary Fenton (Ann Murdock) leaves her home in a small town to become a singer in New York. She is unable to find a position, her money is stolen by her landlady, and she finds herself on the streets, penniless. Charles Owen, a young traveling man, invites her to his apartment and she innocently goes and has tea with him there. Some friends of Owen see him with the girl, and in order to save himself, he introduces Mary as his wife's sister. His wife's sister is an heiress and these friends wish to win her. As Owen is leaving town that night, they invite the girl to visit them and she is not able to evade them without creating suspicion. She visits their home, is told that Owen and his wife, her supposed sister, are to arrive the next day. They come unexpectedly, and Mary finds that a frank confession of the whole story is the only way out. She is forgiven, and the son of the house persuades her to remain as his promised wife.

"Vengeance and the Woman"

Episode No. 5, The Plunge of Destruction, Starring William Duncan and Carol Holloway. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

THIS Vitagraph serial continues to abound in thrills and adventures, and in each successive episode William Duncan and Carol Holloway manage to find something more death defying to accomplish with the result that one cannot imagine what is going to happen next.

In this episode Blake has just escaped from the outlaws but his wife Bess is still in their hands. The outlaws take her to Eagle Rock and leave her on the summit. Blake continues in his search for Bess, only to run into a trap. The outlaws have planted dynamite in a section of the mountain, knowing that Blake will have to pass that way, and when the explosion occurs Blake is buried in a mass of dirt and stone. He is dug out by the ranchers, who have been searching for him, and none the worse for his harrowing experience he insists on continuing the search for his wife.

He discovers her on the summit of Eagle Rock and, to get her, he crawls over the telephone wires stretched across a deep chasm at the bottom of which runs a raging river. Under the strain of his weight the wires break and Blake is precipitated to the depths below as a huge bear advances menacingly upon his wife. Here the episode ends leaving the fan in suspense and anxious for the next release to see what happens next.

"Flames of Chance"

Triangle Production Starring Margery Wilson, Released January 20th. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

A PRETTY stenographer "adopts" a lonely soldier, who is a prisoner in a German concentration camp, and by doing so is the innocent cause of exposing an enemy spy plot. This is the foundation upon which is built an interesting picture soon to be released by Triangle. A war story, yet not depicting any of its horrors, this is a delightful relief from the propaganda pictures now being spread over the country. The plot is simple yet so sincere, that it is entirely human and we know that the practice of "adopting" lonely soldier boys has really led to some interesting phases of our everyday life. Romances have sprung up out of gifts of tobacco or a post card received by some poilu or Tommy over there and working upon this theme a very pleasing film is turned out. Margery Wilson is delightful both as the "old, gray-haired grandmother," as she is pictured by the soldier, and as the stenographer that she really is. Jack Mulhall plays the adopted one and leaves no opening for criticism.

The Story: Jeanette Gontreau is a New York stenographer and is anxious to do her bit for the boys in the trenches. At a Red Cross station she gets the names of some lonely boys, who have been prisoners, and sends letters and a box of good things to eat. To the men this is a godsend and they reply by sending their pictures which they had managed to keep. One of the boys, Harry Ledyard, gets a letter from her and on the back of it notices a sketch in invisible ink, which comes out plainly under the heat test. In the meantime the girl's employer has taken a marked interest in her work and is anxious to help her. He contributes several articles to another box of goodies which she is about to send to the boys. Not long after she gets a letter that Ledyard has been exchanged with other prisoners and is on his way to America. She decides to carry out the part of a gray-haired woman, as the boys had pictured her, and when Ledyard comes to see her he is none the wiser as to her real identity.

Ledyard still has the letter containing the hidden sketch and reports it to secret service men. Suspicion points to Jeannette and she is arrested only to be freed on Ledyard's intervention. Ledyard is still in the dark about Jeannette and thinks she is the old lady he has been visiting. Another letter has been stopped by the postal authorities and this time Jeannette is arrested and upon her advice her employer is taken into custody. A cross examination reveals that the employer had been guilty of tampering with Jeannette's mail in that he had taken the letters from her desk, and inscribed in invisible ink matters of importance relating to the actions of the Allied naval forces, hoping that the letters would reach the attention of the German mail censors.

Jeanette is shorn of her disguise and is revealed in her true light. Ledyard sees the part she has played and the friendship having ripened into genuine love, the two rejoice in the turn of fate that brought them together.

"For the Freedom of the World"

Ira Lowry-Goldwyn Picture Starring Barbara Castleton and E. K. Lincoln. Released January 14th. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

ALTHOUGH somewhat glaringly titled, this is a film apropos of the times and ought to be a big drawing card. Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, an American who has seen service with a Canadian regiment, wrote the story and has injected some thrilling wartime atmosphere into the plot. Many of the scenes were taken in Canadian training camps and shows the vigorous methods of training the men undergo before they are pronounced fit for active service. The film not only serves as a medium for pleasure but is instructive all through. Realistic battle scenes, front line trenches, barb-wire entanglements, daring raids as men go over the top are abundant, and though the picture starts off slowly, the plot gathers momentum as it nears the end.

Under the dual direction of Ira M. Lowry and Frank Carroll some intensely interesting situations are presented. Barbara Castleton, E. K. Lincoln and Romaine Fielding are entrusted with the leading parts and acquit themselves creditably. The picture will be released under the Goldwyn banner.

The story is based upon an order issued by the Allied commanders prohibiting members of families of men at the front from visiting the men while on active duty. Gordon Harvey, a young American, enlists in the Canadian American legion and in the course of his duties becomes acquainted with Betty Milburn, who is active in securing enlistments but fails when she seeks to get Ralph Perry, one of her acquaintances, under the colors. Harvey and Perry clash, the latter is arrested for assaulting an officer and is given the alternative of enlisting or spending some time in jail. He choses the former. Betty and Harvey have married and some time later Harvey is ordered to sail for the front with his regiment. He leaves his young bride, who is soon to be a mother, and his going so depresses her that the child does not live. In a few weeks she follows her husband only to find on landing in England that he has left with his regiment for the front.

Although she is aware of the penalty, she goes to France disguised as a nursing sister and is appointed to a sector near her husband. Here she meets Harvey and he threatens to report her to headquarters for violating the stringent law. Betty sees her husband, who tells her that she must return to England. Perry, not to be defeated, has notified the authorities and Betty and Harvey are caught together. To save her from suffering a martial execution he shoots her and as she falls, wounded, Harvey rushes out to fulfill the death mission for which he had been chosen. Betty's wound does not prove fatal and Harvey miraculously escapes with his life, although he had been horribly wounded. Perry, who had been commissioned, is exposed by a brother officer whose life Perry claimed to have saved. He is court-martialed and by his own choice he is permitted to go out to a shell crater and bring in Harvey who is unable to get back. Perry brings in the other but at the cost of his own life and Betty and her husband are reunited. The court-martial order is rescinded because of Harvey's bravery in fulfilling his mission and all ends happily for the young couple.

"His Mother's Boy"

Paramount Picture Starring Charles Ray, Released January 6th. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

CHARLES RAY has appeared in so many of these roles of country boys who leave home and go to some strange land, wherein dwell two-gun men and town bullies, that it is very possible that some day he will put over one that is not up to standard and he will lose a little of his prestige. While this picture is interesting throughout and has many tense moments it is only excellent direction and good work by the star and supporting cast that pulls it over the mark.

Victor Schertzinger is responsible for the direction and must be given full credit for the good work he has done with the story, which is by Cora Stuart Carson. Ray plays the part of the country boy, Matthew Denton, and has for his supporting cast, Doris Lee, who plays opposite him and includes William Elmer, Joseph Swickard, Jerome Storm, Gertrude Claire and Lydia Knott, all of whom do excellent work and help to make the picture a pleasing one despite the handicap of having a rather weak story to work on.

The story is the time-worn one of the country youth, unsophisticated and weak, who changes from lamb to lion. Matthew Denton and his widowed mother live in a small New England town. The father and husband had died leaving the two comfortable. Before his death the elder Denton had sold the leading citizens of the village stocks in some oil depositories that had ceased paying dividends. They accuse the dead man of having sold them worthless stocks and this hurts the boy, who decides that he will go to the oil fields and ascertain why the wells are not producing enough oil to warrant the paying of dividends to the stockowners.

It is his luck to meet the foreman of the works, Banty Jones, a braggard and a bully. The boy is given work at the wells and unfortunately for himself takes a fancy to Mabel Glenny, who happens to be the foreman's sweetheart, though not by choice of the girl.

The girl's father is in league with Jones and between them they have been sending through a branch off the main pipe line of the wells, oil which is not recorded as product of the wells. On a picnic with the girl Matthew trips over the branch pipe line and discovers the cause of the wells not paying. Of course, he now has a weapon to hold over the head of Banty Jones. He hurries to the railroad station and there overhears Jones talking to Glenny and learns that Glenny has refused to be a tool in the hands of the foreman any longer.

Enraged at the intimacy between the boy and the girl, Jones threatens to kill the boy unless he is out of town by morning. Matthew, however, does not heed the warning and believes that he now has Jones in a position where the foreman is at a disadvantage. Then follows a very realistic fight between the two men and the boy comes out the victor.

"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds"

World Pictures—Brady Made. All Star Cast with Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

A STORY replete with interest because of its patriotic nature is this most recent World Pictures release. Intimately exposing the personal feud which existed between Hamilton and Burr and at the same time depicting an interesting episode in the early life of our country it is withall a very pleasing feature. Carlyle Blackwell and Arthur Ashley in the respective roles of Hamilton and Burr furnish food for thought in their portrayals of these historic characters. And not only does the picture show us some of the early struggles of the country to free itself from the yoke of English oppression but it serves to introduce the leading men of those days including the first president George Washington and other such important personages as Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, John Adams and numerous others. A well selected supporting cast, headed by June Elvidge, capably directed by Arthur Ashley, tend to make this feature somewhat different from the usual run of photoplays.

The Story: Hamilton first becomes acquainted with Burr while on official business for General Washington. Burr has been carrying on a partly serious affair with Margaret Moncrieffe. Through the efforts of Hamilton the two lovers are separated and Burr vows vengeance. The war over with the colonists victorious both men return to civil life. Hamilton because of his influence with Washington has become well known and greatly respected all over the country. In political circles he is a commanding figure and here again he meets Burr, who still carries his old hatred for the other. Happily married Hamilton is visited by a Mrs. Reynolds, who seeks his aid in protecting her from the harsh treatment of her husband. She had married while very young and Clingman, her legal husband, forces her into a bogus marriage with Reynolds, an unscrupulous drunk. Both men had been prosecuted by Hamilton for fraud and plan to avenge themselves, with Mrs. Reynolds as the dupe. They enlist the aid of Burr and formulate plans for Hamilton's ruin.

Continuous meetings between Hamilton and Mrs. Reynolds brings a declaration of mutual affection. Letters pass between them and some fall into the hands of Burr, who threatens disclosure of the affair. His reputation in jeopardy Hamilton issues a public statement, in which he discloses his personal affairs, and by doing so wins the confidence and respect of the people. Burr, beaten at every turn, and now thoroughly enraged at the lofty position occupied by his rival, sends a challenge to Hamilton for a duel, which is immediately accepted. The men meet and Hamilton is killed, while Burr comes out unscathed. Mrs. Reynolds learns of the death of Hamilton and despondent over the tragedy, she leaps to her death from the cliffs overlooking the Hudson.

"Hell's Crater"

Grace Cunard in Butterfly Western Play of Interesting Plot. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

BEGINNING as a conventional "dance hall" western picture, this offering develops an interesting plot, with unusual twists, and becomes a very clever production of its kind. It holds the interest firmly, both because of the situations, with their unusual outcome, and the good acting by the leading players. Grace Cunard especially plays her role convincingly and realistically. Her name should prove a drawing card wherever the Universal serials have been shown.

George McDaniel, Ray Hanford and Eileen Sedgwick also do good work. W. B. Pearson wrote and directed the story. G. C. Kingsbury is responsible for the photography, which is unusually good, especially the night scenes. He has gained some very fine effects in these.

The offering as a whole is good, one of the best releases Universal has sent out as a "Butterfly." It will please the average audience very well.

The story: Jim Shamrick, a miner, returning after two years spent alone in the desert, visits the dance-hall of a frontier town and is robbed of his fortune by Cherry Maurice, the chief aid of Bill Gordan, the proprietor. When Jim realizes what had happened, he returns and forces Cherry to go with him back to his desert mine. The woman keeps house for him during the year he is regaining the fortune which was stolen. Her beauty is destroyed and she nearly goes insane.

In the meantime, the miner's sister, Rose, has come to the town seeking her brother. She falls into Gordan's power, and he forces her to take Cherry's place in the dance-hall.

At the end of a year, Jim and Cherry return to the town, after struggling through a desert storm. Jim nearly dies and for a long time is delirious. When he recovers, he has forgotten the events of the past year. He goes back to his old home and his mother, taking his sister with him. But Cherry, who had repented during her sojourn in the desert, decides not to take her old place in the dance-hall but to lead a better life elsewhere.

The miner returns for revenge.

Fairbanks Hires Special Train

Douglas Fairbanks holds the distinction of engaging the first special train out of Los Angeles under Secretary McAdoo's supervision. In fact, it was due to the influence of the new railroad dictator that Fairbanks was able to charter eight Pullmans and twelve baggage cars that carried two hundred cowboys and an equal number of horses to Tucson, Arizona.

It is here that the exterior scenes of Fairbanks' new western film, "Headin' South," are now being staged by Director Art Rosson.

While in Arizona the cowboys will rehearse their stunts for the Douglas Fairbanks rodeo which is soon to take place in Los Angeles for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Douglas, in addition to riding a bucking broncho, is director-general of the wild west show and is certainly a busy man these days.

"The Natural Law" Is On Sale

France Production Is Offered on State Rights Market—M. G. Watkins Heads Selling Force

THE much heralded super-picture, the initial production of France Films, Inc., "The Natural Law," is now ready for the state rights market after several weeks of careful campaign preparations, according to announcements made this week.

At the recent trade showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, this production, which features pretty Marguerite Courtot, supported by Howard Hall and George Larkin, caused many critics to state their belief that the screen version of the intense story of "The Natural Law" surpassed the play itself, which had a phenomenal run in the east and is at present making a successful tour of the country. The story has been published in book form and has met with an unusually large sale throughout the country. Its topic treats of one of the great problems of life, and Charles H. France, who directed the production, has brought into being a film story full of dramatic suspense, startling sensations and wonderful interest. Besides proving excellent entertainment, the picture should prove a huge drawing card from many other standpoints. Without boldly appearing in itself to be a preachment, it sounds a note of warning that checks the girl about to take the step that leads to a path of tears.

A complete line of advertising material has been arranged and secured by France Films, Inc., for the proper handling of the picture. Included in this are two styles of one-sheet, two styles of three-sheets, one style of six-sheets and a twenty-four sheet stand. Three sizes of photos include black and white in the 8x10 size, and colored sets size 11x14 and 22x28. In addition there are heralds, several styles of slides and a press book. According to officials of the company, service to buyers will not end with the sale of territory but will be continued so that the picture may be properly exploited in every section of the country.

M. G. Watkins, prominent mid-west film man identified with various motion picture enterprises, is secretary of France Films, Inc. He will leave Chicago for the east this week to give his entire attention to the selling campaign on "The Natural Law." The company reports an exceptionally large number of inquiries on the picture and expects to close all available territory in record time.

Clune Picture Cut to Seven Reels

Notable among recent productions, both for human interest and grandeur of spectacular appeal, is the Clune production, "The Eyes of the World," which the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York, is selling on the open market. It is in every sense of the word, a big photoplay, so big, in fact, that its magnitude has been held by many shrewd showmen as a drawback to its chance of creating a sensational success in the regular motion picture theaters.

"The Eyes of the World" originally approximated twelve reels in length. It was received with warm applause on its original presentation in Los Angeles, and that success was repeated when the picture was shown at the Auditorium, Chicago. In a small city in Alaska it was shown for three consecutive nights to audiences composed of the same people, who paid one dollar a head each night to see it.

But in recent months the mandate has gone forth in unmistakable terms from experienced exhibitors that the era of ten-reel productions has ended. A change in public taste has manifested itself. The majority of motion picture showmen like to reserve to themselves the right, or at any rate the opportunity of giving two shows a night, a thing not practicable where they are handling anything much over six or seven reels in length.

Yielding then to influential representations on this point W. H. Clune's big spectacular feature, "The Eyes of the World," has been carefully edited and cut down to seven reels, without in any way sacrificing any of the gripping points of interest or spectacular thrills. In its new form the picture goes with a dramatic snap and vigor that keeps an audience on the tenterhook of excitement every instant of the time.

Shallenberger & Priest will screen the revised version of "The Eyes of the World" for any person interested in acquiring rights to it.

Bert Lytell, who will be seen again as the Lone Wolf in the next Herbert Brennon production.

Brenon Works on "Lone Wolf" Sequel

Herbert Brenon has completed several scenes in "False Faces" at the Brenon studios, and others are being made now. The novel, "False Faces" or the sequel to "The Lone Wolf" has just been completed in serial form by Louis Joseph Vance in the Saturday Evening Post. It is typical melodrama, replete with thrilling incident and exciting situations. Scenes on board a submarine, pistol fights, tense moments through which a bold fearless hero plies his way abound in the picture. Bert Lytell's role in this production is an appealing one. The character combines dauntless courage in the face of adversity, a winning personality that makes him attractive even to his enemies, and a charm of manner that disarms suspicion. The Lone Wolf is the sort of man who meets danger with a smile.

Mr. Brenon expects to have this production completed in six weeks' time.

Sawyer and Lubin Get New Seven-Reelers

Following out their previously announced scheme of increased activities in the matter of production and distribution during the year 1918, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., stated this week that they had acquired a new State Right offering. The latest addition to the string of pictures controlled by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin is "The Crucible of Life," a seven part society melodrama possessing sufficient war atmosphere to add timeliness and interest to the dominant theme. The story is an adaptation from the well known stage play and novel, "Fairfax," written by Bartley Campbell and which attained wide success in the spoken drama and in reading form.

Buys "Parentage" for Two States

Harry I. Garson, personal manager of Clara Kimball Young, has closed with "Wid" Cunning for "Parentage" for Michigan and Ohio, and will open the picture simultaneously in both states. It is the intention to carry on a tremendous advertising campaign—characteristic of Garson's way of doing things. "Parentage" has been breaking all records in New England during bitter cold weather—playing to 60,000 admissions in Boston, breaking all records in Springfield, Mass., and Holyoke, holding a line for hours at twelve degrees below zero.

Business Is Picking Up in East

The Stanley Booking Company, controlled by Stanley V. Mastbaum, has contracted for the first three U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation subjects embracing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," both Ince productions, and the Sidney Olcott spectacle, "The Belgian." Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the U. S., obtained the bookings while on a trip to Philadelphia last week.

Although many theaters in eastern Pennsylvania have encountered trying difficulties as a result of the severe weather recently, Mr. Card found conditions generally satisfactory with a majority of the exhibitors sanguine that milder weather will bring a pronounced change for the better.

"The holiday depression so far as I could ascertain," declared Mr. Card, "is a thing of the past. Business has been picking up in lively fashion, despite the fact that exhibitors have been compelled to combat abnormal weather conditions. The demand for special productions appears to be more insistent than ever in eastern Pennsylvania and our sales forces in that district are being kept busy filling orders for our first three productions."

Petrova Goes to Florida

Leaves for Miami to Film Scenes for "The Life Mask," Third Production of Petrova Pictures Company

MADAME OLGA PETROVA, accompanied by several members of her production organization, left New York City last week for Florida. The destination of the Petrova troupe is Miami, where the company will take up quarters during the filming of the various exteriors called for in the third Petrova production, "The Life Mask." The trip was made to secure the necessary atmosphere required by the story of the anonymous author, also responsible for the famous "To M. L. G.," the well-known novel.

Madam Olga Petrova, star of the productions made by the Petrova Picture Co.

The Petrova organization will remain at Miami for three weeks, during which time the various scenes will be filmed on the magnificent estates of James Deering, occupying several acres of ground in the garden spot of the southern city. Through special arrangements made by Frank Crane, the necessary permission was obtained to enact the exteriors for "The Life Mask" on the Deering estate, which heretofore has not been used by any film producer. Director Crane was in charge of the company that left with Madame Petrova, together with Eddie James, assistant director; George Lane, photographer; Micky Whalen, assistant photographer, and a corps of property men, carpenters and electricians.

Thomas Holding, leading man of the Petrova outfit, Edith Hinckle, Jean Burnell and Edward Burns were also in the party and will appear in support of the Polish actress. The trip was made under the special direction of Bobby North, studio manager for Madame Petrova, who has taken with him Mr. M. Goldstein to assist in the various business details. The picture star was accompanied by her personal secretary, Miss Cohen, together with three maids, and special arrangements were made with the railroad company, whereby Madame Petrova and her retinue of servants will occupy exclusive quarters throughout the trip. The taking of the exteriors for "The Life Mask," by Director Crane while in Miami, will mark the completion of the production, which is the third in which the star will appear at the head of her picture organization.

Form New Booking Corporation

Exhibitors of Chicago Organize the Associated Theaters, Inc., Under Illinois Laws for Co-operative Bookings

ORGANIZATION of the Associated Theaters, Inc., was announced last week, comprising some of the most substantial individual Chicago theater managers. Incorporation papers have been filed with the secretary of state of Illinois, and plans are being perfected for operation of the organization in Indiana and Wisconsin.

The purpose of the newly formed incorporation is to obtain collective bookings for theaters holding franchises of the Associated Theaters, Inc., assuring exhibitors within the organization exclusive service of worth-while independent pictures.

Of equal importance to the announcement of the formation of the Associated Theaters was the news made public at the new corporation's temporary headquarters, 1424 Consumers' building, 220 South State street, Chicago, that the first feature obtained for exclusive release in its theaters will be the McClure picture, "Mother," produced by George Loane Tucker and starring Elizabeth Risdon.

The officers of the Associated Theaters, Inc., are:

President, Joseph Hopp.
Vice-president, Harry C. Miller.
Secretary, W. D. Burford.
Treasurer, William E. Heaney.
Auditor, John Bobeng.
Assistant Auditor, Charles C. Stuart.

The organization now controls the bookings in thirty-six theaters in Chicago and Illinois. It expects to extend its operations into Indiana and Wisconsin in the near future, and to place a franchise with the most desirable moving picture theater in every city in Illinois. Special attention will be paid to the small town exhibitor and arrangements will be effected whereby the small theater owner will be enabled to book good independent pictures before they have become shop-worn or have outlived their popularity.

Exhibitors holding Associated Theaters franchises will be expected to make the Chicago offices of the concern their headquarters when visiting the city. They will be privileged to transact their business from these headquarters, make business appointments there, and to seek any sort of service the Associated Theaters organization affords.

The present offices are located temporarily in Suite 1424 of the Consumers' building. When permanent offices have been established, a private projection room will be installed for the use of members of the incorporation and franchise holders.

A committee of six exhibitors—both city and small town theater owners being represented—will view every available production offering. This committee is to be chosen with a view to getting a representative gathering at every trade showing. Franchise holders, under the laws of the incorporation, are not compelled to book the pictures bought by the organization.

The purposes of the corporation were stated by Secretary Burford as follows:

"Our organization is purely co-operative for the purpose of collective bookings of good pictures at fair and equitable prices and under fair conditions for first-run showings. Outside of Chicago we will franchise the most desirable theater in every important city and furnish an exclusive service to these theaters."

The first picture of the new organization, "Mother," will be shown at the Rose Theater in Chicago for four days, beginning January 17, following which it may be continued there for another three days, making a seven-day run. It will be shown next at the Hamlin Theater in Chicago. Four prints of this feature will be put to work in the territory of the Associated Theaters. Other pictures which will be released through the new booking corporation in this territory will be announced later.

Breaks House Record

"The Planter," a seven-reel spectacle starring Tyrone Power, released by Mutual Film Corporation as a special, smashed records at the Strand Theater at Duluth on New Year's week.

C. L. Hiller, the manager of the Strand, booked "The Planter" for three days but on January 5 he wired the Minneapolis branch of the Mutual as follows: "'Planter' breaking house record. Will hold over for week."

Tax Hits Small Theater Owner Hard

A. E. Swam, owner of the Rex Theater in Chenoa, Ill., has one of the cleanest and most comfortable, up-to-date moving picture theaters in central Illinois. With a population of only 1,800 to draw upon and a strict observance of the Sabbath, Chenoa, under the best of conditions, is not the easiest place in the world for an exhibitor to make money. But Mr. Swam continues giving his patrons a good program every night.

He uses Vitagraph and Triangle programs during the week and on Saturday nights state rights features. An automatic piano furnishes the music every night and for the Saturday matinee. For a small theater (237 seats) the ventilation is excellent. Mr. Swam himself operates the Simplex, insuring good projection. The local newspaper co-operates in a splendid way with Mr. Swam and his programs appear in its columns daily. The war tax and general existing conditions have hit Mr. Swam hard. He charges 15 cents and pays the tax himself.

Keeney Plans Another Theater

Frank A. Keeney has bought a plot of ground on Third street, near Pine street, Williamsport, Pa., for the second of a string of motion picture houses he is erecting in different cities of the east. The Williamsport theater will cost approximately $200,000, including site, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,800. Ground is to be broken in the spring, as soon as weather permits, and it is expected the house will be ready for use by the late summer. Plans have already been drawn for a $100,000 motion picture house on Wall street, Kingston, N. Y.

Some Crowd Getting Suggestions

COMPILED FROM EXPERIENCES OF A SUCCESSFUL MANAGER

BY EDWARD L. HYMAN
Manager, Victoria Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

IF the man in the booth became too engrossed in the mechanism of his machines, tinkering with the fuses and such—and paid more attention to the smoothness with which they operated than he did to the manner in which he projected the picture, you'd give him two weeks notise mighty quick.

That is the way I feel about my own job. Either I will become so enveloped in the mechanism of running a neighborhood playhouse that I will forget that there is a human side to the whole business—or I will retain the right perspective and will both be careful as to how my house is run and to the view-point of the patron.

Realizes Courtesy Value

The public-be-damned policy is frazzled. Mr. Mark, the Victoria owner, was one of the first to realize this, and that was because he was and is one of the most courteous men that ever lived. I'm not going to give a preachment on courtesy or service; I merely want to exchange some ideas. I am willing to present to fellow managers some "stunts" and "policies" which we deemed have helped the Victoria, and may aid others. I have assimilated many ideas from the published experiences of others, and why not reciprocate?

But getting back to the theme I sought to hit. My potent idea is never to let my office as manager lift myself above the views of my patronage. As soon as that happens I am not in sympathy with them, our paths will become different and the theater will lose.

What Interests Public

The public is interested in those things that touch most upon their daily life, and the things they dream about and long for. The average person has three all-important things in his or her life. They are Love, Home Happiness and Pleasure. Might I make it four, adding Health?

A motion picture man can cater to these at all times for those elements are as much a part of his make-up as they are of his patrons. When you regard your patrons as merely a critical mob who pay you money, you are lost.

Most folks want to know what is going to happen. They like pleasant news presented to them in the most appealing way possible. Your screen helps here. Use slides and use them right.

I have a method which I find makes the "coming attraction" part of the program as welcome as the feature or comedy. When I make up my slides announcing the coming attractions, I take the attraction and look over the heralds and the trade journals for artistic advertising. Take for instance Mary Pickford in The Little Princess. I find a beautiful ad, prepared by the producers. I cut it out. Mount it on a card and sign-letter in the dates when it will play the Victoria. Then I have the ad reproduced upon the slide glass and an artist tints it in colors.

Slides From Ads are Good

When it is cast upon the screen you do not generally have a common-place cheap slide, but something that is akin to a painting. It is up-to-the-minute for it embodies the brains of the producer's high-priced advertising staff. You thus enlist the trade journal and the producer to help you. This sort of slide appeals and seems to leave a deeper impression, because everybody craves the beautiful and modern.

Another thing that I feel many exhibitors neglect, is the opinion of the patron. It shouldn't matter whether or not you like a certain star or sort of play. If your patronage in the majority wants them, you should subjugate your own desires.

But how can I get a barometer of what they want, you will ask, and will add that it never has been done and never will be accomplished. Of course you can't get it exact. If you could you would be a paragon. But you can read human nature to an extent.

Seek Patrons' Opinions

When I first became associated with the Victoria, the patronage was new to me and I wanted to find out the particular kind of productions and stars that appealed to them. Finally, I became so troubled that I said to myself: You are the doctor, select your own film. You know best what you want. So in the program I had prepared an on-the-level talk with a simple chart with the current attractions on it. Then I asked the patrons to register their opinions as to whether they deemed the picture, good, bad or medium. I did this for several weeks, and watched every picture close and studied the criticisms. My patrons saw I wanted to give them the best and were sincere in their criticisms. Soon I gauged their likes and dislikes fairly well and have borne them in mind when selecting pictures. I have them criticize every so often, as the patronage and opinions change.

You will say, "Why suggest criticism? Forget it!" It is natural for human nature to be critical, and they will criticize, anyway. If you don't try to dodge it, the tendency will turn the other way, for they are told often in the Victoria program that the pictures are selected according to the likes and dislikes they have outlined in their criticisms.

Program Invites Views

So that the exhibitor may grasp the criticism idea better, I submit here, one of the blanks recently published in the Victoria program:

Is The Victoria Fair?

Do you get that which you crave in photoplay or musical entertainment when you enter within the comfortable environs of the VICTORIA?

Do you leave your seat feeling glad you spent a couple of hours in the VICTORIA atmosphere, or do you begrudge the money that you have spent?

You alone can answer those questions!

The VICTORIA desires to ascertain how its efforts are received by you.

Will you kindly criticize the VICTORIA bill below, thus taking the first step toward standardizing that which is best in the motion art.

Screen and Opera Bill Succeeds

Harold Edel's Experiment in Offering Operatic Entertainment with Films Justifies Itself

THE introduction of a combination of screen and operatic entertainment has proved a big success at the Strand Theater, New York, according to an announcement from Harold Edel, managing director. For the first time in the history of the photoplay theater such an entertainment was presented at the Strand last week and record attendance was the result. Special scenery and costumes were prepared for the presentation of a condensed version of "Carmen" and the ovations accorded this offering at every performance indicated that this form of entertainment bids fair to become widely popular.

Oscar Spirescu, the noted conductor, collaborated with Mr. Edel in the preparation of the music and presentation of this novelty. The famous opera was condensed so that it could be shown in thirty minutes with four people. The opera was staged in three acts with appropriate scenery and lighting effects and took the place on the bill of the usual vocal soloists. The complete bill in the order of its presentation included "The Star Spangled Banner" by the entire orchestra, with special visualization of the stage disclosing an artistic drop showing Fort Sumter in the distance being fired upon; number two was the overture offering, "Tales of the Vienna Woods," with a zither solo; number three, zoological pictures; number four, Strand Topical Review; number five, violin solo; number six, Pauline Frederick in "Mrs. Dane's Defense," a Paramount photoplay; number seven, "Carmen," with four people and special scenery; number eight, scenic and educational pictures; number nine, a James Montgomery Flagg comedy; and number ten, an organ solo.

"The introduction of opera in the photoplay theater in conjunction with a bill of screen entertainment, has proved a big success," said Mr. Edel. "The presentation of Carmen in thirty minutes was no small task, but the result is more than gratifying. The Strand is the first theater in the country, if not the world, to present this new form of entertainment and that in due time it will be popular throughout the entire country seems apparent. We have had record attendances the past week and the enthusiastic applause and comments accorded our new entertainment encourages us to do even bigger things along these lines. We have dared to attempt this undertaking despite the discouraging expressions of various persons and that we have made a ten-strike is disclosed in the report of our box-office receipts. We have received countless congratulations on our departure in American amusements and are arranging for further offerings of this kind along even broader lines."

Special Front Adds $100 to Receipts

Manager Harry Pomoroy of the Globe Theater, Toronto, Ont., one of the best lobby display originators in Canada, has figures to prove that a special front brings additional business of $100 per day to a downtown theater with less than 500 seats. Pomoroy has kept a record of receipts for various attractions at theaters which he has managed. When he has arranged a special lobby display the receipts for a three-day run have invariably been $300 more than for a similar run without a decorated front. Nobody can now shake his belief in the value of a lobby display. He considers a special display almost as important as a good feature in itself.

Pomoroy's plan is to work on displays for weeks in advance. He reads the trade papers almost religiously in order to secure ideas about releases which he books, and when he receives the advertising literature and service helps from an exchange he is just about ready to execute his design. He draws rough sketches of a future front several weeks ahead of time and these he keeps in a drawer of his desk. Then, as various inspirations come, he alters these sketches until he works out the final drawing. He employs a scenic sign painter but he does most of the work of setting up a lobby display himself. He manages to keep the cost of displays within $30 generally, as he has acquired the knack of borrowing necessary articles or renting them cheaply. Cutouts of mounted posters also help considerably.

Elaborate Setting for "Thais"

An elaborate stage setting was used at the Regent Theater, Toronto, Ont., for the presentation of the Goldwyn production of "Thais." Mr. Garton, first violinist of the Regent's fifteen-piece orchestra, made his appearance in a monastery scene garbed as a Franciscan monk and played the "Meditation from Thais." As the closing bars were reached the lights faded down and the picture was on. In the audience at the first performance was Madame Melba, who had come to see Mary Garden's screen interpretation of the part of "Thais."

Business Better in Canada

The Teck Amusement Company, Toronto, Ont., is the applicant for damages in a case before the Dominion Railway Board because the building of a subway to facilitate the entrance of a railway into Toronto necessitated the shortening of a moving picture theater on Yonge street which it controls. An insight into film theater conditions was given by Mr. Bud Lennon, assistant general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, at the hearing of this case before the board. Mr. Lennon, who was called as an expert, testified that the bottom fell out of the theater business in the fall of 1914 but that conditions had been better during 1917, generally, than ever before. The theaters would probably continue to be prosperous, he believed. From his own experience in the management of an 800-seat community theater, a clear profit of between $6,000 and $7,000 a year could be made with a house of fair size. The applicants wanted damages because the seating capacity of the theater in question had been materially reduced on account of the subway encroachment.

U. S. Film Tax Hits Neighbor

The exhibitors of the Canadian Province of Quebec have been notified by exchange managers in Montreal that they jointly and individually are now expected to pay more for advertising accessories and also to pay up for return express charges on all shipments in view of rising costs, one of which happens to be the United States war tax of $10 per reel for all positive prints which Canadian exchange companies must also pay. The new schedule of charges on advertising matter went into effect on January 6, on which date the theater managers were also expected to start to prepay express charges on reels going back to the exchanges.

Quinn Plans New Theater

Announces the Establishment of Playhouse on Site of New Hampshire Hotel in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES is to have another moving picture theater, work on which will begin in less than two weeks. It will be the first house on the Quinn Circuit of Modern Motion Picture Houses, on a piece of property at 816, 818, 820 South Broadway, owned by the Katherin P. Hooker estate. Tenants of the hotel now occupying this site have already been notified of the move. The leases have been signed by J. A. Quinn, owner of the Rialto Theater, which is just two doors north of the proposed new house.

Albert R. Walker has been chosen as architect. He is now finishing plans for the lobby and interior. The front of the house is to be executed along the lines of the period of Spanish Renaissance.

Great care will be taken in the installing of a huge orchestral organ, which has already been ordered. The house will seat approximately 900, with a circle of loges and boxes in the rear. These loges are to be built in such a way that parties will be entirely separated from other patrons, a plan already carried out at the Rialto Theater. Lighting, ventilation and heating will be the most modern and perfect.

The New Hampshire Hotel, which at present is situated on the property, will be razed. The entire cost of the enterprise will represent an investment of about $100,000.

Starts Broadway Run of Two Weeks

"Cheating the Public," William Fox's 1918 cinemelodrama, with an all-star cast, began a two-week run January 13 at the Lyric Theater, New York City. It will be released to exhibitors as a Standard Picture on January 20.

It is the second of Director Richard Stanton's productions to be shown in the Broadway district, "The Spy" having been the first. The other, like " Cheating the Public," was a melodrama, but differs from the new production in being more largely propaganda. There is propaganda material, and much of it, in the new play, but this overshadowed by the melodramatic features, of which there are ten especially emphasized by the producer.

"Cheating the Public" has in its cast twenty-two persons of important roles. Among them are Ralph Lewis, Bertram Grassby, Tom Wilson, Charles Edler, Enid Markey, Wanda Petit, Fanny Migsley, Frankie Lee, Barbara Conley, Carrie Clark Ward, James Titus, Henry Peal, Edward Peil, Joseph Hartley, James Morgan, Arthur Glynn, and Miles McCormack.

Signs For Big Film Features

Exhibitor in Town of Less Than 800 Inhabitants Contracts for Select Productions During Year 1918

A REMARKABLE instance of the recognition by a "small town exhibitor" of the value of the highest grade pictures is found in a contract which in many respects is one of the most noteworthy that has ever been executed between distributor and exhibitor. This contract has just been signed by an exhibitor in the small California town of Los Banos.

The total population of Los Banos is 745 persons. The town, which is a noted duck shooting center, lies in the San Joaquin valley, 145 miles south of San Francisco. The exhibitor is Charles Guintini, and his theater is the Crescent.

The contract which Mr. Guintini has given Select Pictures stipulates for the showing at the Crescent theater of all pictures produced by Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady during the year 1918. This embodies the four Select Star Series of pictures.

Mr. Guintini, at the time of signing his contract, gave a play-date for each new production covering every other week in the year, so that the Select output is contracted for and play-dates given for the entire year's output at the very beginning of the contract.

Announce Walthall Play Release

Following "A Man's Man" in which J. Warren Kerrigan is the star and "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale in the stellar role, both of which are now showing in the foremost theaters throughout the country, Henry B. Walthall will make his debut as a Paralta star in "His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance.

This production will be the third Paralta Play which is to be presented for public opinion and will be released through the exchanges of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Those who have seen "Stolen Honor," Miss Pearson's latest starring vehicle for William Fox, declare that in it Miss Pearson does the greatest work of her screen career.

Post Mortem Letter Received

A letter written by Dion Titheridge, former member of the Triangle forces, a few days before he died in the service of the British Army, has been received at the Triangle Culver City studio. Titheridge, who was a brother of the noted actress, Madge Titheridge, resigned from Triangle players to enlist. His death was due to pneumonia. He made his debut as an actor under Sir Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theater in London, playing the role of the Artful Dodger in Oliver Twist. Before entering the motion picture field he won success with Laurette Taylor in one of her successful New York productions.

Release Date Changed

Bad weather conditions having interfered with some retakes which Director Carl Harbaugh desired to make in "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal," the date of release of this Fox Special Feature has been changed from January 27 to February 3. The January 27 release will be June Caprice in "The Heart of Romance."

Latest News of Chicago

THE Atlas Educational Film Company announces the inauguration of the "Better Films Clearing House," under the supervision of Mrs. Frederic Michael. This clearing house is a bureau organized for the purpose of distributing approved films through one centrally located exchange, for use in schools, churches, community centers, clubs, cantonments, etc. Mrs. Michael, who will direct this work, has been very active during the past four years as chairman of the Better Films Committee of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and the Parent-Teachers' Association. In this connection she reviewed and recommended films suitable for young people's programs for exhibitors, as well as for churches and schools. She successfully managed several children's matinees in Chicago theaters and aided exhibitors throughout the state in making up programs for special performances. Mrs. Michael has won the confidence of the exchange managers and exhibitors because of her fairness and good judgment in selecting films for these special entertainments. Among the producing companies who have promised co-operation with the Better Films Clearing House are Paramount, Mutual, Pathe, Vitagraph, Wholesome, Bluebird and Atlas.

A party of fifty-six from the Boys' Division of the Wilson Avenue Department of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago made a trip through the plant of the American Film Company, Inc., at 6227 Broadway, last week, and learned many interesting things about the development of the films, which they afterward saw projected upon the screen in the projection room of the company. Richard R. Nehls, general manager of the company, gave a talk to the boys during the afternoon, in which he explained every step of a motion picture from the time it was recorded upon the film until it was shown upon the screen. The boys were accompanied on the trip by two of the Boy's Work secretaries, Maurice F. Gogle and Edward A. Compton.

P. E. Pinkelman, who owns four of the seven moving picture theaters of Quincy, Ill., was in Chicago last week. He reports business improving at all of his houses—the Princess, Savoy, Gem and Family—but said it could stand further improvement. Mr. Pinkelman avails himself of the offerings of the Paramount, Triangle and Mutual programs in scheduling his entertainments. In addition to his moving picture activities he has the agency in eleven Illinois counties for the Dayton Tire Company and looks after his real estate holdings, which are large. He is a fairly busy man for one who announced several years ago that he had retired from active pursuits.

Herbert Brenon, the producer, arrived in Chicago this week for a consultation with Major Funkhouser and the Chicago Censor Board. In his address to the censors, Mr. Brenon pleaded that he be allowed personally to make whatever changes were necessary in his latest production, "Empty Pockets." He expressed his sincere purpose in making pictures and stated that the profits from the melodrama, "Empty Pockets," would go towards meeting the expenses of making "The Third Floor Back" an artistic film which had cost $110,000 and upon which Mr. Brenon expected to make very little money.

The Chicago film world's most interesting visitor during the last week was Jesse L. Lasky. He stopped off in Chicago one afternoon on his trip from New York to the Pacific coast and held an informal reception for press folk in the office of Manager Goldstein of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. While here he announced that the multitude of names under which the distributing exchanges handling Paramount, Artcraft and other subjects exist will all be merged into one organization and will be henceforth known as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exchanges.

The American Military Relief Association is showing this week a one-reel comedy at the Band Box Theater and at the Ziegfeld Theater, in which Ernest Truex and his family play the principal roles. These pictures are not war pictures, have no war scenes in them, but they are good, clean travesties on some of the fads and foibles of the moment.

First trade showings of the George K. Spoor feature, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," starring the Butte authoress, Mary MacLane, were held this week at the Kleine exchange. Billboard announcements of this picture have already appeared throughout the city.

Edgar Lewis, the director, stopped off at the Rothaker studio, Chicago, on his way to Los Angeles for the purpose of personally conferring with Mr. Watterson Rothacker about the technical work on his big feature, entitled "The Sign Invisible," which will soon be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and which will be manufactured by the Rothacker laboratory.

N. J. Baumer, studio manager of the Rothaker Film Manufacturing Company, is fast recovering from a serious attack of tonsilitis which confined him to his home for several weeks.

Joseph Santley and members of the "Oh, Boy!" company are busily engaged in filming a one-reel comedy under the auspices of the American Military Relief Association, from which a fund goes to Uncle Sam's boys "Over There." It is Mr. Santley's intention after this picture has been produced and the "Oh, Boy!" company is on tour to carry a print of this picture with him and make a speech in the various cities in which he is playing with the "Oh, Boy!" company for a new Liberty Loan.

Five Chicago firemen are dead as the result of a fire that destroyed the West Chicago Avenue Theater. The blaze started late at night when Chicago's streets were snow blocked, and an investigation is on to determine whether it was of incendiary origin. Mrs. Clyde B. Gallecatte, pianist, and Mrs. Elizabeth Mache, cashier of the theater, have testified that a former employe was seen near the house shortly before the blaze was discovered.

For reasons of safety, and to avoid possible delay in transit, Bobby North of the Petrova Pictures Corporation dispatched a special messenger from New York with the sample print of the second Petrova release for delivery at the Rothacker Laboratory, Chicago, where all Petrova subjects released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit are manufactured and issued.

At a recent meeting of the stockholders of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, the following directors for 1918 were elected: Watterson R. Rothacker, David Beaton, Jr., A. A. Rothacker, H. J. Aldous and John Hahn.

G. W. Wilson, representative of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in Cincinnati, has been transferred to the Chicago headquarters of the concern. He has had long experience in this territory.

Terry Ramsaye is back at Mutual headquarters after a trip to New York. The journey home took sixty hours, the recent blizzard meeting him on the way.

Frank J. Snyder, formerly a member of Doc. Willats' technical staff, has arrived in Chicago from New York to join the Rothacker organization.

FACTS ABOUT FILM FOLK—YOU MAY CLIP AND PRINT THEM

The dueling pistols made use of by Carlyle Blackwell and Arthur Ashley, as Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," an impending World-Picture Brady-Made, are said to be the identical weapons which figured in the real tragedy resulting in Hamilton's death. They are the property of a Miss Demarest, of Teaneck, N. J., upon whose estate portions of the new picture play were photographed.

Edward J. Shulter, Metro technical director, has returned from St. Augustine, Florida, where he supervised the erection of settings for Nazimova's second starring vehicle under the Metro trade mark, which is being directed by George D. Baker. The play is a story of gypsy life and Shulter arranged for the staging of scenes at the gypsy camp at Ponce de Leon Springs, Florida.

Clifford Bruce, leading man for Viola Dana in "The Winding Trail," and "The House of Hearts," is a Canadian and was educated at the University of Toronto. He was a star in his own right in "The Devil at His Elbow" and in an episode of the "Seven Deadly Sins" series for McClure, in which he played with Viola Dana's sister, Shirley Mason.

Douglas Fairbanks returned to the speaking stage for twenty minutes last week when he revived his act, "A Regular Business Man," for the benefit of the Los Angeles Examiner Christmas Fund. When on the legitimate stage, between seasons, Fairbanks played "A Regular Business Man" in and around New York City. Through the courtesy of Joseph Hart, permission was granted him to use same for benefit purposes. Louise Huff, Frank Campeau and Edythe Chapman played prominent roles in the Fairbanks sketch. James Hogan acted as stage manager, with Allan Dwan as the director. this being his initial work in the speakies.

At the first showing of Goldwyn's "Thais" at the Strand Theater, New York, a notable audience greeted Mary Garden on the occasion of her screen debut. Interest naturally focussed on her and comment was made on her absence from the box usually occupied by the star of a production when it is given its premiere at the famous Strand. Other members of the cast were present, including Hamilton Revelle, the leading man, and officials of Goldwyn. But there was no Mary Garden—that is, so far as the audience knew. The great Thais of opera and cinema was present, however, from the moment the orchestra began the prelude to the moment when Thais reappears, after her death, in the temple doorway. Where was Mary Garden? In the gallery, of course. Scorning the conventional prominence of a box, she chose to enjoy the picture from the very point necessity used to place her—the dear old gallery, or "adversity circle," as she calls it.

That the popularity of Theda Bara is world-wide was definitely established by the great assortment of Christmas gifts sent this popular idol. It required two trips of the star's roomy limousine to transport the packages from the William Fox offices to Miss Bara's home. From all over the United States came presents from the divine vampire's admirers.

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star, was born in Texarkana, Texas, and reared in New Orleans and Dallas, where the roughest winter weather is like a September evening up north and snow mostly a myth with the natives. In fact, until this winter she never has seen snow and always had desired to. Now, having weathered the worst cold experienced in New York in forty years, she is perfectly willing to return to Texas or most any place south of Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Marguerite Courtot, appearing in "The Natural Law," a seven-reel France Film, Inc., production.

"Puppaki," who acts in Metro's forthcoming production, "Under Suspicion," is a wise monkey. He will not bite a screen star. Every other person connected with the production of "Under Suspicion" at the Metro studio has been bitten by this nervous little animal but toward the two stars, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, "Puppaki's manner is perfect and his disposition ideal.

Viola Dana gives ample evidence of her dancing ability in "The Winding Trail," a picture soon to be released by Metro. The little star does an exquisite toe dance and also a charming Spanish dance, each in most becoming costumes. As Audrey La Salle in this picture Miss Dana has one of the best roles she has ever portrayed. John H. Collins is the director of "The Winding Trail."

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will soon be seen in "Under Suspicion," a society crook story adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino from Hugh Weir's story, "The Woolworth Diamonds." William S. Davis, who produced "Alias Mrs. Jessop," starring Emily Stevens is directing Bushman and Bayne in their new picture.

There are many distinctive touches in "The Kingdom of Love," Jewel Carmen's initial starring production. Miss Carmen has the role of Violet Dale, a dance hall belle in an Alaskan gilded palace. Into her life comes her brother whom she has not seen in twenty years. Neither recognized the other. The brother gives Violet a photograph of his mother—her mother—and the girl recognizes it, the portrait slowly fades out and within the narrow frame she holds in her hands her thoughts are visualized. One sees again, in miniature, the two children playing as they did a score of years before.

Albert Shelby Le Vino, Metro scenario writer, had fifteen years' experience as a newspaper reporter before he entered the motion picture field.

Kempton Greene, who plays the prominent role of Steve Graham in "The Eyes of Mystery," the initial Metro starring vehicle of Edith Storey, is a favorite young juvenile who for several years was featured in Lubin productions. His recent screen appearances include "Brown of Harvard" for Selig. He began his stage career in "Checkers."

Eva Gordon, who has played for several motion picture companies in Europe, has been engaged to play the role of Mrs. Woolworth in "Under Suspicion," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

An illustrated booklet is about to be issued for free distribution by World-Pictures Brady-Made marking the four hundredth motion picture play in which Carlyle Blackwell has appeared as star actor—"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds." The booklet is titled "From College Boy to Picture Star," and it contains an account of Mr. Blackwell's life which will greatly startle readers sharing the general impression that he was raised a pet.

Jules of the Strong Heart—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 14—George Beban plays the role of a French Canadian in this comedy-drama. Helen Jerome Eddy and a baby have important supporting roles. The lumber mills serve as background. The story is reviewed in this issue.

Triangle

Evidence—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 20—With Barney Sherry. Reviewed in this issue.

The Flame of Chance—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 20—Stars Margery Wilson. Reviewed in this issue.

Vitagraph

The Wild Strain—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 14—Nell Shipman is featured as the girl of a conventional family who has inherited daring traits from a remote ancestor. She shocks her relatives and even her fiance. Riding a horse in a circus parade is one of her stunts. In the end she foils a bank robbery, proves herself a heroine and is forgiven. Reviewed in this issue.

The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 21—The picture is based on the story of Aaron Burr and Hamilton. Reviewed in this issue.

General Program

Next?—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 19—A comedy. When the Worthless Husband refuses to fire up the furnace, his wife, weighing a full three hundred pounds, decides to go to work and be independent. She answers an ad asking for Lady barbers. The Lady Barber shop is reaping a harvest, due to their staff of pretty girls who coax in the patronage. And not the least patronizing of these patrons is the Worthless Husband. He and a dozen others partake in the various services the pretty girls render, from shaves to shines and manicures. And many are the flirtations carried on between the customers and the fair employes. The Husband comes back for the third time that day for a shave. By that time his wife is established as one of the tonsorial artists. When she sees him in the chair and hears from the proprietress that he has been flirting with the girls, she orders him tied down and then smears his whole face and head with lather. After that punishment is inflicted, she turns him over her knee and spanks him.

The Water Powers of Eastern Canada—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 19—Scenic. The extensive part played by water in the industries of Eastern Canada is vividly revealed in this Essanay scenic reel. The countless falls and rapids in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec are shown as well as the sluice gates capable of generating 150,000 horse power. The artistic side of Canada is not omitted, for some picturesque vistas along the St. Maurice River are shown, including Grand Mere Rock, which reveals the perfect profile of a grand mother type. Niagara, the famous water falls, was photographed for this picture, with its "harness" that generates 2,000,000 horse power. The industries dependent on this source of power supply you will also see.

A Romance of Rails and Power—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 26—An Essanay leading actress takes an interesting part in this scenic. Virginia Valli appears in a story woven around the electrification of railroads. This picture reveals how the eastern railroads are employing the use of electric locomotive power and how in many ways it proves more efficient and cleanly than the steam mode of propulsion. You will also see some of the scenes along the railroads.

Louise Glaum Is Paralta Star

Popular Delineator of Intense Types Signs Contract with Carl Anderson—Will Have Her Own Producing Company

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Paralta Plays, Inc., that arrangements have been consummated by Carl Anderson under the terms of which Miss Louise Glaum becomes a Paralta star. Few stars of the screen hold a more exaulted position than does Miss Glaum and the closing of this contract adds another important member to the galaxy of stars appearing in Paralta Plays.

Miss Glaum has been appearing in photoplays for little more than four years, but during that time her popularity as a delineator of intense types has increased rapidly until she is today one of the great exponents in the art of dramatic interpretation.

Miss Glaum made her debut on the stage as a member of a stock company in Chicago. She later appeared in important roles supporting Nat Goodwin in his Los Angeles stock company, after which she spent several seasons on the road in dramatic productions. She then went to California where she appeared before the motion picture camera under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. Her screen successes include "The Aryan," "Honor Thy Name," "The Wolf Woman," "The Weaker Sex," "The Return of 'Draw' Egan," "The Sweetheart of the Doomed," and other well known screen successes.

Several stories by well known authors are now being specially written for Miss Glaum, which will bring forth to advantage the charm of acting with a far broader scope of emotional work than were possible in vampirous roles.

With Paralta Plays, Miss Glaum will have her own producing company, an advantage which few stars have except with that corporation. Just who her director will be has not as yet been announced, nor the title of her first Paralta play, but the consummation of the contract with Miss Glaum adds another illustrious star to the Paralta organization which now includes Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Lois Wilson, Henry B. Walthall and J. Warren Kerrigan.

Louise Glaum, star of Paralta plays.

Begin New Holmes Film

Work is begun on "A Pair of Sixes," Taylor Holmes' picture to follow "Ruggles of Red Gap." In this picture the famous comedian plays the role of a pill manufacturer and later a valet in a millionaire's home. "A Pair of Sixes" was written as a stage piece by Edward Peple and is considered his biggest success.

Complete Record of Current Films

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Emphasize Close-Ups in Film Play

"Our Little Wife," the new Goldwyn Picture starring Madge Kennedy, which is to be released in the next few weeks, is described as one of the most "intimate" plays ever shown on the screen. Motion picture directors will tell you that there is no better way of getting the audience acquainted with characters in a play than by presenting the characters close to the camera against backgrounds that show them in high relief. The Goldwyn production of "Our Little Wife" has this characteristic to a marked degree. The figures are as large as the dimensions of the screen will permit; there are many closeups, and the scenes are mostly interiors of the most intimate kind. Indeed, if it had been considered a merit to have a play absolutely without exteriors, the entire action here could have been played without once going outdoors.

Irving Directs for Metro

Metro Pictures Corporation has added to its directing staff George Irving. The first Metro production showing his handiwork will be "Her Boy," a patriotic Star Series production, co-starring Effie Shannon, and Niles Welch with Pauline Curley in a prominent role. "Her Boy," had been adapted by Albert Shelby Le Vino from the original story of H. Carey Wonderly, and presents America's war problem from a new angle, making a direct appeal to the home.

Eugene Ysaye, the celebrated Belgian violinist, and Bernardine Whalen, Triangle violinist, who play for the emotional scenes in Triangle plays.

Works in Weather 40 Below Zero

Although the weather has been extremely cold, the mercury in the thermometer at one time having dropped to 40 degrees below zero, the work of picturizing the outdoor scenes of Harold Lockwood's forthcoming Metro wonder play, "Broadway Bill," is progressing nicely, according to reports received at the Metro offices from Mr. Lockwood's location camp on the Rangeley Lakes in Maine.

"Blue Jeans" Starts Well

Joseph Arthur's great melodrama, "Blue Jeans," which has been produced by Metro as a motion picture, with Viola Dana as the star, under the direction of John H. Collins, is replete with sensation and realism. June Mathis and Charles A. Taylor, who adapted the famous play for the screen, retained all of the thrills and incidents which made this drama such a success on its opening night at the old Fourteenth Street Theater, New York.

Camera Catches Beauty

The one-a-week Essanay scenic reels show some unusual beauty spots as well as interesting agricultural and commercial activities in Canada.

Gentlemen:-

When I ran the first episode of "The Fighting Trail" at the Century Theatre, my receipts were $325.00, which broke all records for serials at my house. When I showed the first episode of "Vengeance—and the Woman", my receipts were $563.00, which was $238.00 more than I took in on the first episode of "The Fighting Trail" and which was $138.00 more than my receipts on a big special production which had a long run on Broadway.

I might say that the record set by this special production, $425.00, was the biggest record of any kind ever made at my theatre up to that time. "Vengeance—and the Woman", with its first episode playing to $563.00, is the record of records.

Very truly yours,

GLYNNE & WARD

The Tower of Babel

Do you remember the story of the Tower of Babel?

Races of all the world came together and started work on a tower that was to reach to the sky. It was to solve the problem of getting to Heaven by the easiest route.

But when the workers got about half of the tower completed, they found that they were building on quicksand; that their plans were not scientifically based; and that they could not even understand each other.

So it is with many schemes, plans and ideas for cornering the business of the motion picture exhibitor.

The exhibitor sees a beautiful and impractical tower of profits raised before his eyes with uncertain services, excess rentals and enormous overhead expenses.

Then the tower collapses and a lot of exhibitors hit the sorry trail of experience—sadder and poorer men.

Triangle is attempting to build no tower of Babel. We don't want a monopoly and we are not trying to make all of our profit in a day.

We have planned the Triangle structure four square to the winds. It is built on the policy of the square deal to the exhibitor. Our first consideration is always the exhibitor. He must make his profit and we must help him. He must show pictures that will bring credit to his theater and add to his patronage. He must be successful.

Any Triangle Exchange Manager is willing to help you, to advise you, soberly and honestly. He is reserved in his representations, helpful in his attitude, instructed to avoid exaggeration or misstatement and to aid you in building up your business.

Build on enduring Triangle principles. Write the Triangle exchange nearest you.

Theaters Hit by Fuel Chief's Order

FORCED TO CLOSE ONE DAY EACH WEEK—EXPOSITION IS CALLED OFF

THE war was brought home to the motion picture industry with emphasis when Fuel Administrator Garfield ordered a general shutdown of industries east of the Mississippi for a period of five days and the enforcement of one fuelless day each week for ten weeks.

Many of the producing organizations in the affected district closed down for the five-day period that began last Friday and remained idle until the following Tuesday. All planned to obey to the letter the order requiring one heatless day a week for the ten-week period.

Theaters escaped the most drastic interpretation of the ruling by obtaining permission to remain open on Mondays and to close on Tuesdays instead. This gave the amusement places an opportunity to profit by the general idleness on Monday and to fill their houses with holiday crowds on that day.

Exposition Plans Abandoned

Another effect of the war upon the industry was felt in the decision to abandon the plans for the New York Exposition which was scheduled to be held in Grand Central Palace in the eastern metropolis from February 2 to 10, inclusive.

The promoters of the show were impelled by purely patriotic motives in ordering the abandonment of plans for the exposition. More than enough space had been rented to assure the success of the show, and many persons who were unable to obtain the space they desired at the New York exposition had agreed to accept space at the Boston show instead.

Telegraph News to Exhibitors

Explaining the calling off of the exposition, Frederick H. Elliott sent the following telegram to all parties who have contracted for space, as well as others interested:

"At meeting motion picture producers and distributors held tonight representatively attended, it was voted as sense of meeting that upon patriotic grounds exposition scheduled for February second-tenth should not be held and that meeting exposition company directors and all parties who have contracted for space should be held eight o'clock Friday evening, eighteenth, eight hundred six Times building, New York, to take final action. Wire if you will attend.

"Frederick H. Elliott, general manager."

Although the report made at the meeting indicated that the exposition would be a financial success, it was the consensus of opinion that aside from patriotic motives the general situation in regard to fuel, food and transportation and the other relatively important matters which have arisen, owing to the war, would make it inadvisable and undesirable to hold the show at this time.

Wanted—All "House Organs"

There are perhaps 1,000 periodicals issued in the United States of which no list can be found in any of the regular newspaper directories. These are the "house organs," issued by business concerns for their employes and customers. The Trade and Technical Press Section of the Food Administration has a list of nearly 800, to which the Weekly Bulletin regularly goes, and is constantly adding others as names and addresses are secured. These "house organs" are among the best mediums for food-saving information to the public, and it is desired to have as complete a list of them as possible. Editors are requested to run an item to this effect in trade journals. Business concerns publishing house organs, not already receiving the Weekly Bulletin, are requested to send in names and addresses to the Trade and Technical Press Section, Food Administration, Washington, D. C.

Spoor Has Another Invention

George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has offered a new war invention to Uncle Sam. This invention, termed a "mechanical ferret" is capable of digging fifty feet of tunneling per hour, according to P. J. Briggen, the inventor, an employe of Mr. Spoor, known as the man who perfected the adaptation of stereoscopic photography to motion pictures. The offer was made to the war department recently through Representative Juul of the Seventh District, Chicago. It is reported that a German offer of $1,000,000 for the invention was thwarted in 1915.

Continue Speedy Production

Two new Triangle subjects have been started within the past week, one picture, "The Shoes That Danced," has been completed, four other companies are in various stages of production on their latest Triangle features, and two directors, Jack Conway and Walter Edwards are waiting for stories. Both expect to have companies at work on new stories within another week.

Triangle Director Cliff Smith lost no time after the completion of "Keith of the Border," in which the cowboy star, Roy Stewart, was featured. He began work immediately on an exceptional western subject, the working title of which is "Faith Endurin'." An unusually strong cast is supporting Stewart in this picture.

"Faith Endurin'" is the work of Kenneth B. Clarks, well known magazine and scenario author, and is declared to be the strongest vehicle for a two-gun hero in which Stewart has ever been cast.

Fritzie Ridgeway, who has just completed a Triangle feature, "Real Folks," in which she was allowed to wear lace and frills, will again be seen as Stewart's leading woman. Others in the cast include W. A. Jeffries, Joe Bennett, Ed Brady, Walter Perkins and a half score of cowboys. The picture is being made at the Triangle ranch studio, Hartville.

After a vacation of several weeks, Jack Dillon, who has directed Olive Thomas in most of her Triangle features is again at work on a five-reel comedy-drama. Working with Dillon are Jack Gilbert, well known juvenile, who is back with Triangle, Myrtle Lind, one of the famous Triangle-Keystone beauties, Myrtle Rishell, a newcomer at Culver City studios, who plays the society matron, Gene Burr, George Pearce, Anna Dodge, Percy Challenger and J. B. Wilde.

The Triangle feature company which, under the direction of Raymond Wells, is working on Frederic Bechdolt's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Hard Rock Breed," has returned from the stone quarries near Colton, Cal., where the location work was done for the picture, and is now working at the Culver City studios on the interiors. Included in the cast of "The Hard Rock Breed" are Margery Wilson, Jack Livingston, J. Barney Sherry, Jack Curtis, Lee Phelps, Curley Baldwin, Aaron Edwards, "Bull" Durham and Marion Skinner.

Director E. Mason Hopper is nearing completion on a big Triangle feature, the working title of which is "The Answer," written by one of the Triangle staff artists. Included in the cast are Alma Ruebens, Claire Anderson, Joe King, Francis McDonald, Jean Hersholt, Wilbur Higbee and Betty Pearce.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton is making rapid strides on his latest picture, "A Soul in Trust," in which Belle Bennett is playing the featured part, supported by J. Barney Sherry, Darrell Foss, Lee Hill, Lillian West, Grover Franke and others.

H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, is back at the helm at the Culver City studios after a business trip to New York, and the feature companies are working overtime in a drive to gain on the exceptional production schedule set by Mr. Davis for 1918.

Issue Complete Press Book

The offices of Paralta Plays have issued a press book of Henry B. Walthall's initial Paralta Play, "His Robe of Honor," which contains many new ideas and promises to be a great step forward in assisting the exhibitors exploiting this production.

The cover is done in three colors similar to the cover used on the press book for "Madam Who." The first page inside contains the complete cast of characters together with the names of the heads of the various departments under whose supervision the production was completed.

The following page is devoted to catch lines to be used for various advertising purposes which takes the place of advertising layouts which have been so widely talked about and so little used. Illustrations of the various billing paper, consist of two three sheets, two one sheets, and one six sheet and a double column, single column and thumb nail cuts to be used for newspaper and program purposes.

In preparing the press copy for the book, it has been compiled in such a manner so that it can be edited by any newspaper by the mere stroke of a pencil. Any paragraph can be eliminated without injuring the continuity of the press notice.

Lists Vitagraph Writers

A striking example of the efforts that some producers are making to provide the best literary material obtainable for the screen is supplied in a list of authors now contributing to the Vitagraph program, a copy of which is given out by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. The list shows more than a score of the most popular fiction writers of this generation represented in Vitagraph pictures now booking, in process of production or in preparation. They are:

Robert W. Chambers.
Hamlin Garland.
George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester.
Alfred Henry Lewis.
O. Henry.
James Oliver Curwood.
Frederick Upham Adams.
George Barr McCutcheon.
Harold McGrath.
Cyrus Townsend Brady.
Edward Peple.
Earle Derr Biggers.
E. Phillips Oppenheim.
Will Harben.
Lowell Otis Reese.
Mary E. Wilkins Freeman.
Mollie Elliott Seawell.
Bayard Voiller.
Florence Morse Kingsley.
Frederick Arnold Hummer.
Edith Ellis.

This formidable list, embracing as it does, a very considerable number of the best known fiction writers, is a splendid argument in favor of better pictures and a strong answer to the carping critics of the photoplay whose pet diversion is assailing the literary merit of screen productions.

Griffith Announces Leading Man

Douglas McLean, formerly with the Morosco Stock Company in Los Angeles, will be leading man for Dorothy Gish in a new war drama now being rehearsed in the D. W. Griffith studios. It will be under the direction of Chet Withey, who was so successful in his former pictures under Mr. Griffith's supervision. Mr. Withey will have for his assistant William Keefe, formerly Mr. Griffith's publicity man. In the cast will be George Fawcett, the character actor.

"Troublemakers" Breaks Records

"Troublemakers," the Fox comedy-drama with Jane and Katherine Lee, Fox "Baby Grands," as stars, established a record for big business for a week's run at Philadelphia's leading picture theater, the Palace, during the week January 7-12. Seven performances every day were given and at five of these the S. R. O. sign was needed. Stanley Mastbaum controls the Palace.

A Romance of the Redwoods, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Fair picture." — George A. Manos, Rex Theater, Toronto, Ohio.

A Romance of the Redwoods, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Up to the usual Pickford standard. Fair business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

BLUEBIRD

God's Crucible, with George Hernandez (Bluebird)—"One of the kind that keeps you interested all the time. Patrons well pleased."—J. Frank Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

The Little Terror, with Violet Mersereau (Bluebird)—"The usual program feature. The star is well liked."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

The Clean-up, with Franklyn Farnum (Bluebird)—"Feature O. K. Business fair."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

The Show-down, with Myrtle Gonzalez (Bluebird)—"Good subject. Fair business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

The Man Trap, with Herbert Rawlinson (Bluebird)—"A fair picture. Patrons do not care for this type of story. Good for a change, however."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Raggedy Queen, with Violet Mersereau (Bluebird)—"Not up to Bluebird standard."—Charles C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

FOX

Cupid's Round-up, with Tom Mix (Fox)—"A very clever story. Tom Mix at his best. A roar from start to finish. Business was poor but we expect great things from Tom if he keeps up this gait. He seems to have everything back of him and needs only an introduction to the public."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

Every Girl's Dream, with June Caprice (Fox)—"This picture stars June Caprice, but the patrons, passing out, commented on the cleverness of the dog."—J. H. Ireland, Globe Theater, Sullivan, Ill.

The Yankee Way, with George Walsh (Fox)—"A fine picture. Business very good."—George A. Manos, Rex Theater, Toronto, Ohio.

Miss U. S. A., with June Caprice (Fox)—"A pleasing production. Excellent play to encourage patriotism. Star delightful."—K. H. Sink, Pastime Theater, Greenville, O.

All for a Husband, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"One of the kind that depends on the finish to put it over. Might be classed as good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Honor System, with All Star cast (Fox)—"A much better picture than you would expect from the title. It is entertaining, thrilling and instructive. In all a picture worth while." — Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Miss U. S. A., with June Caprice (Fox)—"A good, timely picture. A melodramatic start leads up to a picture with a punch. Acting weak in spots."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

GENERAL

General Film Program—"I have run General pictures exclusively for five years and have had but one losing week. Can you beat that?"—J. A. Keene, Bijou Theater, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Understudy, with Ethel Richie (Falcon)—"A much better picture than we expected to find. The story is good and would have been better under better direction. This is the home of the author, Leigh Gordon Giltner; so, of course, it pulled well for us."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Judge Brown stories (General)—"These two-reelers are very interesting. Don't miss booking them."—T. C. Lacey, Vaudelle Theater, Muncie, Ind.

George Ade Fables (Essanay-General)—"Two-reel comedies that are comedies. High-class stuff."—T. C. Lacey, Vaudelle Theater, Muncie, Ind.

Falcon Features (General)—"These are very good four-reel pictures. I have run them all."—T. C. Lacey, Vaudelle Theate, Muncie, Ind.

GOLDWYN

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"A well produced picture but somehow it did not register with my patrons."—J. H. Ireland, Globe Theater, Sullivan, Ill.

Fighting Odds, with Maxine Elliott (Goldwyn)—"Nothing out of the ordinary. The star is not very well known here.—J. H. Ireland, Globe Theater, Sullivan, Ill.

JEWEL

Sirens of the Sea, with Louise Lovely (Jewel)—"One of the best. Business good."—Charles C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

KLEINE-PERFECTION

Skinner's Baby, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—"A fair comedy drama. Pleased some. Nice business for two days."—C. F. Hansen, New Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Filling His Own Shoes, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—"The people like Washburn and these light dramas. No complaints on this service."—B. C. Brown, Star Theater, Viroqua, Wis.

Adventures of Buffalo Bill, with Col. Cody (Essanay)—"Film in poor condition. Crowd disappointed.

Not worth the price paid."—M. B. Tracy, Grand Theater, Pollock, S. D.

Skinner's Bubble, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—"Pleased a fair crowd. Film not in good condition."—W. W. Ferguson, Bijou Theater, Crookston, Minn.

METRO

The Slacker, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—"Capacity business. A very good picture of the kind everybody should see."—George A. Manos, Rex Theater, Toronto, Ohio.

Their Compact, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"Fair picture. Business fair."—Charles C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

More Truth Than Poetry, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—"A picture that depends on the ending to put it over. The best Petrova has done for some time."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"A pleasing, entertaining picture except for Bushman. The director made several blundering mistakes which real fans will notice."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Paradise Garden, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"A good picture. Well cast. Nice settings. Story good, although too long."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Mr. 44, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"The scenery is the outstanding feature of this picture but the star is good and so is the story. My patrons all seemed to like it and we had a good house. If you book it, boost the scenery."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

At a Premium, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew (Metro)—"This comedy is sure to win a laugh. I've heard of poker being played for almost everything else except trading stamps and bread labels."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Draft 258, with Mabel Taliaferro (Metro)—"Although business was less than with The Slacker, on account of the weather, it pleases about as well. Went over extra well."—B. C. Brown, Star Theater, Viroqua, Wis.

The Silence Sellers, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—"Star has no drawing power here. Picture very ordinary. Business poor."—Thompson-MacPhail Co., North Side Theater, Bryan, Ohio.

MUTUAL

Please Help Emily, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—"A good picture. Business fair."—George A. Manos, Rex Theater, Toronto, Ohio.

The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up, with Margarita Fischer (Mutual)—"Film in good condition. Picture very good. Business 75 per cent above the average at advanced prices. This is a program picture at a program price and if handled properly is equal to any high priced star production on the market."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Imposter, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—"The picture was severely criticized by many of my patrons, although we did exceedingly good business with it. It is not up to Mutual standard nor as good as Miss Murdock can do."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

Environment, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A dandy picture. Star at her best, and she is some star."—Thompson-MacPhail Co., North Side Theater, Bryan, Ohio.

Environment, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A very good picture. Pleased a big audience."—W. W. Ferguson, Bijou Theater, Crookston, Minn.

The Girl Angel, with Anita King (Horkheimer-Mutual)—"A great picture. Pleased a capacity audience. Book this one and advertise it strong."—W. W. Ferguson, Bijou Theater, Crookston, Minn.

Miss Jacky of the Navy, with Margarita Fischer (American-Mutual)—"An excellent comedy drama. Two days to packed houses."—W. W. Ferguson, Bijou Theater, Crookston, Minn.

Outcast, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—"Very satisfactory, but somehow we can't get results on Mutual pictures."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

PARAMOUNT

The Eternal Temptress, with Lina Cavalieri (Paramount)—"The only fault my patrons found with this picture was the way it ended."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Secret Game, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"Excellent box-office value and gives satisfaction as all this star's productions do."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Jules of the Strong Heart, with George Beban (Paramount)—"Beban's best. It is great. Beban is a master of character roles."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Fair picture. We have had others with this star which were better. Fair business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"An excellent production. Star and play pleased all. Good business."—K. H. Sink, Pastime Theater, Greenville, O.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A Clark picture which cannot help but please. Lays a solid foundation for the other Bab pictures."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Virginian, with Dustin Farnum (Paramount)—"Very good. Very large crowd. Dustin is surely some actor."—M. B. Tracy, Grand Theater, Pollock, S. Dak.

The Virginian, with Dustin Farnum (Paramount)—"A great picture. Went over big against muddy roads in a small town. If you haven't used Paramount pictures try The Virginian, Tennessee's Partner or Burning Daylight."—J. F. Hickenbottam, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A very good picture. It is better than the star's first Paramount picture."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A picture that pleased. Well done by director and cast."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Varmint, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A very good one. Takes you back to school days. Well produced. One of the best we have had."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Varmint, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A good college picture. Big business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Dawn of a Tomorrow, with Blanche Sweet (Paramount)—"Business fair. A good picture but with too much padding. Could be cut down."—W. E. Sandell, Family Theater, Kingsburg, Cal.

The Dawn of a Tomorrow, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"A dandy picture. A different title for this picture would be more suitable. Acting very good."—W. E. Sandell, Family Theater, Kingsburg, Cal.

The Hostage, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"A fair picture. Bad weather hurt business."—Thompson-MacPhail Co., North Side Theater, Bryan, Ohio.

Lost in Transit, with George Beban (Paramount)—"Have had far better plays with this star but this brought big business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Double Crossed, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"Very poor subject for a brilliant star like Miss Frederick. Business fair."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Exile, with Mme. Petrova (Paramount)—"Very good. Big business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Sunset Trail, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Very good subject. Big business. Star is a good drawing card."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Crystal Gazer, with Fannie Ward (Paramount)—"Just ordinary for a Paramount picture. Star good. Business poor in bad weather."—K. H. Sink, Pastime Theater, Greenville, O.

The Law of the Land (Paramount)—"A good picture. Star better than usual. Good business."—K. H. Sink, Pastime Theater, Greenville, O.

Snow White, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"The most elaborate picture Miss Clark made on the old program. A big crowd at increased prices. Seven reels."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Judgment House (Paramount)—"This is a fine picture. It pleased my audience well."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Hungry Heart, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"This picture is not up to the Paramount standard. Very slow in getting started on the story."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Hulda from Holland, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"A very good picture. It more than pleased my patrons. Title very good. Book this one."—W. E. Sandell, Family Theater, Kingsbury, Cal.

Silks and Satins, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"An A-1 photoplay. Miss Clark is a very good drawing card."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Nanette of the Wilds, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"Big business. Miss Frederick is a big drawing card."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Amazons, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Fair picture. Not up to the usual Clark pictures. Fair business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Mysterious Miss Terry, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"Picture fairly good. Weather too cold for good business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Hashimuro Togo, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"Star a big drawing card."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Peer Gynt, with Cyril Maude (Paramount)—"These older plays, if well selected, can be safely and profitably booked. This one drew well and pleased."—B. C. Brown, Star Theater, Viroqua, Wis.

Little Miss Optimist, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Star is a good drawing card for me. Business very good."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

A Million Dollar Husband, with Blanche Sweet (Paramount)—"Poor business. Acting not very good."—W. E. Sandell, Family Theater, Kingsbury, Cal.

Cinderella, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—

"Very good but did not draw a very good crowd."—M. B. Tracy, Grand Theater, Pollock, S. Dak.

A Crooked Romance, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"Fair picture. Fair business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Torture of Silence, with Emmy Lynn (Pathe)—"A mediocre foreign picture."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

SELECT

The Easiest Way, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"One of this star's best. A truly fine production. Excellent business."—C. F. Hansen. New Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Shirley Kaye, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"A nice, clean story and well done, but bad weather hurt business on it."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

TRIANGLE

One Shot Ross, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"Not much to it. Over-drawn. Too much on the order of the old Bison 101 type of years ago. I can't see Stewart as a western man."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Wild Sumac, with Marjorie Wilson (Triangle)—"A good picture. Has a good fight, different from the usual movie kind."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Sweetheart of the Doomed, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A splendid picture. Star excellent. Good story and action."—C. F. Hansen, New Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Hell's Hinges, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"Splendid and as our box-office receipts were nearly double on the first picture, we believe this star is going to be one of our best drawing cards."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Seeking Happiness, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Story and star delightful. Everybody liked it. Business good for such extremely cold weather."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This picture ought to take well anywhere. The film was in poor condition, though."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Keystone Comedies (Triangle)—"I tried two or three all comedy nights with Keystones but found it did not pay. The comedies were poor and people wanted features instead. Keystones will do for fillers but not for features."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

His Bitter Pill, with Mack Swain (Triangle-Keystone)—"A good, clean western comedy that keeps the audience laughing all the time."—Charles Dale, Topic Theater, Fairfax, Minn.

Going Straight, with Norma Talmadge (Triangle)—"This is a good feature and the star takes well. Good business."—Charles Dale, Topic Theater, Fairfax, Minn.

Cassidy, with Dick Rosson (Triangle)—"A good picture. I would criticise the too long scenes which make Rosson over-act."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Patriot, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"If you have never used this, do so. If you have used it, no doubt you will repeat it."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Phantom Husband, with Ruth Stonehouse (Triangle)—"A picture that will entertain and please. Story is a little different and with pleasing settings and detail."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A very good western picture. Good business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Master of His Home, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"Business good. Feature up to Triangle standard."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Wooden Shoes, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"Wonderful subject. Business good."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

They're Off, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"A feature worth repeating. Big business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

They're Off, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"The best Triangle for three weeks. A good crowd as the star is well liked here. Picture has an excellent steeple chase. Southern setting."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Payment, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"Very good. Played to capacity house. Received compliments on it. Film in good condition."—Charles Dale, Topic Theater, Fairfax, Minn.

The Grafters, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"Only fair. Business good."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

The Firefly of Tough Luck, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"My audience was well pleased with this. The star and supporting cast excellent."—J. H. Ireland, Globe Theater, Sullivan, Ill.

Wee Lady Betty, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"Feature O. K. Business fair."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philahelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Wee Lady Betty, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"An average comedy-drama that pleased a good crowd on Saturday. The Irish setting appealed to many."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Double Trouble, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This film had been run very hard and was in poor condition. The picture is a self-advertiser and a fine tonic for poor business. Business well up to the average in very bad weather."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

In Slumberland, with Thelma Salter (Triangle)—"A fair picture. Business only fair."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Sudden Jim, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"Very good. Big business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Borrowed Plumage, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"Very good. Business good."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

Madame Bo-peep, with Seena Owen (Triangle)—"A very unusual photoplay. Good business."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.—Neighborhood house.

The Food Gamblers, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—"Picture tip-top. Business fairly good."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

An Even Break, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"Good business. Miss Thomas is well liked by my patrons."—Maurice Haas, Pelham Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Woman's Awakening, with Seena Owen (Triangle)—"We run Triangles on Saturday nights as they average good. This one gave good satisfaction."—B. C. Brown, Star Theater, Viroqua, Wis.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Return engagement doubled receipts over the first time here and at high prices."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Grafters, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"A very poor picture, weak story, no settings, acting or anything else."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Idolators, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A fair vampire picture. Good settings. Did not please nearly as well as Golden Rule Kate."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Better than Double Trouble, which started these reissues off wrong. Titles are in bad condition."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Disciple, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"This proved a good drawing card as Hart is popular here. He plays the part of a preacher, which is a novel role for him."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

VITAGRAPH

Apartment 29, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"A real picture. Pleased our patrons very much."—J. Frank Stanley, Star Theater, Newton, Ill.

Big V Comedies (Vitagraph)—"One reel slapstick comedies that do for a change although about every other one is poor."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Fall of a Nation (Vitagraph)—"Very good. Crowded house."—M. B. Tracy, Grand Theater, Pollock, S. D.

The Bottom of the Well, with Evart Overton (Vitagraph)—"Very good. Business fair."—Charles C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Within the Law, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"An extra good picture. Business good."—Charles C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

The Fall of a Nation (Vitagraph)—"Not up to standard with such pictures as Womanhood (Vitagraph) and The Slacker (Metro). Good business two days."—C. F. Hansen, New Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Those Whom the Gods Destroy, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"A good production but film in poor condition. Drew fair business."—Thompson-MacPhail Co., North Side Theater, Bryan, O.

WORLD

The Woman Beneath, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"Film in extra good condition. Picture one of the best ever shown on my screen. Business well up to the average. World Pictures are like a circus—nearly all alike, and a circus is always well attended."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds, with Carlyle Blackwell—"A very good picture. Pink permit."—H. C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

SERIALS AND SERIES

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"An excellent serial with outdoor scenery and plenty of action. We have run six episodes and it is holding up well. The best serial in the last two years. If you want a different serial, book this."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Bobby Connelly Series (Vitagraph) — "Excellent one-reel subjects with a child star supported by grown-ups. While not strictly comedies, nevertheless they contain some fine touches of good, clean comedy."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Signal-Mutual)—"A good all around serial. Business improving with each episode. I am running this serial on an even date against the best advertised serial on the market and holding my own and then some."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—Chapter one. This episode has the touch of mystery and the punch that make a good serial. Business only fair, as I played it the same date as the big blizzard of January 11."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

A Daughter of Uncle Sam, with Jane Vance (General)—"The most wonderful serial we have ever seen. Great drawing card."—T. C. Lacey, Vaudelle Theater, Muncie, Ind.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

Mutt and Jeff Cartoons (Fischer)—"I have found these short subjects please better than the so-called comedies. Some are of course ordinary but most are very good."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Mother, with Elizabeth Risdon (George Loane Tucker)—"There is everything good to be said of this picture. It is simply great, a picture that will live."—H. C. Miller, Rose Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Clara Kimball Young Buys Taxicab

Pedestrians along upper Broadway, New York City, were treated to a unique sight one day this week when Clara Kimball Young with her director, Emile Chautard, and members of her company, worked on a couple of difficult scenes for the film version of "The House of Glass," Max Marcin's famous play which the star is now screening for Select Pictures.

The action of the play called for a couple of bits taken inside a taxicab. While these are incidential, they bear largely on the subsequent trend of the plot, and it was necessary that the proper lighting be obtained. Director Chautard who is satisfied with nothing less than the best, was hard to please, and after several futile attempts to gain the effects he desired in a rented taxi, called a halt and entered into negotiations for its purchase.

With the sale consummated, he proceeded to rip the machine to pieces. Under his direction half of the top was cut away and the taxi mounted on a truck. Miss Young and Pell Trenton who plays the role of Burke, were installed in the cab, and the truck with camera men and Director Chautard proceeded out into Broadway for the local color of a street scene. The new arrangement worked perfectly and the scenes were shot with no further delay.

Pictures Lighten Prison Gloom

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of the Select Pictures Corporation, received this week from Folsom Prison in California a unique tribute to the general excellence of Select productions.

The tribute came in the form of a large white card upon which, beautifully lettered and illumined, was an appreciation from the men of Folsom. It was forwarded through Harry H. Hicks, Select's San Francisco Manager. The card, mounted on a brilliant red folder and tied with green ribbon, presents a Christmas-y appearance in thorough accord with the good wishes expressed, and the signatures of several hundred prisoners have been written in around the margin. The text thanks Select for the pleasure given to the inmates of the prison by the showing of pictures there.

Work on "Over the Top" Progresses

Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, the famous little fighting American who is now engaged at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn playing the hero role of "Over the Top," the super-feature based on his celebrated war book, is to be surrounded by one of the strongest Vitagraph casts. The cast is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, this week, and includes Lois Meredith, who will be featured opposite Empey; Arthur Donaldson, "Mother" Mary Maurice, Julia Swayne Gordon and others.

"Over the Top" is being designed by Vitagraph as one of the greatest photodramas ever produced. The scenario having been based on the book that has been read by millions, there is a wealth of intense drama in the story and this will be made the most of in the forthcoming production. Albert E. Smith and Wilfred North, production manager for Vitagraph, are in personal charge of the production, with Empey also assisting in the staging and production of scenes.

Adds to Scenario Staff

Several well-known stories are being picturized and three new men have been added at the scenario department at the Triangle Culver City studios,

The new faces include Charles Mortimer Peck, well-known scenario editor and special writer, who is picturizing Norman Sherbrook's magazine story, "Smoke" Frank Condon, Saturday Evening Post writer and continuity expert, who is picturizing "The Veil" also by Norman Sherbrook, and Charles Wilson, who is making the screen adaptation of W. Carey Wonderley's magazine story, "Another Foolish Virgin."

Goes In for Drama

Myrtle Lind, one of the bevy of Triangle-Keystone beauties who has been helping funny men to make the world laugh, has deserted the comedies for drama and is now working with Director Jack Dillon on his latest Triangle subject, "Betty comes Home" which has just been started. This is a five-reel comedy feature showing the trouble a school girl, neglected by her family, gets into through the aid of the family chauffeur.

Go South for Atmosphere

A company of Vitagraphers, headed by Harry Morey and Florence Deshon, who are to be featured in "The Desired Woman," left Monday for "Somewhere in Georgia," where they will be engaged for a week or more in making scenes for the forthcoming Blue Ribbon production. Paul Scardon is directing the picture.

Theda Bara Writes Her Own Play

Miss Theda Bara is now at work in filming a new vampire story which was written by herself. This is the first attempt the William Fox star has made at writing a scenario.

That Heatless Day

IN principle the action of the fuel administration in permitting theaters to open Monday, when everything else is closed, and to substitute Tuesday for the usual fuel-saving day, is a triumph for entertainment. It is an admission of the human necessity for wholesome amusement—of the importance of inspiring occupation during idle hours.

In practice the idea did not work out a hundred per cent perfect. A few exhibitors are wondering if they made a mistake in requesting the privilege. Chicago's downtown theaters did a poor business last Monday, because comparatively few people came down town at all.

That, however, is purely a big city condition—and a condition peculiar to the business center of big cities, at that. The neighborhood houses running matinees did good business. All the small town theaters, where people could "go downtown" in a few minutes' walk, did good business. The wisdom of the order substituting Tuesday closing for Monday has already proved itself. For the few exhibitors who suffer by it there will be thousands who profit by it. There is only one plan that would be better, and that would be to let each exhibitor decide his own heatless day; or to determine the day of closing by the character of the patronage.

The fact that heatless Monday is a day on which workers stay near home determines the value of the holiday to the theaters. In other words, business depends upon whether the patron goes to the theater from his work or from his home. If he goes from his work—as in the case of downtown theaters—theater business suffers when there is no work. If he goes from his home—as in the case of all neighborhood and small town theaters—business is better on holidays. The dividing line is obvious, but whether the fuel administration would recognize it is a question.

The closing of primary schools for a period of at least two weeks has given all exhibitors, and neighborhood exhibitors especially, an unusual opportunity for profitable matinee performances with picked programs. This would seem an almost too obvious condition to mention if it were not for the fact that a great many exhibitors have failed to take advantage of it for some unknown reason.

These are cold days, and there is a tendency to keep the children about the home fireside evenings. The matinee is the only way to get their trade, and of course the exhibitor who fails to run matinees loses out.

These are fleeting opportunities, because the fuel shortage cannot last much longer. If they were merely opportunities to increase the month's profits, there would be little argument against the exhibitors who chose to ignore them. But as a matter of fact, they are opportunities to make up a threatening deficit—a much more serious condition.

Exhibitors in general are not so prosperous that they can afford to sacrifice ten or twelve per cent of their gross business without an effort to compensate for it. The children's matinee has offered the chance, and may again.

Waste in the Exchanges

JUST as one small example of waste, carelessness and inefficiency in exchange practice, a Nebraska exhibitor calls our attention to the work of the mailing departments. Or perhaps the existing condition could be better expressed as due to the absence of any such department from the usual exchange organization. The Nebraska man says:

"There is hardly a day but what an exhibitor will receive from two to three separately mailed envelopes from one exchange which could just as well have been mailed in one envelope for one postage cost. This would save the exchanges a great many dollars in a year's time. For instance, suppose they saved three envelopes and three cents postage each day on each customer; that would save them the price of one day's rental on a feature in a year—$14.60. Or if they served a hundred customers they would save in the neighborhood of $4.00 a day, or $1,460.00 a year.

"A properly supervised sub-department for handling such mail could also handle the shipping of parcel post packages of advertising matter to exhibitors. There is not an exhibitor who would not be willing to have the parcel postage added to his account if he was saved half of the transportation cost of the package received. If each exhibitor would take the matter up with his exchanges he would soon save himself several dollars a year."

This is a small matter; but so are all of the opportunities for saving. No industry today, even if carelessly operated, can find it possible to lop off large expenses without hurting business. It is the detection and elimination of the many little wastes, making a considerable total, that reveals good business management.

The exhibitor must realize that it is he who pays for all exchange extravagances, as indeed he pays the whole overhead cost of the present distribution system. As a middleman, the exchange itself represents a nonproducing and therefore wasteful element in the film merchandising scheme. Any clearing house is theoretically, at least, parasitic, because it adds nothing to the quality or quantity of the goods it handles. But it is necessary in some form as a labor saving device. The film exchange's function is to save confusion in the routing of films from the manufacturer to the retailer.

The old plan of independent exchanges which bought from any manufacturer and rented to any exhibitor, taking their profit out of the transaction, had some advantages over the producer-controlled exchange system. Since a clearing house of some sort seems necessary to the smooth distribution of films, it would appear that either a co-operative exchange controlled by substantially all the producers, or a strong independent exchange permitted to buy from all the producers, would show great economy.

Report Your Tax Troubles

THE secretary of the Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee quotes a small exhibitor as saying to him, "I wish I had the money I gave the government last month and let them take the profits. I gave the government $170 and didn't make a living for myself out of the business. I am running the best pictures with the biggest stars and best music, advertising and looking after my show as I never did in my ten years of experience, and I am making the least money."

This outburst, which may be taken as revealing a general condition, illustrates two points. The first is that the ticket tax is unjust, since Congress certainly never intended to confiscate all the profits. The second is that part of the blame, at least, attaches directly to the exhibitor himself. This particular one did not send in his report to the committee, because he "thought nobody paid any attention to him."

It is the purpose of the committee to pay attention to him—that is what it is for. It is surprisingly difficult to make these men realize that EVERY exhibitor means THEM.

The committee wants reports from fifteen thousand theaters—all there are. Its success in appealing to Congress for amendment of the tax law rests with you, Exhibitor with the small house and the struggling business—YOU! Take your choice—write to the committee at 407 Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis, or pocket your tax losses and say nothing.

Urges Theaters Be Kept Open

PREACHER SAYS CLOSING OF AMUSEMENT HOUSES IS GRAVE MISTAKE

BY REV. R. A. WHITE

THE public generally will hope that there is no official intention to close the theaters for any number of days a week. The plan may be well intentioned. It is also very unwise.

People with a Missouri turn of mind are impertinent enough to ask: "Is it necessary?" We are merely silenced by the clamorous cry of a general coal shortage. The average citizen is not convinced. The average citizen may be dead wrong. His general ignorance about such things may account for his suspicions.

The real long range problem seems to be an increased production and distribution of coal. To cripple industry by shutting down industrial plants, interfering with normal industrial conditions, with consequent soaring prices and hundreds of thousands of people thrown out of work should be the last desperate resort.

People must not freeze, of course. Certain lines of business must go on if we are to live. But let our coal administration be quite sure that it is not taking the temporarily easiest way in order to avoid the hard and heroic way of rectifying conditions.

Not a Coal Saving Method

Closing the theaters is not one of the best ways of conserving coal. Superficially considered it seems quite justifiable. Amusement seems one of the things that we can get along without. How absurd, therefore, to claim exemption for theaters! Close them up, to be sure. How very simple it seems.

It is not nearly so simple as it seems. One may not be interested particularly in theater managers and owners as a class. They have no more rights than others. The buskined class have no more right to steady employment than the the toilers in the factories. Whether much coal would be saved by closing the theaters I do not know.

The question of depriving the public of amusements at this particular time is a psychologic question rather than an economic one. Some theaters might well be closed three days in the week, and all days in the week and for all time. But the places of clean and legitimate amusement are a very valuable asset to the country just now.

Keep Up National Morale

Amusement in the present world madness is one of the means of keeping up the national morale. Courage just now is worth more to the nation than coal. Amusement keeps up our courage. It temporarily diverts our mind from the strain of the world tragedy.

Too much seriousness over the world catastrophe plunges the nation into an unnecessary gloom. Serious we must be. Serious we will be. But there must also be cheerfulness. Amusement helps us to keep cheerful. It will save us from the malady of overmuch thought.

Sunshine saves us from the depression of long continued gray days. Amusement is the passing sunshine that rescues us from overdepression. A depressed nation cannot be a whole-hearted fighting nation.

Worry Destroys Efficiency

Recall that long siege of uncertain business ventures. The brain reeled with fatigue. The heavy hand of worry crushed efficiency. Then in some moment of sanity you dropped the whole nerve, mind-wrecking business for an hour or two. Sought the diversion of a theater. Laughed over silly jokes and found rest for your tired mind. Forgot the real world for a time in an imaginary world.

Then back to the real world and its desperate tasks refreshed. Plenty of people who think they need a sanitarium really need a dose of good clean vaudeville, or a simple sweet play brimming over with cheerfulness and hope. A bit of catchy music, the persuasion of an oratorio, the beauty of a popular opera is much better than much medicine.

One Means of Relief

I am not advocating the theater as the only means of release from depression. I am merely insisting that it is one way of release and a very legitimate one. Different people escape gloom and depression in different ways.

A dose of Shakespeare or Browning I strongly recommend for a bad case of nerves. Marcus Aurelius is rather good for minds of a certain type. I have known people who were refreshed by reading the New Testament in Greek.

The Bible is rather a refreshing book to those who have one. It is rather a forgotten volume. The majority of Americans would find the novelty of it worth while.

Nation Needs Theaters Now

But keep the theaters open anyway. The nation needs them just now. If we must save coal close up the saloons for awhile the nation over. Better to hear and see our exhilarations than to drink them. The stimulations of the theaters are more valuable than the stimulations of the breweries.

Why not close up the breweries? If we must shut down industries there are many we could make a shift to get along without and save ourselves from indigestion.

Let the clean theaters go on dispensing a little laughter and a kindly presentation of human experiences. Keep up the unreal world of the stage as a place of refuge from a too real world of war and the strain and agony of it. The psychologic value of laughter and music is well understood by those whose business it is to make war.

When Napoleon's troops were snowbound in the Alps, and the cold and terrors of grim nature laid its paralyzing hand upon them, he refreshed their tired souls and bodies with great national music. The long line that faltered at the word of command rose to the charm of music and beat its way through the snows into Italy.

Government Building Theaters

There is a movement on foot in our nation just now for the government to build theaters in the various cantonments and a fund of a million dollars is to be raised to furnish our soldier boys with proper entertainment. This is not a maudlin sentiment, but a contribution to the deep psychologic necessities of war time.

Across the sea systematic efforts are made to furnish the soldiers amusement. It is the wisdom of men who know the human mind and soul and their deep down needs.

You, father and mother, soul-sick as you think of the boy who may never return, go to the theater now and them and forget. Your sorrow will not be desecrated, but relieved for a moment at least. You men and women moving with downcast look, oppressed to the verge of madness by this world catastrophe which has overtaken us, go to some good play or a soul-stirring opera and find refreshment in temporary forgetfulness.

Help Dispel National Gloom

Among the many duties we have is the duty of keeping cheerful. There is no virtue in soul-depression. Gloom destroys efficiency. Cheerfulness increases our ability to dare and do. As men must sleep that they may fight well on the morrow, so must they also laugh and forget that they may serve whole-heartedly.

I hold no brief for the theaters. They are rather out of my line. But I know the psychologic value of them for the gray days and the dark days of our nation. To close them would be a psychologic mistake of deep significance. Maintain them for the good of our souls and the cheerfulness that makes us efficient. Their value to the nation just now is worth more than the saving of a little coal.

Praise "Cheating the Public"

Metropolitan critics highly praised the William Fox 1918 cinemelodramic message, "Cheating the Public," which had its premiere January 13 at the Lyric Theater, New York City. The production was hailed as another notable triumph for the producer. Food profiteering and child labor are themes in the new production.

Following are excerpts from some of the New York newspapers:

"A timely photoplay, dealing with the workings of the food profiteer and vividly depicting the misery he causes by his dollar lust. Carries a powerful message to the American people."—Evening Telegram.

"Another notable triumph for William Fox, its producer. The authors have gone straight to the life of the minute for their material."—New York American.

"Intensely interesting. The story tells of the unusual conditions in a factory town where the oppressor lowers wages and raises food prices until finally the people refuse to work."—New York Tribune.

"Photography and direction are excellent. Enid Markey as Mary presents emotional acting certainly equalled by few on the screen."—Evening Sun.

"A serious message. The faces of the poor are ground by the food barons through seven reels of labor melodrama, which ends in a triumph for the people."—New York Morning Telegraph.

Russian Story for Alice Brady

Alice Brady, whose latest Select production, "The Knife," has been based on the play of the same name by Eugene Walter, is to go far afield in her next Select Picture. "The Knife," as will be recalled by those who saw Mr. Walter's sensationally successful drama presented at the Bijou Theater in New York last season, is an American play—American in theme, treatment and characterization. It is in fact a play in which one element of national American character re-acts upon another. The denouement of the plot depends upon the effect which negro superstition ingrained through several generations has wrought in the mind of a southern girl, thus making her an easy prey to conscienceless charlatans who pose as psychics in New York City. From this purely American story to the next Alice Brady—Select production is a long step indeed. For in her fourth Select Picture Miss Brady will return to a field which she has formerly occupied most successfully, that of Russian romance.

Scenes abounding in heavy snows and hard frozen stretches of country will be embodied in the new Alice Brady pictures, which will again be under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, who likewise directed "The Knife." "Ruthless Russia" is being considered as a title for the new production.

"A Mother's Sin," New Blue Ribbon

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces "A Mother's Sin" as the Blue Ribbon Feature to be released during the week of January 28, with Earle Williams in the star role. The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills and there appear in support of Mr. Williams a number of well known players, among them Ernest Maupain, the famous French actor and former leading man for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt. Mr. Maupain has been a prominent figure in motion pictures for some time, having appeared on the Essanay and Pathe programs. In addition to Mr. Maupin, there are in the cast Miriam Miles, who has been seen opposite Mr. Williams in many of his latest releases, Denton Vana, Louise Du Pre, Eleanor Lawson, Fred Peters and Charles Horton.

Shows Influence of Pictures

The chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, Cranston Brenton, spoke at an open Forum at Somerville, Mass., on Sunday afternoon, January 13, on the subject "The Social Influence of the Motion Picture."

Mr. Brenton traced the rapid development of the motion picture from its first exhibition as a scientific toy to its present phenomenal position as a great new art. He showed the far reaching effect of moving pictures in the crowded city, the smaller towns and the rural community, as well as in the life of the individual.

Chief Flynn Story Moves Forward

Leopold Wharton returned to New York from the Wharton studios at Ithaca last Thursday morning, where he had spent a week in connection with the production of this firm's serial photodrama, "The Eagle's Eye," founded on Chief Flynn's story exposing the Imperial German government's spy system in this country. Mr. Wharton expressed himself as very much pleased over the progress made in filming the production.

Irwin Denies Merger Report

There will be no amalgamation or consolidation of the Vitagraph Company's Canadian exchanges with any other exchanges whatsoever. This authorized statement comes from the office of Walter W. Irwin, General Manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, and is in response to rumors that have been current for some time past.

New Play for Kerrigan

J. Warren Kerrigan, whose first Paralta Play, "A Man's Man" received the unstinted praise of all who have seen it, will be seen in the near future in his second Paralta Play, "The Turn of a Card," from the pen of Frederick Chapin, which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation the first of February. The story has been adapted for the screen by Thomas J. Goraghty.

Motion Picture During Times of War

EXHIBITOR'S IMPORTANCE IN PRESENT CRISIS BROUGHT OUT BY ZUKOR

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in an interview last week brought out not only the advisability but the absolute necessity of increased endeavors on the part of the exhibitor to cheer the nation. In this connection Mr. Zukor said:

"A golden opportunity lies before the motion picture theater exhibitor of today, which should be grasped at the psychological time.

"It has taken some time for the American public to realize that we are engaged in a mighty war, for the United States has fortunately occupied a position of great prosperity. With hundreds of thousands of our boys going to the front, however we are beginning to experience the feelings that our allies encountered when their men rallied to the colors, and we should be guided by the events that took place in those countries.

War News Fills Paper

"Our everyday life is being filled with little inconveniences, due to the enormous help this country is giving the allies, and the newspapers teem with war news. Now is the time for the exhibitor to make his house the court of happiness and gladness for his locality, where his patrons will gather to relax the tension of the times, which fact he should bring out in his advertisements in newspapers, and in slides, etc. In so doing he will not only benefit himself but will be performing a patriotic service for his community.

"In times of peace the maxim of 'all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy' was well recognized, and the film industry was brought to its present proportions because the American public thoroughly believed in it. In times of war, with the added mental burdens, the motion picture theater is more than ever a public necessity.

Make Fans of Millions

"Don't let your patrons mope in their homes, but bring to them the attractiveness of your theater by systematic advertising. There is no doubt that millions of people who have not yet been converted to picture patrons can be made regular 'fans' at this time, if they can be induced to appreciate the real benefits derived from attending your theater.

"Transportation facilities are such that the motion picture must fill the gap in the country's amusements caused by the inability of travelling companies to secure accommodations. Every available car is being utilized to transport food and essentials, and passenger trains have been eliminated from the schedules. Prices of admission for the speaking stage have gone skyward, and now, more than ever, is the picture theater the cheapest as well as the best form of entertainment.

Country Is Prosperous

"The entire country is in a prosperous condition, and with the billions of dollars being spent by the government this condition is enhanced. Of course we must not blind ourselves to the fact that the cost of the commodities of life have gone up, and that the government has waged a campaign of conservation which has educated the public to demand value for its money, but this really benefits the better theater and enables the manager to get higher admission prices. In speaking with our London representative, Mr. J. C. Graham, I find that the same thing occured in England, where the first class picture houses, after four years of war, are prosperous and those showing cheap films have suffered.

Help Maintain Morale

"Great war authorities have declared that the morale of the nations will play an important part in the quick conclusion of the conflict, and the motion picture theater can play an important part in maintaining the high spirits of the American nation. The exhibitor is now the purveyor of an article—amusement—which the public not only wants but needs.

Advertising Now Essential

"President Wilson himself must have anticipated the part the motion picture would take in the war, for he declared, after a eulogy of the film, that he proposed to use the picture houses as the quickest means of disseminating information to all the people.

"Advertising is now essential to the exhibitor, for he should drive home the fact that his is the playhouse of comfort, amusement and entertainment, in which are presented the famous stars of the stage and screen. His advertisement must be honest, however, and in many instances it will open the eyes of the exhibitor when he starts his advertising campaign to discover that he has nothing worth-while to advertise if he is not showing the stars and the plays that the public demands.

"Many theaters will take advantage of the conditions which have arisen, and which will become more intense in the near future, and will capture increased patronage and prosperity by broadsides of publicity. Others will not, and they will have no one to blame but themselves and their lack of enterprise and appreciation of the important part they play in the general morale of the nation.

"It should not be forgotten that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has demonstrated its faith in the present condition and the anticipation of the future by spending a million dollars in a great national campaign of education to acquaint the public with the photoplays it produces, and it is backing up this publicity with the best pictures that brains and money can produce. The exhibitor, therefore, should surely not ignore the warning I am giving him, but I sincerely hope he will believe the good faith that inspires it. The prosperity of the picture theater is necessarily our prosperity, and we are desirous of building upon solid ground.

"The year 1918 should be a memorable one in the industry, for it will mark the culmination of important events that had their birth in 1917. Within a few months spring will arrive, and with it the great offensives on the battle fronts of Europe. The tension of the war will be at its maximum, and the exhibitor has sufficient time, by beginning now, to decide the part his house will play in his locality. And when the war is over, and the country again filled with gladness, it will be a difficult matter to wean patrons from the theaters that established a clientele during the dark hours when entertainment was not merely a pleasure but a necessity."

Minter Is Popular in South America

Max Glucksmann, who has a string of theaters in Argentine, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay, writes that Mary Miles Minter is very popular in South America.

"When I run a Minter subject," he writes, "my theater is packed in no time, while my competitors, running equally world famous stars, have a three-quarter house. Everybody drops in for a Minter picture."

Exchange Manager Resigns

R. H. Haines has resigned as Cincinnati, O., manager of the Mutual exchange in this city and H. A. Shaw, former salesman in this territory, will take his place.

Announces Releases For February

Pauline Frederick Starts Off Paramount List in Allegorical Picture, "Madame Jealousy," by George V. Hobart

PARAMOUNT announces an exceptional list of attractions to be released during February. The month will start off February 4 with a Pauline Frederick picture, "Madame Jealousy," an allegorical feature picture written by George V. Hobart, author of "Experience." This is the first time an allegory of this type has ever been presented in pictures, and it is confidently believed it will be one of the most popular features in which the very popular Paramount star has ever appeared. The production was made on a lavish scale under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. Many of the scenes were taken in Florida and the interior sets for "The House of the Heavy Hours" are said to be exceptionally lavish.

On the same date a new picture in which Dorothy Dalton, a Thomas H. Ince star, figures as the headliner, will be released. It is called "'Flare-Up' Sal," a story which takes Miss Dalton into a part for which she is exceptionally well adapted. The scenic effects are said to be the best which Mr. Ince has ever obtained.

Vivian Martin will appear February 4 in "A Petticoat Pilot," an adaptation of Joseph K. Lincoln's book, "Mary 'Gusta," providing a part exceptionally well adapted for an exploitation of Miss Martin's very definite charms.

Enid Bennett's first picture under Paramount, "The Keys of the Righteous," is a release set for February 11. Mr. Ince has provided a charming story for his beautiful young star and the result is awaited with keen anticipation.

Wallace Reid's next Paramount picture released February 18 is to be "The Thing We Love." Patriotism in its highest form involving self-sacrifice and loyal service to the Government, is the keynote of "The Thing We Love." It is written by Beulah Marie Dix.

One of the most spectacular and interesting photoplays which Paramount is to release in February will appear on the 18, when "Hidden Pearls," starring Sessue Hayakawa, will be shown to the public. Most of the scenes for this picture were taken at Hawaii, many of them on the edge of the crater of the Kilaua volcano, where scenic effects have been obtained never before duplicated. The story is intensely entertaining and romantic.

Billie Burke's fifth picture for Paramount will be released February 25. It is "Eve's Daughter," an adaptation of the stage play of the same name by Alice Ramsey, played this season on Broadway by Grace George. In it Miss Burke has a part exactly suited to her exceptional ability. The direction is by James Kirkwood and an extraordinary production is promised.

Another exceptional feature for the month of February announced by Paramount is "Huck and Tom," in which Jack Pickford is the star. This is an adaptation of part of the book, "Tom Sawyer," by Mark Twain, and is announced as being even better than the splendid production, "Tom Sawyer," released last month, which has made an exceptional impression all over the country. No more popular feature picture has ever been released than "Tom Sawyer," and "Huck and Tom" is destined to even surpass it in interest.

Reproduce Imaginings of Genius

Artcraft Players Visualize Pictures in Mind of Maeterlinck When He Wrote "The Blue Bird," His Masterpiece

WHEN Maeterlinck wrote his masterpiece, and reduced the wonderful pictures of his imagination to writing, he little dreamed that some day the moving picture camera would convert those words into a visualization of the scenes as they existed in his imagination and that the world would view his thoughts practically through his own eyes.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has produced this subject, "The Blue Bird," into a photoplay which will be released by Artcraft. It has entailed months of labor and the expenditure of a fabulous sum of money. Through trick photography, supernatural incidents are depicted in a comprehensive manner.

Had Maeterlinck any conception that this wonderful child of his brain would be adapted to motion pictures his flights of fancy might not have been so extensive and would have been bounded by the limitations of the screen of that day. At the present time, with the marvelous advance in the motion picture art, even such a well-equipped and gigantic organization as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has found the filming of this subject a colossal task, though its working forces are headed by men renowned for their genius throughout the world.

The Artcraft subject, therefore, will be the first time that a literal version of "The Blue Bird" has been made, and every town and hamlet can enjoy this beautiful story.

Maurice Tourneur, a producer of international reputation, staged the production, which is said to establish a new record for the largest number of real actors appearing in one subject, as well as for the most colossal settings erected inside a studio.

War Curtails Picture Production

ALSO CAUSES MARKED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MILITARY DRAMAS

"THE war affected the production of motion pictures in 1917 in two ways," said Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures of New York City, while discussing the relation of the war and motion pictures. "First there was a marked reduction. The number of reels passed upon by the National Board of Review, which reviews more than ninety-nine per cent of all photoplays exhibited in this country, was 8,436.

"This number is fewer by 744 reels than the number passed upon in 1916. The number of different pictures or subjects was 3,114, as compared with 4,113 in the year 1916. These figures reflect the effect of the war upon the making of pictures and the demand of the public regarding the type of pictures. The chief falling off in production was in the month just before the declaration of war and the following two months. Evidently at that time the producers were uncertain as to what the effect of the war would be upon the demand for motion picture entertainments.

"Since July production has followed the general trend of that of the previous year, the numbers released, however, being somewhat smaller, with an upward tendency in December. The demand for single reel pictures has greatly fallen off in the course of the year. The feature picture, usually five reels in length, is taking the place of the one-reeler. In some months as many five-reel pictures as one-reel subjects were released. The general tendency in this respect is indicated by the fact that the average length of pictures in 1915 was 1.65; in 1916, 2.23; and in 1917, 2.77 reels. In December the average length was 3.28 reels as compared with 2.28 for the corresponding months of 1916.

Government Interest Grows

"In the second place, the year was marked by the large number of subjects produced relating to the war. These were photoplays with a war twist, European war pictures and propaganda for various war measures, such as the stimulation of enlistments, the sale of war bonds, the Red Cross campaigns for funds and memberships and the conservation of food.

"The government has taken a marked interest in motion pictures, not only in these respects, but as a means of entertainment for soldiers and sailors in the training camps, on board ship, and at the front in France. The American Cinema Commission was appointed to carry the propaganda of democracy to Europe by means of motion pictures.

"The War Department believes in the usefulness of the motion picture as a means of preserving the civil and military morale. The great value of the motion picture as a medium of expression of opinion has therefore been clearly demonstrated. Many successful books and plays have been used as the basis of scenarios for photoplays.

Nudes Are Banished

"The action of the National Board of Review in eliminating the nude from motion pictures, and refusing to pass white slave pictures of the commercialized type, has affected the character of the pictures made. This action followed an expression of opinion secured by means of a questionnaire sent to exhibitors and others in all parts of the country and evidently represented public opinion in every part of the country.

"A study of motion pictures from the moral point of view was carried on in Great Britain by a Cinema Commission headed by the Bishop of Winchester. The results of this inquiry indicated that photoplays as a rule proved to those who patronized them to be educative, morally healthful and pleasure giving and instrumental in reducing intemperance. The commission also found that in England little juvenile delinquency was traceable to motion pictures despite the fact that since the war began this class of delinquency has been on the increase. It expressed the opinion that motion picture theaters were a much better place for young people than the street. This report is of interest because the United States is now entering a war and may look for social conditions in large cities somewhat similar to those produced in the large cities of England."

Irvin S. Cobb Story for Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh will have one of the greatest acting opportunities of her motion picture career in a new production just announced by Goldwyn Pictures. In it she will appear as the young heroine of a romantic story of thoroughbred crookedness from the pen of Irvin S. Cobb, among the foremost of America's authors, and now a participant in Goldwyn activities.

The original story of the production was published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "The Web."

New L-Ko Star

Carrying out his purpose to strengthen the drawing powers of his trade-mark by adding comedy stars, President Julius Stern, of L-Ko, has arranged for a transfer of Gale Henry from Nestor comedies, a Universal brand, to head an L-Ko company directed by Archie Mayo.

Quartette of Goldwyn Plays Succeed

Last Four Releases Attract Public to Box Offices During Most Adverse Weather of the Year

BRINGING the public back to the box-offices of the motion picture theaters is in no sense a superhuman or even a difficult task, providing the producers of pictures "do their bit" by making powerful pictures.

Testimony to this effect from hundreds of exhibitors throughout North America has been received by Goldwyn, this testimony being in the form of reports on the tremendous stimulation given to picture theater attendance by the past four Goldwyn releases—Rex Beach's greatest story, "The Auction Block," "Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," Mae Marsh in "Cinderella Man" and Mary Garden in "Thais."

Despite the great emphasis laid upon stars in screen production, it is proved week in and week out that poor stories will cripple and damage the reputation of even the greatest of stars, and it is therefore obvious that the story is of first concern in any well conducted producing organization. From the beginning Goldwyn has laid emphasis upon its stories and the sources from which they are obtained.

Mabel Normand as presented by Goldwyn in "Dodging a Million."

"Nearly Married," Edgar Selwyn's successful play had proved its earning value on the stage, and with Madge Kennedy as the star when transplanted to the screen it at once duplicated its former record and brought the public flocking into picture theaters everywhere.

Then came Rex Beach's story, "The Auction Block," a story of basic humanity and understandable emotion—a big, modern every-day story known to and understood by millions, and the lure of the Beach name and the reputation of this particular story resulted in capacity business for exhibitors everywhere.

Goldwyn's picturization of Edward Childs Carpenter's play, "The Cinderella Man" proved what a sweet screen romance can do for exhibitors. It is noteworthy that out of several thousand contract customers there have come only indorsements of the popularity and drawing power of "The Cinderella Man" and that there has not been a single objection or criticism received from any exhibitor. Much of the success of this production can be attributed to the genius and skill of George Loane Tucker, the director, who gave to "The Cinderella Man" little touches and distinctions that had not been imparted to it as a stage production. "The Cinderella Man" was one of the box-office hits of the year and it is welcomed by exhibitors as a patronage-builder, as well as the type of production that creates future patronage for any house.

As was predicted and anticipated, Mary Garden in "Thais" achieved remarkable results for exhibitors and great benefit to Goldwyn business. The beauties of the production and the sensational success of this famous star in her first screen venture resulted in capacity business for North America's picture houses—establishing in many instances the top levels for attendance and revenues ever achieved by more than one hundred important amusement institutions. And this despite the fact that "Thais" was first presented in the week that marked the coldest average weather that the United States as a whole had had in the past thirty years. On the second day of its presentation at The Strand Theater, New York, for example, the thermometer touched thirteen below zero—the low temperature record for all time in New York—yet the theater's receipts for that day were the highest in the history of the house.

"Our Little Wife," is Goldwyn's next offering, with Madge Kennedy as the star.

Runs Mae Marsh Film Three Weeks

Notable as has been Manager J. A. Quinn's policy of booking Goldwyn Pictures for a fortnight's run at his Rialto Theater in Los Angeles, he has outdone even that endorsement of "Goldwyn Quality" by extending the run of Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" to a third week, in order to satisfy the demand of his patrons.

Theda Bara's Brother in Army

Miss Theda Bara, the William Fox screen star, proudly displays a service flag in her limousine denoting that her brother, Marque Bara, is "doing his bit" for Uncle Sam. Mr. Bara is attached to the United States Signal Corps, Aviation branch, stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Before enlisting in the Signal Corps, Miss Bara's brother was employed by the Fox Film Corporation as assistant director to Kenean Buel, who directs Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox "Baby Grands."

Miss Minter in New Role

American-Mutual Star's Next Production, "Beauty and the Rogue," Presents Her in Series of Surprises

IN Mary Miles Minter's next American-Mutual production titled "Beauty and the Rogue," which will be released on the Mutual schedule January 28, this delightful little star will be seen in a role quite different from any character she has yet portrayed.

As "Bobbie Lee," the unsophisticated daughter of a wealthy and doting father, she is interested in the work of an "Uplift" society, and is imposed upon by an ex-burglar who works on her sympathies and promises to "go straight." He did "go straight" away, but only after he had taken her jewels, some of which he sold to the young chap who had fallen in love with "Bobbie," and the young fellow was pinched as the thief when he presented "Bobbie" with her own brooch.

Demure little Mary Miles doing a tiptoe dance, a la ballerina, and doing it with all the grace of a Pavlowa, promises a charmingly diverting episode. There is a surprise in store for the Minter enthusiasts, for few know that it was a toss-up with Mary Miles when she began her stage career between the terpsichorean and the dramatic art.

George Periolat, who plays the father, will have his first opportunity for aeons to wear real human clothes, as heretofore he has been camouflaged as decrepit misers, crazy sea-captains, bibulous beach-combers, and old man roles, until the public has almost forgotten what he looks like.

Alan Forrest plays opposite Miss Minter, while Spottiswood Aitken has an accentric bit which he handles in his inimitable way.

Orral Humphrey is "Slippery," the blubbering burglar who pilfers the jewels and shatters "Bobbie's" illusions of the "uplift."

Clarence Burton and Lucille Ward complete an exceptional cast.

The Strand Comedy, released January 29, stars Billie Rhodes in a peppery farce entitled "Somebody's Widow." Billie poses as the inconsolable young widow of a victim of the sea, in order to captivate a bumptious young scenario-writer who is immune to feminine charms. She is on the point of succeeding and winning a bet she made with her chums, when the secretary of the b. y. s. w. learns of her scheme, makes up as her sailor-husband returned from the sea, and exposes the bogus widow.

The "Mutual Weekly," the interesting and timely topical news reel, which is a pictorial exploitation of the most significant events of the week, is released on January 28. An interesting subject in the last "Weekly" was titled "Traitors at Home." Starting with a scene in a restaurant it showed a man who will not observe "meatless day," followed by scenes of beef cattle on the range which will be used to feed American soldiers, and the handling of beef at the army camps. The lesson is obvious and convincing.

No "Depression" Found in This Case

"Depression," so far as it affects attendance at moving picture houses, is a thing of the past in Philadelphia, so long as a real strong attraction is offered to the public. Stanley V. Mastbaum, the Stanley Booking Company, the Stanley Theater and Manager G. T. Ames of the Goldwyn exchange in that city bear witness. Mr. Mastbaum forwards the following interesting extract from a personal letter from a Philadelphia friend:

"My experience with the remarkable popularity of 'Thais' at the Strand began Monday night when I witnessed its first presentation to two crowded houses. On Wednesday night I was present at the first exhibition out of curiosity over the picture's drawing power. There were so many people in the back of the house, however, that I could not get out until after the first showing, and when I finally did get into Market street there was a line three deep extending from the entrance of the theater nearly to Sixteenth street. On Saturday afternoon, my sister waited three-quarters of an hour in line to see the 'Thais' matinee, and this was for the second showing. Saturday evening a friend of mine from Chicago stood in line for the same length of time and when he reached the box office, the S. R. O. sign was out."

"The Rose of Blood" Earns Praise

The Theda Bara super production, "The Rose of Blood," is being well received throughout the country. This is the picture the United States government wants exhibited. This fact was brought out in the litigation in Chicago, where Major Funkhouser objected to the showing of the picture. George Creel, who is head of the National Committee on Public Information, took issue with Major Funkhouser and said that "The Rose of Blood" is just the kind of picture that the government at Washington wants shown.

Mutual Press Sheets Aid Exhibitors

Publicity Helps, Sample Newspaper Advertisements, Music Suggestions and Operators' Cues Assist in Putting Picture Over

MUTUAL'S claim to being the originator of novel ideas now universally accepted as a matter of course under the general plan of "service to the exhibitor," is well sustained in the many interesting and helpful suggestions in the two color press sheet which Mutual issues on each star production.

This press sheet, prepared under the direction of Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity, is the result of the combined efforts in their respective lines. Its comprehensive character is shown in the variety of subjects embodied, covering every feature that is available to the exhibitor in exploiting Mutual productions. These features are classified as follows:

Publicity Stories for Local Newspapers: Interesting and snappy advance stories, relating to the production or to the star, put in form acceptable to the newspapers. Newspaper men of broad experience supply this material, and as a result they will be found to be of the class that "get across" in the local papers.

Sample Newspaper Advertisements: Specimen one-column and two-column ads. are given, in attractive form and type that can be set at moderate cost and available in any newspaper plant.

Advertising Accessories: Reproductions of cuts, posters and slides, in colors, lobby photos and special lobby pictures of Mutual stars are collated, and an attractive selection shown for the exhibitor to choose from.

Music Cues: Music cue-sheets are incorporated in every press sheet. These are designed to anticipate the needs of the house-musicians, and are, in effect, as close a musical dramatization as can be made by this means. They are prepared by a musician of experience who times every scene and analyzes the action, and the duration of the music and synchronization to action will be found to be accurate at the rate of projection speed stated on the cue-sheet. The music suggested will prove valuable to any library, and most appropriate in dramatizing pictures.

Catch Lines for Special Advertising: Lines that will catch the eye of the reader, prepared by an expert who knows.

In addition to the foregoing, the press-sheets contain synopses for the house-program, excerpts from critics' opinion of the star, operator's cues for fading reels and lines for display banners.

Service, in the best sense of the word, is the keynote of these service-sheets: they are "meaty," full of helpful suggestions, and have become an invaluable aid to the exhibitor.

The next Mutual press-sheet will be on William Russell's American-Mutual production "In Bad."

Kid McCoy in Miss Young's Company

Norman Selby, known to fame as "Kid McCoy," will make his screen debut as an actor in "The House of Glass," which Clara Kimball Young, Select star, and her own company are at present producing in the C. K. Y. studio in New Rochelle. Selby will play the part of Detective Carroll, a role in which not alone his histrionic ability, but his pugilistic training also, will be given a chance for expression.

Hodkinson Plan Meets Success

Bookings of Paralta Plays by Use of Exchange Service of General Film Company Proves Satisfactory

AN extraordinary success is reported by W. W. Hodkinson on his plan for using the exchange service of the General Film Company for the physical handling of the Paralta Plays, which he is distributing. It is now four weeks since the arrangement with General was completed, but the reports on bookings of the two Paralta Plays, "A Man's Man" with J. Warren Kerrigan and "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, are as satisfactory from the viewpoint of salesmanship as could have been obtained in months by a new organization. In addition, the service to exhibitors of prints and supplies has gone forward without a hitch, through the well-oiled channels furnished by the General Film exchanges.

It has been possible, Mr. Hodkinson states, to give the full value of his discriminating distribution service through the General Exchanges. The control of prices is vested in the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and every contract is approved by its head office sales department before pictures are released under it. The Hodkinson principles of the distributor serving as the balancing factor between producer and exhibitor, and spreading the return on the pictures over a period of time sufficient both to give the producer a full return on his investment and the individual exhibitor a rental charge commensurate with his ability to pay, are becoming well known again throughout the trade.

The sales department of the Hodkinson Corporation is now issuing a series of letters to the General Film sales force setting forth the basic principles of the Hodkinson distribution plans, as supplementary to the three "Hodkinson Service" conventions which S. R. Kent, general sales manager of the General Film Company, has just held in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco.

Backing up the definite work being done to open the lines of Hodkinson principles through the General Film exchanges to the exhibitor, the publicity and exhibitor service department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an intensive exhibitor campaign. Direct-by-mail advertising of original but dignified form will be sent out, commencing next week, setting forth the Hodkinson principles and their application to the sales of the Paralta Pictures and other Hodkinson product. A couple of weeks ago the first Hodkinson booklet, "What Shall We Do with the Motion Picture Business?" covering Mr. Hodkinson's views of the industry in concrete form, was published. This was followed by a folder on the Motion Picture PLUS, the new process larger film which is soon to be seen. These two publications are being sent out free, but only on request.

Next week the first Hodkinson publication for full exhibitor list will go out. This will be headed, "Answering Your Questions About Hodkinson."

Features Scheduled for April

Universal Program Is Arranged in Advance For Coming Months—Many Stars Are Presented

FIVE-REELERS to supply exhibitors of Universal's product for the next three months have been scheduled by President and Director General Carl Laemmle of that organization, presenting all of the stars that have lately come into prominence under Universal's auspices. Under the new arrangement, there is no program designation for these attractions, each carrying either name of the star or the producer as the advertising feature of the individual offering.

The release for February has previously been announced, the schedule listing Louise Lovely, in "Painted Lips," Feb. 4; Ella Hall and Emory Johnson, in "New Love for Old," Feb. 11; Herbert Rawlinson, in "The Flash of Fate," Feb. 18, and Harry Carey, in "Wild Women," Feb. 25. "Nobody's Wife," will be another feature starring Louise Lovely, to start the list of March attractions, the schedule running on as follows:

March 11—Ella Hall and Emory Johnson, in "Dona Perfecta," adapted by Elliott J. Clawson, from the book by H. Perez Galdos, and produced by Elsie Jane Wilson. Prominent part will be sustained by Ruby La Fayette, Gretchen Lederer, Winter Hall, Maxfield Stanley and Harry Holden.

March 18—"Back to the Right Trail," a Harry Carey production, by Jack Ford, with Molly Malone and Vesta Pegg featured in the support. George Hively prepared the scenario from Frederick H. Bechdolt's story, first published in a popular magazine.

March 25—Louise Lovely, in "The Quest of Joan." The story was written by James Oliver Curwood, prepared for the screen by Doris Schroeder and directed by Edgar Jones. Philo McCullough heads the supporting company, which also includes Charles Hill Mailes, Marc Fenton, William Chester and Gertrude Aster.

April 1—"Little Miss Sherlock" will be a Little Zoe Rae feature directed by Rea Berger, who becomes this clever little girl's screen manager with this issue. Norris Shannon wrote the story and Frank F. Clark made the screen preparations. Claire Du Brey, Charles Hill Mailes and William Carroll will have prominent supporting roles.

April 6—An Ella Hall production, featuring Emory Johnson, in a screen-version of Lois Zellner's story, "Lady Eldon's Daughter," prepared by Doris Schroeder. The supporting company will be headed by Dave Morris and T. D. Crittenden with Douglas Gerrard making this his first Ella Hall production.

April 15—A Harry Carey feature, produced by Jack Ford, from Owen Wister's story, "Lin McLean," by the author of "The Virginian." George Hively turned in the scenario. Molly Malone will be featured in support of Harry Carey with Vesta Pegg in an essential role.

April 22—"New Clothes" will be a Louise Lovely production, directed by Edgar Jones. Harvey Gates wrote the story and E. B. Lewis provided the scenario. Philo McCullough will be Miss Lovely's leading man, with Edna Maison and Winter Hall in prominent roles.

Miss Carmel Myers is a Blue Bird star of considerable magnitude.

New Vitagraph Serial Progressing

Reports from the western studio of the Vitagraph company which have reached Albert E. Smith, president, declare that production of the new serial, "The Woman in the Web," is moving along rapidly. The first scenes, depicting an ambassador's ball at Washington, were made in two days, more than two hundred persons being used in support of Hedda Nova, the beautiful young Russian, and Frank Glendon, who are to be starred in the serial.

Immediately after the big ball room scene which is said to be one of the most elaborate ever put on the screen, exteriors showing a reproduction of the imperial gardens at the Czar's palace in Petrograd were made under the direction of David Smith.

Some of the scenes of the pictures will show Russia and others equally prominent will show scenes of Japan, China and other countries. The story involves a world pursuit which takes the hero and heroine to many parts of the globe but the greater part of the action occurs in the United States.

New Play for Edna Goodrich

Edna Goodrich's next Mutual photoplay will be "Who Loved Him Best?", a five-reel production in which Miss Goodrich is cast as a motion picture star and many of the scenes of which are laid in the Bohemian quarter of Washington Square, New York. It will be released February 4.

"Who Loved Him Best?" was produced under the working title of "Art and the Woman" at the Long Island studios of the Mutual Film Corporation under the direction of Dell Henderson, who directed several of the previous Goodrich successes and who has been responsible for several of the Charles Frohman plays in motion pictures starring Ann Murdock, Olive Tell and Julia Sanderson which have been released by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Critics Favor "Sadie Goes to Heaven"

Newspaper critics give favorable comment on little Mary McAlister's newest Essanay picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven."

Kitty Kelly, photoplay critic of the Chicago Examiner, declares: "Youngsters can't help liking this picture and grown-ups who have youth in their hearts can't help enjoying it either. In this vehicle Mary McAlister adds to her collections of screen portraits the best she has made."

"Her American Husband" Completed

Triangle Releases Two Features, One Starring Teddy Sampson and Darrell Foss and the Other Texas Guinan

WILL intermarriage solve the problem of the east and west? With the life of the overseas conflict shortened by three years, watchful eyes are already turned toward the ominous little islands in the Pacific that are fast becoming a world power. Whether American diplomacy will suffice to bridge the ever-widening gap, or whether some other remedy will have to be resorted to, is yet to be decided.

"Her American Husband" is a reversal of John Luther Long's famous story, "Madame Butterfly," which is familiar, either in its operatic or dramatic form, to every American play-goer. In this timely and all-absorbing drama from the pen of E. Magnus Ingleton, authoress of "Because of a Woman," intermarriage between the white and yellow races is the theme, and wonderful scenic effects, heart interest and powerful acting combine to make what Triangle officials believe to be an artistic triumph.

This is a play with an unusual appeal —a romantic plot in a brilliant oriental setting, with the symbolism of the "Butterfly" effectively interwoven.

Darrell Foss, in the title role as the profligate young millionaire, offers a striking characterization. His work in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," "The Regenerates" and "Without Honor" has already stamped him as an actor of ability. Teddy Sampson is a charming little Cherry Blossom, endowing her role with pathos and endearing witchery. Thomas Kurihara and Jack Abbe are Japanese possessing all the marks of artistic genius which have always attracted the profound admiration of European and American painters to Oriental acting. The other names in the cast represent careful selections from the Triangle players. "Her American Husband" was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Some of the most beautiful sets ever erected at the Culver City studio were used in this production. As most of the scenes were laid in Japan, special artists were engaged to design the interior scenic effects. The beautiful Japanese Garden at Sierra Madre, California, was used for exteriors.

Texas Guinan is "The Tigress" in "The Gun Woman" released the latter part of the week. She is the fearless proprietress of the "Devil's Kitchen,"— a saloon and dance hall, and settles all her grievances with an automatic.

Edwin Brady who appeared in "Wild Sumac" and "Indiscreet Corinne," does a keenly satirical characterization. Francis McDonald, who played in Alma Rubens support in "I Love You," departs from the conventional tricks of the heavy and gives the part of the highwayman the much desired touch of realism. Thornton Edwards was made familiar to Triangle fans in "Wee Lady Betty," "Fighting Back" and "Indiscreet Corinne." Frank Borzage is credited with the direction of this production.

It's an artist's studio, and the wives all come up to pose. The husbands object, but each makes a date with the other fellow's wife for an artistic riot at the studio. Running up and down the building is a dumbwaiter that mixes husbands and wives in a wild and woolly whirlpool of wedded woe. That is the basis of the new Keystone comedy, "Ruined by a Dumbwaiter," released for the week of January 27, and there's a climax in it that kicks cords of chortles and roars of riotous laughter from fun-proof fiends, and leaves the observer just enough strength to get home and tell the folks that the funniest film in the world has been enacted before his eyes.

"A Butler Bust Up" and "Too Many Husbands" are one-reel Triangle Komedies included in the week's release.

Policemen battling with a crowd of strikers that stormed the Food Profiteer's house in "Cheating the Public," a William Fox all-star cast production.

Cast Chosen for New Talmadge Film

Casting has been completed for the new Norma Talmadge feature, "By Right of Purchase," on which work was commenced recently at the Talmadge studio. The young star's support in this production will include Eugene O'Brien as leading man, Ida Darling, William Courtleigh, Jr., Charles Wellesley and Miss Florence B. Billings. Charles Miller is directing the picture.

Both Mr. O'Brien and Miss Darling are seen in Miss Talmadge's last photoplay, "The Ghost of Yesterday," adapted from the Rupert Hughes' drama, "Two Women," and soon to be released. Mr. O'Brien, who is as well known on the screen as he is upon the speaking stage, has been leading man for Miss Talmadge in most of her latest successes including "Poppy" and "The Moth." He was also partly responsible for the success of "The Country Cousin," which enjoyed a long and popular run at the Gaiety Theater, New York, a short time ago.

The career of Miss Darling has covered fifteen years on the legitimate stage and screen engagements with such companies as Fox, Lubin, Selznick, Pathe and Famous Players. On the stage she has been seen recently in "Mary's Ankle."

William Courtleigh, Jr., is a son of the famous actor of that name and Mr. Wellesley has played in a number of Vitagraph productions. He recently supported Evelyn Nesbit in "Redemption." Miss Billings is a talented actress of considerable experience.

Enid Markey plays the leading lady in the new photoplay of wild western life which Tom Mix is making for William Fox. The picture is under the direction of S. A. Franklin.

"Stars to Sell Stars" Select Slogan

Producing Corporation Under Direction of Arthur S. Kane Builds Strong Sales Organization Over Country

SELECT Pictures Corporation has adopted the slogan "Stars to Sell Stars," as applied to its sales organization. This phrase, which so aptly sums up the progressive policy followed by Select in building up its distribution machinery, is the choice of General Manager, Arthur S. Kane.

Recognizing the fact that in the motion picture industry conditions of sales and the product sold have vastly changed, Select Pictures Corporation has within the last three and a half months built up a sales organization carefully calculated to be best suited to the conditions which today surround the sale of high grade pictures. The guiding thought in the rounding out of this organization has been that the proper handling of a quality product calls for a quality salesman.

Paralleling this idea has been the determination to make Select's representatives in every territory of the United States the commanding figures in their respective fields. With the end in view every manager put in charge of a Select branch has been chosen as being pre-eminent in the district of which his branch is the center. He has been selected because as regards that particular field he is a sales specialist.

In this way territory after territory has been covered for Select Pictures by the appointment of a specialist for each territory, so that now that the organization is complete, from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Canada to the Gulf, Select sales campaigns throughout the country are conducted everywhere by men who know best the territory and the people to whom they are selling the Select product.

"The one best man in each particular territory—that has been our aim," says General Manager Kane. "It would make no difference if the man who covered Cleveland, for instance, could not sell cheeses in Atlanta. The point is: Is he the very best man to sell Select Pictures in Cleveland, bar none? When we are able successfully to apply that test to a manager and record an affirmative answer, we know we have the one man of all men that we are looking for, for the particular field under consideration."

Real Thrills Lurk in Barbed Wire

To the layman barbed wire is generally associated simply with fences; but the intricacies of the use to which it is put are shown in the great Ira M. Lowry spectacle, "For the Freedom of the World," now being distributed widely by Goldwyn.

The barbed wire entanglements used in filming this picture were constructed under the direction of men actually versed in the tricks of modern warfare. The story is based on the famous American Legion of the Canadian Army.

While thousands of pounds of explosives were used in filming the wonderful night battle scenes, there were no accidents from this cause, but some of the regular soldiers used in the raiding party were actually caught in the barbed wire, and if it had been a battle waged with real bullets their lives would have been gone in an instant, for they would have been easy targets for enemy sharpshooters.

Newman Starts Work in Chicago

E. M. Newman, the lecturer, spent several days last week at the Rothacker Laboratory, Chicago, arranging negative continuity for his series of travel pictures which will be made at the Rothacker plant and released through the Educational Film Corporation.

Mr. Newman personally conferred with Mr. Rothacker concerning special tints and duo-tone effects which characterize his productions.

Mr. Hammons of the Educational Film Corporation reports a gratifying list of advance bookings for the Newman pictures which will soon be on the screens of the foremost photo theaters in America.

Nehls Is Snowbound

The record breaking Chicago blizzard of last Sunday found Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Company, Inc., snowbound at Elgin, Illinois, where he had been for the day to celebrate the eighty-third birthday anniversary of his mother. He managed to plow through the drifts and get back to the office late that afternoon.

Search Country for Good Cast

George K. Spoor Players Are Selected for Next Taylor Holmes Production to Be Titled "A Pair of Sixes"

GEORGE K. SPOOR announces the cast on "A Pair of Sixes," a Taylor Holmes production, now in the making. The entire country was scoured to get the players most suitable for their parts in support of Mr. Holmes.

Mr. Holmes will play the part of T. Boggs Johns, the pill manufacturer and later butler in the home of George Nettleton, his business partner, as a result of a game of cards. Nettleton is to be interpreted by Robert Conness, the well known stage star and who has already made a name for himself in the movies. During his stage career Mr. Conness appeared as leading man with Blanche Walsh, Mary Mannering, Francis Wilson and others.

Mr. Spoor also has secured the services of Maude Eburne, who created the role of "Coddles" in the stage presentation of Edward Peple's farce comedy. Charles E. Ashley, who created the role of Krome in the original stage production, will play that part. Alice Mann, a screen actress of considerable note who has played leads with many noted comedians, will appear as Florence Cole.

Cecil Owens, who will play Vanderholt, is now appearing in Chicago with Jane Cowl in "Lilac Time." Edna Phillips Holmes takes the part of Mrs. Nettleton. Others in the cast are John Cossar as Mr. Applegate; Byron Aldenn as Tony Tolor; Virginia Bowker as Sallie Parker and Tommie Carey as Jimmie, the office boy.

Assembling of Mr. Holmes' newly completed Spoor feature, "Ruggles of Red Gap," is about completed. Mr. Holmes is even more enthusiastic over this picture than "Uneasy Money," which is now showing throughout the country. Reports on "Uneasy Money" indicate a swelling clientele for Mr. Holmes.

Queries on Mary MacLane and requests for bookings of this George K. Spoor February feature are daily received at the Kleine headquarters.

Ida May Park Directs Feature

Making "Her Fling" with Dorothy Phillips as Star, Supported by William Stowell and Good Cast

IDA MAY PARK, who now is in the first stages of her new production, "Her Fling," has in this picture a popular combination of star and leading man—Dorothy Phillips and William Stowell—which has strongly intrenched itself in the hearts of lovers of the screen drama. "Her Fling" shows Miss Phillips as a stenographer whose whole life becomes changed after she meets a banker, the role of which is in the hands of Mr. Stowell.

The story was originally written by Katherine Leiser Robbins for one of the popular magazines and Director Park, who has created many stories herself, moulded it into shape for presentation on the screen. Many of the scenes are declared to provide entirely new situations and the picture concludes with a climax of exciting interest.

During the progress of the story Miss Phillips rises to affluence and thus has opportunity for the display of new gowns which have been made especially attractive. The story makes numerous changes necessary and her sartorial presentation is likely to arouse the admiration of femininity when they view the picture. Both Miss Park and Miss Phillips spent many days together with Los Angeles modistes arranging for the wardrobe of "Her Fling," which will not only enhance the star's beauty, but also add to the attractiveness of the scenes in which she wears the gowns.

Director Park's present production calls for elaborate settings and these now are being constructed for her use, the technical art and construction departments devoting especial attention to these settings to make them rank among the most substantial and artistic ever put up at Universal City.

Headed by Miss Phillips and Mr. Stowell, the screen adaptation of Katherine Leiser Robbins' story has a cast composed of Juanita Hansen, Claire Du Brey, Joe Girard, Edward Cecil, George Chesebro, Sallie Starr and little Frankie Lee.

Kirkwood to Direct Keeney Pictures

James Kirkwood, one of the ablest directors the motion picture industry has produced, has been placed under contract by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. In about a month he will begin a picture with Catherine Calvert, "The girl with the wonderful eyes," as star. The scenario is being written by Benjamin S. Kutler, who has just been engaged as editor by the new corporation.

Julian Eltinge's third Paramount picture to be released January 28, has just been completed, and is said by those who have seen it to be by far the best of all the Eltinge Paramount pictures. The story is called "The Widow's Might."

Mary Pickford Takes San Francisco

Appearing to Film Scenes of "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," Artcraft Star Leads Recruiting Parade in the Bay City

DRESSED in the regalia of a United States marine, Mary Pickford took over the baton of the leader of the Mare Island Band of fifty pieces and led a parade down Market street, which fired the opening gun in a whirlwind navy-marine corps drive for recruits, and stopped traffic for a mile and a half through the leading streets of the city, while one hundred thousand people thronged the thoroughfares to catch a glimpse of America's sweetheart in person.

The film star, who is in San Francisco for the filming of Chinatown scenes for her forthcoming play, "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," consented to lead the monster parade when appealed to by the marine corps recruiting staff.

Director Marshall Neilan gulped once or twice, whispered something about the value of the time of a $10,000 a week star, and then gamely declared that he would delay the filming of the picture long enough to let the parade go by. Arrangements had been made to have Miss Pickford ride in an automobile at the head of the procession, but the little star became so thrilled by the spirit of the occasion that she promptly agreed when the suggestion was made that she walk at the head of the band. Instead of walking eight blocks as had been planned, Miss Pickford kept up the march for a mile and a half—a veritable march of triumph.

Scenario Staff Grows

Recent acquisitions to Goldwyn's scenario staff are Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morse, both well known in the magazine field before undertaking motion picture work. With Lasky and at Fox Western studio they collaborated on continuity and contributed original stories. Mabel Strouse, for a long time a standby in the scenario bureau of World Film, also has cast her lot with Goldwyn, where her keen sense of picture values is making her a valued member of the staff at the Fort Lee studios.

Alice Brady Finishes "The Knife"

Her Next Select Production Is Now in Hands of Cutters and Titlemakers—Rests Before Returning to Work

PRODUCTION on "The Knife," Alice Brady's next Select picture, was practically completed this week and the film is now being cut and titled.

The play is another of Eugene Walter's phenomenal successes and was used as the attraction for the opening of the New Bijou theater last season. As an offering on the legitimate stage it was a tremendous hit and in the screen version, which has been made by Charles Maigne, lives up to all previous standards.

The story deals with the life of a young Southern girl who falls into the hands of a gang of white slavers. It is a powerful melodrama and gives Miss Brady a role at once forceful and singularly appealing. In the cast she is supported by Frank Morgan, her leading man, Craufurd Kent, Helen Lackaye, Paul Doucet, Alice Hollister, Jonnie Walker and Frank Evans.

A distinctive feature of the screen play will be the lovely Southern settings it contains. These were obtained on the famous Emerson plantation located a few miles from Jacksonville, Florida, where Miss Brady with her director, Robert C. Vignola, and her company spent a couple of weeks. The Emerson place is one of the most beautiful homes in the South, and its fine old mansion and spacious grounds provided an ideal background for the scenes in the play.

With "The Knife" completed, Miss Brady is planning to take a short breathing spell before commencing work on the next of her Select productions. She has now finished three of her Select Star Series, "Her Silent Sacrifice" and "Woman and Wife" being the two previous releases, and all three pictures are distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

Virginia Pearson "Queen of Movies"

As the result of a silent voting contest among the affiliated clubs of Brooklyn, N. Y., Virginia Pearson, the William Fox star, was adjudged the "Queen of Motion Picture Actresses," and at a ball of the Clarindon Club in the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum was presented with a massive and beautifully inscribed silver loving cup.

We Are Not Like Sid's "Uncle Bim"

Following is a letter from an exhibitor of Champaign, Ill., which gives the writer's opinion of MOTOGRAPHY in his own terms:

MOTOGRAPHY,
Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen: Here is my check for my fifth year of MOTOGRAPHY. I don't like flattery, but with the round of information that MOTOGRAPHY passes around each week, both editorially and in news matter, I have to hand it to you. Unlike Uncle Bim of the Gump escapades, whom Sid Smith sketches each day for the Chicago Tribune, I believe that MOTOGRAPHY will continue to stand first as the motion picture man's "gold mine."

Very truly yours,
(Signed) CHESTER W. CLEVELAND.

Divorce Theme of New Fox Picture

A divorce tragedy is the theme of a stirring new picture which is being made by Frank Lloyd for William Fox and which will be released soon. The story deals with a man who is correct and proper in his dealings with his wife and with society generally and who gave to his home everything that money could buy, but withheld from his wife himself. His evenings were spent at his club; his caress was lacking. Morally he was all right but his behavior to his wife had in it that element of neglect which poisoned all the well springs of her being. An old suitor appears, the husband finds her in his arms and the divorce court follows. The man retains his position among his friends and society, but the woman becomes an outcast. The hardest blow comes when her child is taken from her.

"Extra! Extra!"

It takes a newspaper man to write a real newspaper play, which Will Richey has done for Mary Miles Minter in her latest American-Mutual production, "Extra! Extra!"

Miss Minter is a resourceful young girl who edits the school paper and when her father needs an enterprising editor to take charge of a political fight in his town, she takes right hold and pulls the paper through and lams the crooked politician out of commission.

How she does it makes a good story and one that makes you forget to take more than three or four good breaths right through the picture, you are so anxious to know just how she is going to put the deal through.

Reid Has New Role

"Rimrock Jones," by Dane Coolidge, is to be produced with Wallace Reid in the leading role, and released by Paramount in January.

Favors Improved Distribution Plan

PRESIDENT OF PRODUCING COMPANY POINTS ADVANTAGE IN CLEARING HOUSES

THE chief trouble of the motion picture business at the present time, according to Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is the system of distribution.

While being distinctly opposed to any amalgamation, monopoly or trust, Mr. Rowland favors a centralization of distribution with four or five big releasing concerns each independent of the other through which all manufacturers shall distribute their pictures. Mr. Rowland believes that a monopoly in the picture business is an impossibility, as well as being undesirable, but that the tremendous overhead—now the bane of the industry—can be materially reduced if five big clearing house organizations or less are put into operation.

Much Room for Improvement

"There is room, all kinds of room, for improvement for distribution on the motion picture industry," said Mr. Rowland. "We do not want an amalgamation, a monopoly or a trust, because such a thing as well as being undesirable, could not survive in the motion picture industry. What we do want is a sale system through clearing houses, and it makes no difference whether the number be three, or four or five so long as they are a few, whereby each manufacturer shall retain his identity and place his goods through these clearing houses to the exhibitor. The manufacturer, in the last analysis, must be content to depend upon the merit of his attractions for his profits.

"Under the present system, the overhead charges on distribution are such that it is necessary for a concern to make at least one feature picture a week. As a result, there is a production without reference to real show value, and it would be better if fewer pictures were made in order that time and care could be given, so that each production would be a box office attraction.

Cut Costs Materially

"This lower production rate would only be possible by a clearing house or centralized system of distribution. Each manufacturer could have a man in the office of the clearing house through which his product is distributed to look after his interests and to see that his product is given proper attention.

"A centralized system of distribution would make it possible to provide exhibitors with good pictures at a price the exhibitor can afford to pay.

"It is a great mistake to attempt to strangle the exhibitor, for in so doing you strangle the industry. It is a great mistake also to over-sell the exhibitor. Help should be given him to enable him to get the last dollar out of the production. A centralized system of distribution would result in more profits for the exhibitor and for the producer and at the same time would bring rental prices down.

Present System Is Makeshift

"It must be remembered that our present systems, whether for program or open booking, are merely a temporary makeshift. They have resulted in the cut-throat competition, which will eventually prove disastrous to the entire business.

"I am against any monopoly, but I believe if a system was adopted whereby the exhibitor could sign up with a clearing house for two years, first assuring himself that the people with whom he was doing business were of such a character and standing that his pictures would be satisfactory, it would be possible to give him more advertising and more help in every way at a lower rental price than he now pays. The system would encourage better production, because the producer would have to rise or fall by the merit of his product.

Deserves Serious Thought

"I believe that the entire industry should give the most serious consideration to this subject, because I believe it would be possible to work out a plan that would prove satisfactory to the great majority of those engaged in the business.

"As far as the new year is concerned, Metro intends to keep its organization elastic and to continue its present policies until practical proofs are provided showing their faults. Metro is not interested in the theories but only in the facts after their demonstration by practical experience and that are not guesses. Metro believes in the elimination of the enormous overhead and reiterates its previous announcement, that on merit it intends to keep after the leadership of the industry."

Wanda Petit, William Fox Star.

Use Letter to Attract Patrons

Exhibitors showing Goldwyn's "Thais" have made effective use of a letter of friendship and salutation written by Mary Garden to the motion picture patrons of America on her first screen appearance. The home office sent out her message in typewritten facsimile, with Miss Garden's signature printed at the close. Exhibitors inserted the name of their city and theater and had reproductions made for distribution on their mailing lists.

One enterprising manager, W. J. Hayes of the Strand Theater, Erie, Pa., got out the letter in engraved announcement form.

The letter, as adapted to a particular city, read:

"Today you may see me in Goldwyn's magnificent production, 'Thais'—at the Strand Theater.

"Just think! I began by not liking motion picture work—and now I adore 'the movies.'

"Where thousands heard or saw me at the opera or in concert, millions now may see me in Goldwyn's 'Thais.'

"It is thrilling!

"Won't you please come to see my 'Thais?'

"Sincerely,

"Mary Garden."

With the letter every exhibitor received from the Goldwyn offices a note suggesting how to make use of it.

Resigns as Goldwyn Manager

Aubrey M. Kennedy has resigned as manager of productions of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and is understood to have completed plans to assume the personal direction of Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese screen star, in an organization of his own to be known as the Master Picture Corporation.

Japanese Settings Built for Picture

Five new productions, including some of the most elaborate and unsual things yet attempted at the Triangle's Culver City studio, have been commenced during the past week. Companies are working night and day to keep ahead of the strenuous production schedule recently set.

Among the new subjects are offerings from the pens of the best known magazine writers as well as an exceptional play by one of the Triangle's staff authors. The research department, under Miss Elsa Lopez, and the costume department, directed by J. S. Fishenden, have been working overtime preparing data and costumes for these new subjects, which include a beautiful Japanese story.

With several faces new to Triangle included in the cast, and costumes costing several thousand dollars, Director E. Mason Hopper has begun work on a new Triangle story, the working title of which is "Mr. Butterfly." The story, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, is a reversal of the situation and characters in the famous story, "Madame Butterfly," by John Luther Long. Elaborate settings for this picture have been constructed for this picture.

Collie Dog Makes Old Studio His Home

Thomas H. Ince has assigned the old Selig studio, which he recently leased, to the Charles Ray company for work on a forthcoming Paramount picture. When the studio was taken over there was an asset that did not appear in the inventory—a collie dog. How the dog lived between leases no one knows, but on the second day the animal, which had evidently been living precariously, emerged from beneath the stage. He was so pleased to see real actors again that he extended the troupe a hearty welcome and got so mixed up in the film that several hundred feet had to be destroyed. The dog was adopted as a mascot and named Ezra.

Mary Pickford Adopts More Soldiers

Mary Pickford has added the 144 aviators of the 14th Aero Squadron, Aviation Section of the Signal Corps, to the family of 600 soldiers to whom she is already godmother. The star and her party, which included Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mrs. Pickford, Conway Tearle, Frances Marion and relatives of the star, were enthusiastically received by the boys camped at San Diego, and Major H. J. Damm, the commanding officer appropriately expressed the appreciation of the soldiers.

Calls "Stella Maris" Pickford's Best

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon his return to New York from California last week, announced the completion of Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Maris," and expressed great enthusiasm over the dual characterization by Mary in this picture. This production was adapted from William J. Locke's well-known book by Frances Marion and staged by Marshall Neilan.

Russ Actress Watches War Closely

Hedda Nova, beautiful young Russian actress recently assigned by Greater Vitagraph to star in special features to be produced under Albert E. Smith's personal direction, is watching anxiously the events now transpiring in her native land. The fate of all the relatives she has on earth is hanging in the balance.

Universal Is Making Third Serial

With "The Mystery Ship" running current and "The Bull's Eye" ready to start releasing Feb. 4, Universal has just begun operations on a third serial to keep the chapter-story pot boiling. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber have reached the tenth episode of "The Mystery Ship," and Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed will be the featured adventurers in "The Bull's Eye," respectively, furnishing a sea story and series of thrills on the cattle ranges.

The new serial will have a jungle plot, where wild animals abound, and Marie Walcamp, in "The Tiger's Claws," will find tests of her courage in handling the menagerie at Universal City during a series of adventures Jacques Jaccard has planned. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber will immediately begin preparations for a chapter thriller to supersede "The Mystery Ship" and Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed will be turned loose on another serial, when "The Bull's Eye" is completed. It is announced that Universal will keep serials overlapping serials throughout the forthcoming year.

Voshell Joins Young Forces

Jack Voshell, who for more than a year has been assistant director under Joseph Kaufman, who recently finished "Shirley Kaye," Clara Kimball Young's latest picture, has been engaged by Harry I. Garson to assist Emile Chautard, the eminent French director, in Miss Young's future releases.

After a service as a director of Bluebird features, approximately two consecutive years, Rupert Julian has terminated his association with that program and will turn his attention to the production, at Universal City, of a superfeature that will run into a number of reels still to be determined.

Two scenes from "A Mother's Sin," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature starring Earle Williams, released on January 28

"The World for Sale," a Paramount picture produced by J. Stuart Blackton, will be a pretentious production. It will be released on January 21st.

"Who Loved Him Best?" Is Ready

Edna Goodrich Brings All Her Emotional Talent to Play in Picture of New York Bohemian Life

BEAUTIFUL Edna Goodrich, in an emotional play of "Bohemian" artistic life in Greenwich Village, the "Latin Quarter" of New York, is announced by Mutual for release February 4 under the title of "Who Loved Him Best?" The production was made under the direction of Dell Henderson and is the sixth Goodrich picture made for Mutual.

Miss Goodrich is cast as Doria Dane, a brilllant star of filmdom, who sacrifices her career to be near the man she loves, a sculptor of genius discouraged by his inability to produce. Posing for the artist, her beauty inspires him to create a masterpiece, but success goes to his head and he neglects her for a woman of fashion. He is brought to a realization of her unselfish love when, after breaking into fragments, as he believes, his masterpiece, she confesses she has saved the original and destroyed a copy, made by a jealous fellow artist.

The situations developed in the "Bohemian" environment are said to afford Miss Goodrich scope for intensive emotional acting surpassing anything she has done since joining the film forces.

Scenes taken in a motion picture studio during the actual production and "shooting" of scenes, gives interesting glimpses of "back-stage" in film plants. A gorgeous "Saturnalia" of the artists of Greenwich Village, which corresponds to the famous "Beaux-Art" ball of the Latin Quarter of Paris, is a spectacular presentation of the irrepressible and irresponsible artists at play.

Carmel Myers Appears in New Picture

Charles Edmund Walk's popular novel, "The Green Seal," an absorbing and thrilling mystery story, is being filmed at the Bluebird west coast studios, under the direction of Stuart Paton, from the screen version by A. G. Kenyon, who recently joined the Bluebird writing staff. Carmel Myers plays the principal feminine role and opposite her appears Ashton Dearholt, who recently finished an engagement of two years with the American Film Company and who makes his bow in Bluebird photoplays in "The Green Seal." In the supporting cast are Betty Schade, Harry Carter, Alfred Allen, Frank Deshon and Frank Tokanaga.

One of the striking features of the production will be the elaborate Chinese settings which have been designed. Though the action occurs in an American metropolis, a band of influential Chinese plays an important part in the production, its work contributing largely to the mystery interwoven in the story.

Big War Tax Receipts

Thomas Behan, deputy U. S. revenue collector at Davenport, Iowa, has reported receipts of admission war tax from twenty-one theaters and dance-halls in his district for the month of November. The total sum was $5,308.35. The report included fifteen theaters and six dance-halls.

Helen Gibson saves a powder train from being blown up by conspirators in a most daring adventure in "The Munitions Plot," the second General Film release, in the new "Daughter of Daring" series produced by Kalem.

Mike Donlin Appears in "Raffles"

A note of interest is loaned to the production of "Raffles, The Amateur Cracksman," by the presence in a prominent role of Mike Donlin, former National League baseball star. His characterization of the thief in "Raffles" marks Mr. Donlin's initial appearance before the camera.

In addition to his record-breaking career on the baseball field, Donlin has had considerable stage experience, having starred on the big time vaudeville circuits throughout the country in company with his wife, the late Mabel Hite. He was the standby of the New York Giants a few seasons back and because of his wonderful hitting was a popular idol in all of the cities embraced by the National League.

E. W. Hornung's story of "Raffles" has gained a world-wide popularity, not only in printed form but in a dramatized version which scored an extraordinary success for several seasons.

Eddie and Lee Are Back at Work

Since Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran returned to Universal City from their vacation journey to what was, at that time, "The Great White Way," these comedians have been busy creating offerings especially written for them by C. B. Hoadley, the "twins" doing their own producing and directing. Gladys Tennyson has become their permanent leading lady.

The Lyons and Moran comedies will soon be listed among Universal's regular offerings. "Hooverizing the Home" and "Home Talent" have been completed, the domestic nature of the titles being continued in the work now in progress, to be called "Home Again,"

"The Cinderella Man" In Record Run

Los Angeles Theater Keeps Picture on for Three Weeks and Stops Only Because of Previously Made Contract

WHAT HAPPENS when a motion picture produce makes a virtually flawless picture that combines the three essentials of star, story and director is now revealed by the record being established by the Goldwyn production of Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," directed by George Loane Tucker.

This unusual production, which created instant comment when released December 16, has just completed a run of twenty-one consecutive days at J. A. Quinn's Rialto Theater, Los Angeles, where the heavy patronage and high receipts of the third week strongly tempted Mr. Quinn to continue the presentation for a fourth week. This was made impossible, however, because of his previously made contracts.

As indicating the box-office power and public popularity of Goldwyn productions, it may be pointed out that "The Cinderella Man" is by no means the first Goldwyn production to enjoy a lengthened run at Quinn's Rialto. "Polly of the Circus" was played for two consecutive weeks; "Baby Mine" for two; "The Spreading Dawn" for two; "The Auction Block" for two. And now, to top this, "The Cinderella Man" plays for three weeks, establishing what is undoubtedly a record for length of booking for a regularly scheduled release of a producing company.

Another production distributed by Goldwyn, though not produced by the company, which is sweeping the country and proving a tremendous profit-maker for exhibitors is "For the Freedom of the World," the sensational "thriller" written by Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser. The Goldwyn offices throughout North America report that eighty-five per cent of the theaters that have booked and played this feature to date have already played repeat dates or booked the production for repeat dates later on. It is by all odds the most dramatic and thrilling of all the pictures made with the world war as its theme.

In the Ohio territory, following the presentation of this production at one of the military cantonments, the publicity thus created resulted in several score of bookings in the Cleveland and Cincinnati zones and to date not an exhibitor in North America has reported other than big attendance and profit on this spectacular war drama.

Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy, bringing Miss Normand back to the screen after a year's absence, also promises fully to uphold the drawing power of recent Goldwyn productions. The Goldwyn managers predict that "Dodging a Million" will be even more successful than any Goldwyn production thus far, with the possible exception of the great Mary Garden picturization of "Thais."

MOTOGRAPHY this week appears with less than the usual number of illustrations. The reason is the failure of photo-engraving houses to do the work, all such establishments having been closed down for five days in compliance with the order of the national fuel administration. MOTOGRAPHY therefore asks the indulgence of its readers and at the same time assures them that its standard will be maintained and improved in future barring a further shut-down of industry such as the one just past.

Seeks Public's Opinion on His Pictures

Managing Director Carl Laemmle of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., wants to be put squarely in "the know" on the subject of the drawing power Bluebirds manifest in equal opposition with rival programs of feature productions. To find out exactly how Bluebirds draw with the general public as the court of final decision, exchange managers throughout the country will undertake to render an exact report on a definite date as to the drawing power of every program that may be exhibited in specified localities covering the country.

Mrs. Wilson Sees Doug. Fairbanks Picture

For the first time, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President, attended a motion picture theater in Washington last week, when she viewed Douglas Fairbanks in his latest Artcraft picture, "A Modern Musketeer." The showing of this production at Loew's Columbia in Washington necessitated a guard of special police to handle the crowds which stormed the theater.

Burton Finishes First Picture Job

Frederick Burton, who plays "Cousin Egbert" in George K. Spoor's "Ruggles of Red Gap," has returned to New York, having finished his portion of this Taylor Holmes production. Mr. Burton created this role in the original stage presentation of "Ruggles of Red Gap." This is to be his first appearance in pictures.

De Mille Directs New Play

Only those who are acquainted with the methods employed by Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in his direction of a film production realize the extent to which he will go to secure absolute realism and make a picture convincing. Furthermore, by means of the most carefully conceived lighting methods he achieves those Rembrandt-like effects that have been remarked in his numerous exceptional productions—such as "Joan the Woman" and "The Woman God Forgot," both starring Geraldine Farrar.

In "The Whispering Chorus," the new Cecil B. De Mille special production now in the making, and to be released on its completion by Artcraft, those evidences of a master-touch will be found in every detail of the picture, it is assured. Impressed by the power of the story itself, the work of Perley Poore Sheehan, with the scenario by Jeanie Macpherson, author of "The Woman God Forgot," and many other notable pictures, Mr. De Mille determined to make of the production something, if possible, even more impressive than his previous works.

Caprice Begins New Production

June Caprice has begun another sparkling comedy drama for the William Fox productions. Bernard Thornton, a recent addition to the Fox forces, is the new leading man. Included in the cast are Joseph Kilgour, the noted actor, who appeared in "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Easiest Way," and George Bunny, a brother of the famous John Bunny, who was one of the most beloved of all players of the shadow stage.

Standard's Films Are Selling

Phil. L. Ryan, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, has just returned to his home office from an extended stay in New York and announces that company officials are highly elated with the volume of business being done. The William S. Hart two-reel productions have met with an enthusiastic reception in each of the ten middle western states controlled by the Standard.

To Distribute Educationals

Arrangements just concluded between the Educational Film Corporation and Foursquare Pictures will result in the distribution, through the latter concern, of the famous Bruce and Newman scenics and the Ditmar animal pictures in several of the Foursquare exchanges.

Swedish Actress Makes American Bow

Kaj Gynt, an actress well known on the Swedish stage and screen, plays the role of Kate in support of Ethel Barrymore in "The Eternal Mother," adapted by Mary Murillo from the novel of Sidney McCall, and directed by Frank Reicher.

Miss Gynt is of Viking ancestry and is the possessor of numerous copper heirlooms handed down from the days of the great Norsemen. She made her professional appearance at the age of thirteen years in a large spectacular production of "Hop O' My Thumb." This production, in which she played the leading feminine role of Lisa, was staged at the Swedish king's Glass or Society Palace at Marstrand.

For three years Miss Gynt played leading roles at the Royal Dramatic Theater in Stockholm. Here she was seen in plays by Strindberg, Shakespeare, Ibsen and other celebrated dramatists. In Strindberg's celebrated play "Easter," Miss Gynt played the role of Eleanor, at a command performance before King Oscar of Sweden. She considers her part of Nastea. in Gorky's "A Night's Lodging," her best role.

Miss Gynt is a typical out-door girl of the north. She is a great swimmer, skater and an expert on the skiis. One of her delights is to drive a spirited pair of horses across the snow while standing on her skiis.

Her motion picture debut was made with the Swedish Film Company. She has also played for the Kino Company of Germany and several Scandinavian film companies. Most of her work has been in features of four or five reels. She is playing her first important part in an American picture production with the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Pick MacLane Cast with Care

A contrasting group of players supports Mary MacLane, the famous writer, in her first and only photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," produced by George K. Spoor.

Considerable thought was given to the selection of the six characters, ranging from that of a prize fighter of crude though honest heart, to a literary man of disdainful and fearless disposition.

Each of the six is designed to represent a different type of suitor and are cast as: The Callow Youth, played by Ralph Graves; the Literary Man, by R. Paul Harvey; The Younger Son, by Cliff Worman; The Prize Fighter, by Aladar Prince; The Bank Clerk, by Clarence Derwent, and The Husband of Another, by Fred Tiden.

Miss MacLane, by reason of her remarkable literary mind, created her own material for the picture, drawn largely from her intimate knowledge of human nature. The six types of suitors are each exact and distinctive.

The release date of "Men Who Have Made Love to Me" will be announced later.

Tourneur Directs Miss Clark

Maurice Tourneur has shown his great capacity for work, when, after only a few days' rest, following the completion of "The Blue Bird," the big Maeterlinck spectacle for Artcraft, he undertook the direction of Marguerite Clark in "Prunella" last week, for Paramount.

"Prunella" is the delightful story in which Miss Clark made one of her greatest successes on the stage. The play was written by Lawrence Housman and Granville Barker, and was presented at the Little Theater, New York, three years ago. The screen version for Paramount is by Charles Maigne, who has contributed the scenarios for many notable productions for Paramount and Artcraft.

New Lois Weber Picture Is Under Way

Lois Weber is engaged in the photographing of her third independent production, "The Man Who Dared God," a dramatic portrayal of a strong man's redemption, based upon her own story of the same name. "The Man Who Dared God" has gold mines and gold mining as a general background in developing the story.

Automobile in Studio Runs Amuck

During the filming this week of a couple of scenes in "The House of Glass," the new production which Clara Kimball Young with her own company is making in her New Rochelle studio for Select Pictures, it became necessary to bring an automobile into the building for use in one of them.

Carpenters were called into conference and a part of the lower wall was hastily cut out. A runway was constructed and rammed into the gap in the wall. By dark everything was ready and set for action in the morning. But during the night the weather man took a hand and laid a coating of hard, slippery ice over everything. When it came time to haul Miss Young's limousine into the building, the men at the rope found they had an exceedingly difficult task.

Ashes were sprinkled about plentifully and a fresh start was made. About midway up the incline, one of the workers stepped on an uncovered surface of ice and his fall dragged down his helpers. In a struggling mass men and car shot down the runway and charged a throng of interested spectators. The man who slipped was sent to the hospital with a broken arm.

Issues Salesmen's Guide

For the first time since the Universal has issued serials, the full story of "The Mystery Ship" with scenes from all episodes, has been compiled in catalog form and delivered to salesmen.

This photograph shows the crowd attracted to the Rialto Theater in New York at the time of the showing of "The Daughter of Destiny," Madam Olga Petrova's first release.

Mabel Normand Starts New Picture

Goldwyn stars have been fortunate enough to secure assignments to pleasant South Georgia locations during the recent cold snap—all but Mabel Normand, who was busily completing the last scenes in "Dodging a Million," with Director Tucker, in spite of the handicaps as to heat, light and other necessities under which Fort Lee, N. J., has been laboring since Christmas.

Mabel Normand is still braving prospects of cold weather. She has just begun work in the great glass studio on a new Goldwyn Picture, as yet unnamed. It will give her as decidedly novel a part as either of the other two pictures she has made for Goldwyn, "Dodging a Million" in which Miss Normand plays a dresser in a modiste's shop suddenly transformed into an heiress, or "Joan of Plattsburg," which, as soon as the Federal ban against certain of its training camp scenes is lifted, will show Miss Normand drawn into the war preparations of America.

In her newest picture, Miss Normand invades a newspaper office as "copy girl"—another feminization of male activities due to war times. From the newspaper office, where she is more or less of a humorous figure, she is launched into the vortex of a great criminal plot agitating the under world and centering about a famous rescue mission. The girl's clever solution of the mystery and the "beat" which she scores for her paper furnish the series of thrills, dashed with humor, with which the story ends.

Russell Saves Family from Fire

William Russell, athletic hero of the American Film Company, put on an involuntary hero stunt the other night that netted him one life, a pair of badly burned hands, scorched eyebrows, a blistered car and the gratitude of an entire family.

With his wife, Charlotte Burton, Mr. Russell was returning home in his big racing car from a theater, when he noticed that the forest fires that had been raging for three days in canyons near Santa Barbara had suddenly gained fierce headway. A big crowd of forest rangers and volunteer fire fighters had gathered to help fight the flames when Russell drove up. The only entrance to the canyon was over an ancient wooden bridge, across which the only family living in the canyon was being taken. They were safely across the bridge, which had begun to scorch under the flames, when it was discovered that the wife and mother had returned to the house to secure some family treasure.

While the family huddled together in fright, Russell opened up his high-powered car, dashed across the bridge to the burning home, found the terror-stricken woman trying to fight her way out through the smoke and returned to safety through a wall of smoke and flame.

He gathered the frightened little family in his big car and took them home for the night, until they could secure other quarters.

Russell scorched his hair and now has his car in the repair shop for a new coat of paint.

Build Bungalow in Studio

For the staging of scenes in "An American Widow," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay starring Ethel Barrymore, the complete interior of a cozy bungalow was erected at the Metro studio.

Much of the important action of this comedy takes place in a bungalow, and it was deemed wise to build the entire interior with its connecting rooms, so that the players could make natural entrances and exits from one room to another. The bungalow set consisted of a large living room with a firepace, two bedrooms and a kitchen.

She Faces Hard Winter

Thieves who recently looted the Culver City postoffice got away with a consignment of expensive boots from New York, addressed to Miss Texas Guinan, Triangle star, and she fears she will have to go barefooted.

Mary Pickford Leads in Popularity

In its December issue, the Motion Picture Magazine began a referendum to determine which photoplays, in the opinion of the public, were the finest and strongest produced during the year 1917. A response came from 5,000 readers, and when the votes were tabulated only those subjects receiving at least fifty endorsements were considered. Mary Pickford in Artcraft held first, second and third positions, according to the February issue of the magazine, in "The Little American," "Poor Little Rich Girl" and "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Of the thirty-eight plays listed, sixteen are Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

Do You Remember?

When Mabel Normand was known only as the "Biograph diving girl," and Charles Murray was Hogan in a series of their comedy releases?

When Alice Joyce played Western stuff for Vitagraph, and William Ridgeley was her leading man?

When Pathe first presented trick films, with miniature acrobats doing stunts on a woman's hand?

When Sidney Drew went into the "movies" with Vitagraph and Ralph Ince acted as his foil in a two-reel comedy?

When Florence Lawrence was one of the leading screen stars, and Mary Pickford was unknown?

When Henry Dixey did "David Garrick" back in 1909, and it was a fizzle because it was a two-reeler and considered too long?

When Mary Miles Minter played on the speaking stage in "The Littlest Rebel," and carried the honors of the production away—with Dustin and William Farnum playing the leads?

When Lillian Gish danced as a member of the chorus in support of Gertrude Hoffman in her version of Mendelssohn's "Spring Song?"

When Charlie Chaplin played in a vaudeville sketch?

When John Bunny was the leading screen comedian?

When "Broncho Billy" was a great screen hero?

Sherill Heads Cast

"The Crucible of Life," the latest seven-part war spectacle which General Enterprises, Inc., are at present offering for state right distribution, contains a notable cast of stage and screen players. The picture is an adaptation of Bartley Campbell's famous melodrama of bygone days, "Fairfax," a country-wide legitimate success for many years. Jack Sherill and Grace Darmond head a notable cast.

Do You Always Get What You Want?

Fox Forces Are Still Crowded

Although he recently increased his facilities in the east by taking over the former Victor studio, in New York, William Fox again has found himself cramped for space and has made a temporary arrangement for utilization of facilities at the Biograph studio in the Bronx. Director J. Gordon Edwards, now engaged on a picture at Fort Lee, recently worked at the Biograph studio for a short time and he has been followed by Richard Stanton, who is directing the making of "Rough and Ready," a William Farnum de luxe production. Mr. Farnum later will go north for two or three weeks to do work on locations.

Cabanne Goes to Coast

William Christy Cabanne has left New York for the west coast to produce his own pictures in Los Angeles. For several months the director has been making preparations for his company, but so far has given little information about his plans. Mr. Cabanne's defection was disclosed when offices of the William Christy Cabanne Producing Company were opened in the Longacre Building. J. L. Barnard, who exploited Thomas Ince's "Civilization" and has been responsible for much of the work on the Cabanne organization, is in charge of the New York branch.

Clune Reserves All Seats

After having played "A Man's Man" which was the first Paralta Play to be released and which broke all his house records, W. H. Clune of Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles, Cal., has decided to reserve all seats in his theater for the presentation of "Madam Who," in which Bessie Barriscale makes her debut as a Paralta star, and has placed seats on sale one week in advance of the showing of the production.

Brings in Many Contracts

When William Fox announced that "Jack Spurlock-Prodigal" with George Walsh as star would be given without extra charge to all exhibitors who, on January 30, were listed as having contracted for Fox Special Features, he made a "ten strike." Hundreds of exhibitors recognizing the box office value of this film made from the story written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of Saturday Evening Post, signed yearly contracts feeling assured that the opportunity should be taken advantage of.

Plays Part of Literary Plumber

Triangle-Keystone director Herman Raymaker, has begun the filming of a comedy, "A Playright's Wrong," in which a notable cast, headed by Billy Franey and Maude Wayne will be featured. Franey, as a retired plumber, whose inclinations turn to love and literature, has a role that gives ample scope for his skill as a fun maker. Others in the cast are Ward Caulfield, Dora Rodgers, Milton Sims, Lloyd Bacon and Martin Kinney.

"For Liberty" Has Patriotic Theme

"For Liberty," one of the latest of the William Fox photoplays in which Gladys Brockwell is starred, has a timely and patriotic theme. Soldiers go "over the top" and the battlefield scenes are among the best in motion pictures.

Jack Gilbert Returns to Triangle

Jack Gilbert, well-known juvenile, who appeared in several Triangle feature productions, is back at the Culver City studios after an absence of several weeks and is cast in Director Jack Dillon's latest subject, "Betty Comes Home." Gilbert supporting Myrtle Lind, of the comedy beauties, who has the title role.

Film President's Niece Weds

Mildred Burstein, niece of the president of the King-Bee Films Corp., has become the bride of Harry Naughton, studio manager of the corporation. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's uncle at Hollywood. Lou Burstein gave the bride away, and Billy West acted as best man.

Gloria Swanson Is Back

Gloria Swanson, the brunette beauty who has appeared in many Keystone comedies in the past, has returned to the fold and will begin work at once at the Culver City studios in one and two-reel Triangle-Keystone comedies.

Plans Novelty Single Reels

Beginning February 2, General Film will have a new product to offer in semi-monthly single reel subjects called Novelty Films, the product of the Merkel Film Co., of Cincinnati.

Cobb Is a Colonel

Irvin S. Cobb is now a colonel. The former Kentucky newspaper man has been commissioned by Governor A. O. Stanley of Kentucky as an aide on his staff. Colonel Cobb is now, by virtue of his title, a real "Kentucky colonel."

Complete New Vitagraph Feature

Final scenes were made last week for "The Wooing of Princess Pat," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature in which Gladys Leslie and J. Frank Glendon are to be starred.

Bradley Barker with Fox

Bradley Barker has returned to the William Fox forces for an important role in "A Heart's Revenge," starring Mme. Sonia Markova. This picture is among the January releases.

WRITTEN BY MOTOGRAPHY'S TRAINED MOTION PICTURE REVIEWERS

"Fields of Honor"

Goldwyn Picture Starring Mae Marsh, Released January 13. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

MAE MARSH continues under the Goldwyn banner to supply characterizations which are pleasing to all. In her latest picture, Irvin S. Cobb has accumulated a world of heart-gripping incidents and putting them all together a wonderfully interesting story has been evolved.

Vividly portraying the horror of war and showing remarkable battle scenes, then changing to placid homelike touches, Director Ralph Ince has handled exceptionally well the situations which arise. Withal it is a picture well worth seeing and should not fail to satisfy.

The story: Marie Messereau, migrating to America from France with her brother, sister and a friend of her sister, meets Robert Vorhis, a young American artist returning home after his studies. Later the lonely travelers are settled in their new found home, Marie and her brother have found work and they are happy. Then one day Marie again meets Robert in the florist's where she is working. Attracted by her piquancy he asks her to pose for him and she goes to his home next day and there meets his parents. Although theirs has been a short acquaintance, their mutual affection is plainly evident and Robert tells his parents that he intends to marry the girl. They induce him to wait and his mother takes him out to California with her and Marie is left alone with her shattered romance.

Then comes the shot that rang around the world—the murder of the Austrian grand duke in Servia; follows the declarations of war and Marie's brother returns to his mother country to do his duty. Her sister's fiance also goes but to serve Germany and not France. The two girls are left alone and Marie finds the struggle for existence becoming harder. The sister despairs with her sweetheart's departure and falls ill.

Meanwhile the brother on the battlefields of war-torn France in an attack on a German trench meets the other in the German uniform and mid the shots and flying shells the two clasp each other but the German is killed by a stray shot and the brother returns safely to his trench. When Marie gets the letter from her brother she dares not show it to her sister, who is now dangerously ill. Marie goes for the doctor and while she is gone the sister finds the letter and realizing that she is a burden turns on the gas, leaving a note of farewell. Marie finds her dead and now utterly despondent decides to return to France. Robert has, however, returned from California and learns of her misfortunes; he hurries to the boat which is about ready to leave and takes Marie back home with him. And Marie with someone to keep her from loneliness decides that America is not so bad a place after all.

"The Eagle's Eye"

Wharton Serial for Early Release. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

WHAT promises to be one of the most thrilling and at the same time enlightening serials which has ever been released is shortly to make its appearance under the caption, "The Eagle's Eye."

While a fictional trend runs throughout the first two episodes, and which will continue until the end, due to the fact that it would not be a good policy for the government to allow the inner workings of the United States Secret Service to be divulged, the story is built upon facts which were compiled by William J. Flynn during his activities as Chief of the United States Secret Service Bureau.

The action of the picture is based upon the activities of the former German Ambassador, Count Von Bernstorff, and his lieutenants, Captain Von Papen and Captain Boy-Ed, in their efforts from the time war was declared in August, 1914, to embarrass and interfere with the United States in pursuing a neutral commercial policy with England and her allies.

King Baggot as president of the Criminology Club, and Marguerite Snow, portraying the part of an ex-actress, who is a Secret Service operative, play the leading roles. Such investigations as they make in frustrating the plots emanating from the Germany embassy, are shown to be made under the direction of Chief Flynn. Not only is it shown how these despicable German intrigues are prevented from being successfully carried out, but also what the consequences would have been are clearly outlined which lends a very timely atmosphere to the serial and also provides many thrills.

From the exhibitor's viewpoint this serial should prove a good drawing power, inasmuch as each episode ends with the result in doubt and surely those who have seen the preceding action will want to learn the result.

As the action of the serial dates from the beginning of the war in 1914, early releases will be devoted to the activities of Von Bernstorff from that time until the United States became an active participant. However, the story has been so cleverly constructed that later releases will be devoted to exposing the German propaganda and espionage which has taken place in this country since Congress declared war in April. Not only does the serial promise to be attractive from the point of entertainment but from its timely interest should arouse the patriotism of every American.

"Vengeance and the Woman"

Vitagraph Serial, Episode No. 6, Featuring William Duncan and Carol Holloway. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

WE left Blake and his wife in rather precarious positions in the last episode. Blake had fallen into a raging river and his wife was about to be attacked by a huge bear. In the latest episode the outlaws have returned to Eagle Rock and see the bear; they kill the beast and carry the woman back to their cabin. Blake has been rescued by the sheriff's posse and gives chase. The chase leads him over a bridge and when he is half way across the entire structure is dynamited. Blake escapes unscathed, and continuing the pursuit, comes to the cabin of the outlaws. Here he is set upon by the outlaws and is severely beaten by them. They tie him and attaching the other end of the rope to his saddle, one of the men whips up his horse and rides recklessly across the plain, dragging Blake behind him.

"Beauty and the Rogue"

Mary Miles Minter's Latest American-Mutual Play Up to Standard. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MARY MILES MINTER grows prettier with each succeeding picture. She is charming in this story, which is full of opportunity for her. Her role is varied; she appears first as a society girl, then as a mischievous boy and at last as a ballet dancer, and she plays each phase cleverly and daintily. She is especially amusing when masquerading as a boy, but she is very good in every part of the picture.

Alan Forrest plays opposite. He is a very good selection as Miss Minter's leading man, for his wholesome naturalness and quiet humor are very effective as a contrast to the star's pranks and caprices. The whole company in this picture is excellent and it is by no means simply a vehicle for its star. Spottiswood Aitken and Orral Humphrey do especially clever comedy work. Lucille Ward and Clarence Burton also make much of their roles, while the many types in the supporting cast are excellently chosen.

The story contains a number of out of the ordinary and humorous situations. It is unhackneyed and clever in plot, and though occasionally there is a jerkiness of action and things are not always clear, as a whole the picture is one which delights audiences generally. It is excellent entertainment.

The photography is excellent, as usual with American plays. The locations are well chosen. Henry King directed. The picture is ready for release January 28.

The Story: Roberta Lee, called "Bobby," becomes interested in prison up-lift work. Bill Dorgan, a convict, gains her sympathy and when he is released she persuades her father to give him a job as gardener. Dorgan steals jewels and silver from the Lee home and runs away.

To cure Bobby of her fancies, her father sends her to visit her old nurse in the country. There Bobby meets Richard Van Stone (Alan Forrest). He sees her garbed in over-alls, working in the garden, and believes she is a boy.

One evening at a local entertainment Bobby does a fancy dance in ballet costume. She is billed as "Mlle. Tiptop," and Richard does not recognize in the dancer his friend Bobby. He falls in love with the stranger and sends her a brooch. Bobby recognizes it as one which had been stolen from her, and, deciding that Richard is the thief, has him arrested. He states that he bought the jewel from a tramp and reveals his identity as a member of Bobby's father's company. He learns who Bobby is also, and when the two return to the city they announce their engagement.

"The Fighting Grin"

Franklyn Farnum in Bluebird Comedy-Drama of January 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS comedy drama approaches farce, and it is performed with so much spirit and speed that it may be classed as one of the best this star has played in. It consists of a series of very improbable but funny situations, well strung together, and a large part of its entertainment value comes from the fact that one waits to see what wild thing will happen next. The authors, R. E. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, show inventive power in preparing the plot, and Director Joseph de Grasse has given it a good presentation. Farnum is at his best in the hero's role and acts with more spontaneity and less forced vigor than usual.

Edith Johnson, Farnum's new leading lady, is pretty and plays her role well. J. Morris Foster, Charles H. Mailes and Fred Montague, in the supporting cast, contribute good acting. The technical details are well taken care of. As a whole, the picture is good and will meet success among all comedy loving audiences.

The Story: Billy Kennedy and Margie Meredith are in love, but their fathers are enemies. Billy bets his father that he will elope with Margie. Meredith intends that his daughter shall marry Harold de Vandeveer, a society butterfly. Billy and Margie plan to elope to the Kennedy ranch in the west. But Billy's father through a trick separates them and Margie's father arrives on the scene with Harold. A "bad man," escaping from the police, complicates matters by stealing first Billy's clothes, then the garb of a minister. Billy, in the westerner's outfit, steals the girl from her father and Harold and is married to her by the minister who had been the outlaw's second victim.

"His Robe of Honor"

Henry B. Walthall in Paralta Play, Released January 15. Reviewed by Charles Wesley

PARALTA has produced another good one. Henry B. Walthall, long considered by many to be the peer of screen actors, makes his first appearance as a Paralta star. The story used is that of "His Robe of Honor," written by Ethel and James Dorrance. Many who see this picture will probably doubt that such things as happen actually take place, but the co-authors having both had many years of journalistic experience which allowed them to see the inside of the deep political intrigues practiced in nearly all of the large cities have so clearly woven their story together, one comes away believing that many of the things he reads in the newspapers from time to time regarding the crooked methods of unscrupulous politicians, are true.

"His Robe of Honor" is a story of the regeneration of a young lawyer who started on the crooked path early in his career. With the assistance of capable perjurers it was very easy for him to defeat the ends of justice and reap large financial rewards. However, as in the case of most of those who are treading the wrong path through life, there was in this young lawyer an ambition to reach his goal and reach it honestly. In "His Robe of Honor" love is the power which solves the problem.

Walthall's interpretation of Julian Randolph, the shyster lawyer who afterwards becomes an honored judge of the Supreme Court is very cleverly and convincingly done. The action of the story does not depend on thrills to get it over, but runs smoothly throughout. Interwoven through it all is an intensely human strain of the love of a noble girl and it is due to the ideals of this good woman that the regeneration takes place, allowing the story to end in a manner pleasing to all.

The cast supporting Mr. Walthall has been very capably selected and the photography at all times is of the best. It is safe to say that Paralta Plays if they continue to produce pictures of this caliber are due to build up a very strong following wherever they are shown.

"The Superstitious Girl"

Number Three in the James Montgomery Flagg Series, "Girls You Know." Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE third of the one-reel comedies in the series made by the Edison Company, based on the Flagg drawings of "Girls You Know," is produced in the same high class manner, with fine photography and tinting, skilled playing and satisfactory settings. Although it deals with a common failing, superstititon, it does not contain as much humor, either in situations or subtitles, as either of the first two comedies. It is entertaining, however, and novel. The illustrator appears in the introduction to the comedy.

The plot of the comedy, if it may be called a plot, is woven about the visit to relatives of a superstitious girl. The various things she must do, "for luck," range from picking up stray pins and drinking the bubbles in her coffee cup, to smashing all the mirrors in the house when she accidentally breaks one. Her fashion of blaming every event, good or bad, upon some lucky or unluck sign, is also exasperating to her relatives. They rejoice when her visit is ended.

"The Menace"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Starring Corinne Griffiith and Evart Overton, Released January 21. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

THAT blood will tell is the theory from which is evolved this latest Vitagraph feature. Although patterned along familiar lines the story is given an added twist of mystery and notwithstanding the fact that the inevitable ending is discernible early in the story it is worked out to a pleasing conclusion. The story dwells upon the belief of a man that good environments will prove stronger than blood heritage.

And although laboring under the assumption that he is of different parentage than he supposed, the hero struggles with the menace and finally supplies sufficient proof of his regal lineage. Evart Overton as Richard Burnell gives a convincing portrayal of the character and is ably assisted by Corinne Griffith and a capable supporting cast.

The story: Richard Burnell has been adopted by the Burnells and reared as their own child. He has just become engaged to Virginia Denton and, hurrying home to tell his parents of his happiness, meets Morgan, a crook, who tells him that he is his father. This statement is substantiated when Richard goes to the asylum and sees the records which prove his real identity. By threatening to disclose him Morgan coerces Richard into robbing several of the homes to which he and his fiance are invited. The Burnells notice Richard's disturbed appearance when the robberies are reported and accounts published in the papers and fear that heredity is proving more potent than environment.

When Morgan and Richard are discovered in the Denton home by Virginia, Morgan escapes and Richard is left to explain. The girl realizes her position and breaks the engagement. Richard finally revolts against the life of crime he is being forced to lead and plans to have the police get him and Morgan on the next job. Having failed once at the Denton home the two return there and are caught by the police. Morgan then reveals Richard as the real child of Burnell who he kidnapped years ago and placed in the asylum as his own child. All fears as to his tendencies now removed, Virginia and Richard continue in their courtship.

"The Gun Woman"

Triangle Production Starring Texas Guinan, Released January 27. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

THERE have been gunmen of all types and creeds, nationalities and all else comprised in the makeup of a western bad man, but there has yet to appear a more formidable gunwoman than is Texas Guinan in this latest Triangle release. For a swiftly moving typical wild western picture this one fills the bill.

Constant association with the men of the plains had made the Tigress the most feared, yet at times greatly admired, woman in a border town of Texas. A more hard-hearted female the men had never known but even she was susceptible to the greatest passion—love; and when the man came along who she thought was sincere and then double-crossed her, she wreaked her vengeance in her parlance of the law.

Francis MacDonald makes a suave prepossessing gent who meets a rather violent death at the hands of the Gun Woman.

The story: The Tigress is the owner of a saloon and dance hall appropriately titled the Devil's Kitchen. For months the surrounding country had been terrorized by a bandit who became known as the Collector and when the stage brings in a terrified Bostonian who complains because of his being relieved of his money by the hold-up man, the Tigress passes around a hat and turns the collection over to the tenderfoot. Time passes and brings the Gent into the Devil's Kitchen and the chance meeting with the Tigress turns into a declaration of mutual admiration. The woman in the Tigress now becomes plainly evident and the men are astounded when she announces that the Gent and she are partners in the saloon. The Bostonian has been appointed a deputy by the sheriff and becomes suspicious of the Gent. One day the Gent induces the Tigress to give him some money and under the pretense of investing it in a legitimate business the Gent goes to a neighboring town.

There he opens up a saloon in competition with his former partner and when the Tigress hears of it she gives the Gent just one month in which to repay her. Meanwhile the Bostonian has expressed his love for the woman and reveals himself as a detective detailed to round up the Collector. Having confirmed his suspicions that the Gent and the Collector are one and the same party the two proceed to the Gent's place. Refusing to pay back the money he had misapprehended the Tigress exacts payment in her own manner and the Gent falls mortally wounded. The saloon now a mass of flames and patronage again assured her the Tigress turns to the Bostonian for solace.

"Her American Husband"

Triangle Production Starring Teddy Sampson, Released January 27. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

EVOLVED along lines similar to those of that far-famed Japanese opera, Madam Butterfly, Triangle have in this an altogether pleasing drama. Although the opera ended with the death of the little Japanese girl, the author of this story has seen fit to make the man pay the penalty of duplicity and so the last scene sees the happiness of Cherry Blossom completed with her return to her oriental lover. There is the American tourist who chances to meet the charming Japanese but again a little change is effected, in that after marrying her in oriental fashion the American takes her back to his own country with him.

Teddy Sampson enacts the role of Cherry Blossom with sincere emotion and Darrell Foss as her American husband is equally as acceptable. A supporting cast thoroughly Japanese, headed by Jack Abbe and Thomas Kurihara, supply the necessary far-eastern atmosphere.

The story: Herbert Franklyn, having had his engagement broken, by a turn of fate lands in Japan on business for his employers. There he meets Cherry Blossom, daughter of a merchant who has modern ideals and desires his daughter to marry a man of wealth and influence from the western country. Cherry Blossom is in love with Kato but obeying her father's wishes, marries the American. Back in America Franklyn takes a house out in the suburbs of the great city and leaves his wife, now very much in love with him, while he continues in his riotous living. Time passes and Cherry Blossom, soon to become a mother, has been utterly neglected by Franklyn, who has again won the love of his former fiance and their betrothal is announced.

Meanwhile Kato has had no word from Cherry Blossom and one day dreams of Cherry Blossom in her distress. He confides in her father and together they go to America to find the girl. The father now bent on vengeance keeps Franklyn in hand and learns of his approaching marriage. Kato goes to Cherry Blossom and finds her disconsolate, her child having died. Then Franklyn thinks of his Japanese wife and, remorseful, goes to see her. He finds the house vacant and believing that Cherry Blossom is somewhere around the place sits down and suddenly feels a silk scarf thrown about his neck. Believing it to be Cherry Blossom he submits genially; then feels his breath becoming harder looks upward and sees her father. Slowly but surely that scarf is tightened around his neck until he is dead. And Cherry Blossom returns home with Kato to be loved faithfully by him.

"The Spirt of '17"

Paramount-Lasky Production Starring Jack Pickford, Early Release. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

BUBBLING over with boyish enthusiasm for the military and love of country strengthened by constant companionship with veterans of former wars, makes this latest Paramount offering, with Jack Pickford, a photoplay of unique interest. Judge Willis Brown of the Chicago Juvenile Court, a keen judge of youth in all its varied classes, wrote this play and must have had Jack Pickford in mind when he did so, for that gifted juvenile star is at his best as young Davy Glidden. Interspersed with the patriotic theme is woven a spy plot which brings out more minutely the strength of Davy's devotion to his country.

An old soldier's home, with its many heroes of the Civil and Spanish wars, furnishes a patriotic background and adds materially to the plot. It is with the help of these men, old in service that a German spy plot is uncovered. The timely appeal of the story capably interpreted by a zealous cast stamp this as a sure-fire hit.

The Story: Davey Glidden is a boy scout and devoted to Captain Norton, an inmate of the Old Soldiers' Home, of which Davy's father is superintendent. The captain revels in telling how he captured spies during the Civil war and finds an enraptured listener in Davy, who in the spirit of the times longs to be able to do his bit for the flag. There is a mine in the vicinity of the Glidden home and Davy is a frequent vsitor; on one of the visits he sees two men skulking around and his suspicions are aroused. He follows the men and later is surprised to see an aeroplane rise from the very spot where the men had hidden. His faith in the old captain brings him to that party and the old veteran and the boy scout plan to get the spies.

The next day the two trail after the plotters and the captain recognizes them as mine workers. The old soldier confides to Davy that he had long suspected that these men were responsible for the restlessness among the mine workers. The two plotters are conspiring with other men to cause a strike and then blow up the mine. Davy and the captain enlist the aid of the inmates of the home, and despite their age they all shoulder their old guns, unloaded but nevertheless dangerous looking. That night they tramp in military formation to the rendezvous of the German agents and when the aeroplane again makes its appearance the veterans surround the conspirators and capture them. Then the regiment of veterans marches to the mine, stop the strike now gathering momentum and so enthuse the strikers with their spirit and enthusiasm that the strike is called off. So the mine is saved and Davy gets his opportunity of doing his bit for the flag.

"Gates of Happiness"

World Pictures Starring Madge Evans, Early Release. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

HERE is a picture free from sex problems, war plots, mystery and other ingredients which have become necessary for the usual run of photoplay drama. Although a time-worn plot is the foundation upon which this picture is constructed, it has been skillfully handled by Director Harley Knoles, and the characters humanly portrayed. It is a story of a young man who is disinherited by his father for marrying against his wishes and who several years later, due to adversity, decides to rob his own home.

Of course there is the child who leads to the reconciliation and all ends happily when the son is taken back to the fold. But in this case it is the brother who proves the obstacle to the gates of gladness and this of course deviates from established precedent and at the same time adds another twist to the story. Madge Evans, the popular juvenile star of the World forces, is delightfully pleasing as the key to the gates of happiness. Her childish actions and easy manner mark her, despite her youth, as a finished star. Niles Welch makes his debut under the World banner and acquits himself creditably.

The Story: Myron Leeds asks his father for his consent to marry Helen Palmer and the master of the house of Leeds refuses. Indignant because of this parental objection, he marries Helen and is disinherited for doing so. Confidence in his artistic capabilities to provide for his wife and a pride that had long been a distinguishing mark of the Leeds prompt him to make the resolution never to enter the house again.

Roger Leeds, the older son, is of a nature similar to his father and takes sides against his brother. Eight years pass and Roger has become head of the household. He has married but his reclusive nature makes his wife unhappy. Myron is struggling along to provide for his wife and child. Nora, a faithful servant in the Leeds family for some time, visits Myron and induces him to allow her to take his daughter with her back to the home of Roger.

The child is introduced as a niece of the servant and time and constant meetings tend to endear her in the hearts of Roger and his wife. Meanwhile Myron has had a hard time and finally in despair he resolves to go to his old home and take what he needs. That night he enters the place and is discovered by his daughter. Roger has also discovered him but not knowing who the intruder is, fires in the dark and when the lights go up the little girl is found to have been wounded by the shot. Roger repents, Myron swallows his pride, and the two families are united under the one roof again.

"Rimrock Jones"

Paramount-Lasky Production Featuring Wallace Reid, Released January 14. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

A VIRILE, stirring tale of the far west is the latest vehicle for Wallace Reid. Opportunities galore are presented and he takes advantage of all in exhibiting his prowess as a son of the plains. The story, provided by Dane Coolidge, relates the experiences of Rimrock Jones when he becomes involved in a mining deal with eastern promoters who plan to oust him and get control of the mine for themselves. The ever-necessary-presence-of-a-girl-situation is cleverly handled by Director Donald Crisp and in this case especially the girl is an important factor in bringing the picture to a pleasing conclusion.

Wallie Reid, as Rimrock Jones, gives an interesting interpretation of the character allotted him. Anna Little, heading a well chosen supporting cast, fulfills her part to complete satisfaction and the picture is withal intensely interesting.

The story: Rimrock Jones is a free lance son of the west; a born gambler and idol of the town of Gunsight which he founded. He has located a claim which he believes is valuable and enlists the aid of eastern promoters to finance the proposition. Jones meets Mary Fortune, a recent arrival from the east, who has established a small clientele as a public stenographer and she becomes interested in his new project to the extent of several hundred dollars which she has managed to save. This money Jones converts into stock of the mine company. The promoters pay Jones considerable cash for their share and with this money he proceeds to liven up the town. He presents his faithful servant with a claim near his own.

The mine operations in full swing, Jones is called to New York by the promoters and there, his gambling instincts aroused, he plunges heavily in the market and loses. With no dividends forthcoming from their investment the bankers advise their western representative to take over entire control of the mine. Mary Fortune, however, thinking of her small share in the mine, warns Jones of the plot and he hurries west to prevent its being carried into operation. He arrives on the scene to find the girl holding off the others who had planned to take over not only the big claim but also the claim that had been given to the old servant. Jones beats the others to it, saves both mines and wins Mary Fortune, whose name fulfills its omen of success.

"The Birth of Democracy"

Import and Export—Merit Films Starring Lydia Borelli. Reviewed by Leon J. Bourstein

THIS is a foreign made picture released under the banner of the Import and Export Film Company. The picture was made by Franco-American Films and has Lydia Borelli, a celebrated foreign beauty, for its star. Dealing as it does with the French Revolution and being filled with moments of dramatic interest, it is a picture that should not fail to please. In these days of world strife, when all people are fighting to free the universe of an all powerful autocracy, it is only natural that interest should center in the struggle of the French to free themselves from the misrule of Robespierre, who, during the period covering 1792-1797, was the dominating power in France.

The story: Therese—Marchionesse de Fontnai—divorces her husband after finding that he has had an affair with one of the maids. She herself is similarly guilty, being enamored of one Jean Guery. The revolution breaks out and with Robespierre in power the country is overrun with riot, ruin, and devastation. Guery is being hunted by Thallien, one of the deputies. Therese gives shelter to Guery but when Thallien comes to her home searching for him she denies knowing of Guery's whereabouts. Later Guery is discovered and taken to Thallien but he is pardoned because Therese has intervened in his behalf. Thallien now completely taken up with her beauty and charm, becomes lenient in his methods of ruling the populace and is recalled to Paris by Robespierre. Therese follows and meets Robespierre, who forces his attentions upon her. Thallien becomes jealous of Robespierre and secretly plots his death.

The people have now become disgusted with Robespierre and his domineering power and Thallien feeling the trend of public opinion, allies himself with the opposing political forces and causes the downfall of Robespierre. The people are now thoroughly aroused and demand the life of Robespierre. He is taken to the public square and in full view of the rejoicing populace, now free of him, he pays the penalty for his oppression.

New Fox Productions Titled

Announcement has been made by William Fox of the selection of titles for three of the productions heretofore announced for release under temporary names. Two of these are Fox Special Features which will be released next week and the other is a Standard Picture.

Jewel Carmen's next appearance, her second as a star, will be made February 17 in "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes." The story centers about these eyes, which, for a time, seem to be the only feature the girl possesses.

Tom Mix will be seen February 24 as the clean-up man of Bannack, a western town, in "Six Shooter Andy." He is concerned largely in overcoming the evil influence of the sheriff, who is in league with a vicious element, and in protecting a young woman who has been thrown by Fate into the midst of this alien element.

The Standard Picture which is for release January 27 has previously been carried under the temporary title of "From the Depths," but is to be released as "The Forbidden Path." It was made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards and is said to be an indictment of the attitude of society on the question of the double moral standard.

June Caprice as Rich Girl

The Fox Special Feature to be released January 27 features June Caprice as a rich girl in a production entitled "The Heart of Romance." The plot hinges on a love affair, the star's hand being sought by a struggling young writer who is suspected by the heiress' guardian of courting the girl because of her money. A unique plan for testing his affection is devised with the result that he proves his sincerity.

The story of "The Heart of Romance" was written by Frances Crowley and the scenario was done by Adeline Leitzbach. Harry Millarde was the director. The cast includes Bernard Thornton, George Bunny, Joseph Kilgour, Lillian Page, Jack Martin and Jack Raymond.

It is said that the production differs from that of the usual Caprice type in that the star throughout is in the role of a rich girl. In many of her previous pictures she has been cast in roles which have afforded little opportunity for wearing the fine clothes in which all women, and actresses in particular, delight to appear.

Tries Twice to Get Into Navy

Walter McGrail, after two attempts to enlist in the Navy, has returned to Vitagraph and is playing an important role in "The Song of the Soul," the Blue Ribbon feature in which Alice Joyce is to be featured, supported by an all-star company. The production is under the direction of Tom Terriss.

Can Not Slight Smallest Details

Producer of Feature Film, Declares Carle E. Carlton, Must Pick His Material with Care

BECAUSE a feature film happens to be several thousand feet long is no reason why even the slightest detail of its production can be slighted, declares Carle E. Carlton, president of Crest Pictures, producer of David Graham Phillips' "The Grain of Dust," in which Lillian Walker stars.

"The producer's care begins, of course, with the selection of his material. Crest Pictures is specializing in the filming of really important fiction successes, one of the most costly and at the same time one of the most satisfactory means of producing pictures.

"There are few works of fiction in a generation that have achieved the standing of Phillips' 'The Grain of Dust,' which earned—and deserved—the distinction of being the best serial which the Saturday Evening Post had run.

"When we got hold of 'The Grain of Dust,' paying a record price for the rights, we set about to give it the very best scenario transcription possible. For this purpose five scenario writers of experience went to work on it simultaneously. Each one submitted a specimen reel and a plot synopsis.

"From the work of these five we selected the one which showed the best grasp of the dramatic and screen possibilities of the story, and gave him the order to go ahead and complete the feature. The others were paid off for the work they had done. Similar care was exercised in every detail of the picture production, and the finished product is ample proof of the wisdom of our course.

"Exhibitors who are picture-wise have been quick to recognize the drawing power of the film, which was directed by Harry Revier. Lillian Walker heads a cast of star calibre."

Foreign Rights to Hall Pictures Sought

Bidding for the foreign territorial rights to productions released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation continues to be spirited, according to Frank Hall, president and general manager of the concern.

All foreign sales have been made by Miss Edna Williams, special representative of the Robertson-Cole Company of New York and London, to which organization the foreign distribution rights to all of the Hall productions have been allotted.

The most recent transaction recorded by Miss Williams, whose sales recently have touched the high water mark, was the disposal of the rights to "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian" to the African Films Trust Limited, which virtually controls the South African amusement field. H. J. Smith, managing director of the South African Corporation, who is here on business, closed the deal after carefully inspecting all of the U. S. subjects and was so strongly impressed with the money-getting qualities of the special productions that he has made overtures to the Robertson-Cole organization for all future U. S. releases.

New Film Enters New Jersey Field

Martin Wohlfarth and A. H. Westfall have entered into the state rights field in New Jersey. The Atlantic Film Company, is the name of the new organization, with offices on the eleventh floor of the Leavitt building, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. Mr. Wohlfarth is the owner of the Atlantic Theater, Spring Lake, N. J., while Mr. Westfall is well known among local exhibitors, having long been associated with several of the big releasing companies as a traveling salesman.

Their first big offering will be the McClure picture, "Mother," with Elizabeth Risdon in the title role, made by George Loan Tucker.

"Empty Pockets" Given First Showing

Herbert Brenon's production of "Empty Pockets" will have its first presentation on Sunday afternoon, January 20, at the Rialto in New York City, where it will remain throughout the entire week, according to the Rothapfel custom.

"Empty Pockets" is Herbert Brenon's first production as an independent producer. It was made at his studios on Hudson Heights. Adapted from the popular novel of that name by Rupert Hughes, it is a thrilling mystery of life in New York City. It ranges from the mansions on Fifth avenue to the slums on the East Side.

Sawyer and Lubin Go to Boston

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., left New York on Monday of this week bound for Boston, where they will promote the interests of their state right feature, "Mother." Messrs Sawyer and Lubin expect to establish a precedent in the field of territorial distribution while in the city of culture by the inauguration of a unique plan. It is their intention to secure a first run booking for the George Loane Tucker production starring Elizabeth Risdon, at one of Boston's large photoplay houses. After the run of "Mother" has established it as a box office attraction of note, the executives of General Enterprises, Inc., plan to dispose of the New England territory to one of the leading buyers. This is a sales scheme which heretofore has never been placed in operation and it is believed that Sawyer and Lubin by the innovation will blaze a new trail in the selling field.

During their stay in Boston the two state right distributors also expect to appear at several meetings held for the purpose of discussing the recent orders of the Massachusetts Fuel Administration whereby the New England theaters must operate between the hours of seven and ten.

Three Brenon Plays Are Ready for Release

By the first of the year, three big special features which Herbert Brenon has made will be launched simultaneously throughout the country. They will be shown in America's foremost motion picture theaters.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" opens in New York in January and will be exhibited at all the leading theaters of the state for the first three months of the year. During that time it will also start its drive throughout the United States.

"Empty Pockets" will be released during January at the most important houses of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, followed by runs in every state in the Union.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, which has just been completed at the Brenon studios, will be shown for the first time publicly in New York next month, following which it will be generally released.

"Satisfied Customer Is Next Best"

"A satisfied customer is the next best thing to a fat bank account," said M. H. Hoffman after arriving in New York from his mid-western tour of exchanges. "I never had that fact impressed on me so strongly as during my recent trip, which gave me the opportunity of personal talks with many of the most progressive exhibitors in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri and Iowa.

"The best undivided surplus a distributing organization can have in these times is a host of exhibitor patrons who have faith in it; who are confident quality will be maintained in the product it offers, and that the prices will be kept down to a reasonable point."

Sells "The Warrior" in New York

Arthur H. Sawyer of General Enterprises, Inc., who has successfully exploited on the state right plan, "The Warrior," starring Maciste, hero of "Cabiria," has sold the feature to Metro for New York City and State. The transaction was closed with Joseph W. Engel and Edward Saunders acting for Metro. It is planned by the purchasers to present the film as an extraordinary feature attraction through the Metro exchange of New York City and its branches throughout the state.

Rothapfel Praises First Petrova Film

A remarkable tribute to the box office powers of Madame Petrova as an extraordinary drawing card has been paid by the presiding genius of the Rialto and Rivoli theaters, S. L. Rothapfel. To Mr. Rothapfel fell the distinction of presenting the initial production of Madame Olga Petrova as the star of her own personal organization, in the feature, "Daughter of Destiny." This first release of the Petrova Picture Company was the attraction at the Rialto Theater during the holidays and the following communication from Mr. Rothapfel testifies to the success of the Polish star as a box office magnet:

Mr. Frederick L. Collins, President,
Petrova Picture Company,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Collins:

You no doubt will be very much pleased to learn that we have just finished with the Petrova picture, "The Daughter of Destiny," at the Rialto, where it ran during the week of December 23rd, to a business of $17,500, and in spite of the fact that the worst Sunday and Monday in the year (the two days before Christmas) came during that week and were followed by four of the most bitterly cold days known in the history of New York, there were lines of people a block long waiting to get into the theater. The picture was very much liked and was a huge success, and I know that if Madame continues this standard there can be but one result, and that is success.

Wishing you a happy and prosperous new year, I am,

Sincerely yours,
S. L. ROTHAPFEL.

Decries Early Closing Rule

Harold Edel, New York Exhibitor, Declares It Is Poor Business to Force Theaters to Conclude Shows at 10 p. m.

HAROLD EDEL, managing director of the Strand Theater, New York City, when asked his opinion regarding the proposed closing of theaters at 10 P. M. said:

"It is up to every citizen to do his utmost to help the government at this time. The theatrical profession, I am sure, has done this in the past and stands ready to do so in the future. The closing of theaters at 10 o'clock in the evening, according to my idea, is not helping the Government in the slightest degree.

"On the very contrary, I would say that it would be a very poor business proposition for the Government. The saving of fuel by closing at 10 o'clock would be trivial as compared with the losses the Government would incur in taxes paid by the theaters, restaurants and other places of amusement. A ten o'clock closing law would be ruinous to many theaters and would affect other enterprises as well, such as street cars, subways, restaurants, and many others.

"It is impossible for business people to leave their places of business at closing hours, to go to their homes, dine and dress for the theater and be there at 7.30. New York is too big and such a feat is almost a physical impossibility. I fail to see the advisability of a 10 o'clock closing. One hour does not mean much as far as fuel is concerned. The amount used in theaters from 10 to 11 does not amount to a great deal."

Pays Big War Tax

The Crescent Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn., soon will pay the government $4,800, which is the amount of money taken in from the public as war tax for the month of November from the five moving picture houses of the company—the Fifth Avenue, Rex, Crescent, Elite and Alhambra—and from the other houses owned by the company outside this city.

Figured on this basis, the Crescent Amusement Company's contribution to the war on the admission tax alone will approximate $57,000 annually.

Peep Into Future with E. H. Roth

San Francisco Exhibitor Points Needs of Motion Picture Theater of Tomorrow as He Sees Them

EUGENE H. ROTH, managing director of the new California Theater, San Francisco, writing for Progress-Advance, the Paramount-Artcraft house organ, has some interesting views regarding the successful motion picture theater of the future. This is what he says on the subject:

The student of psychology sees in the California Theater the successful moving picture theater of the future. The amusement-loving public in all parts of the world will enjoy hereafter a better environment in more healthy and more spacious theaters than they have heretofore enjoyed. The owners of the California Theater have indeed looked into the future, in the matter of comfort and in moving picture projection.

To give one a comprehensible idea of the broad view given by its builders, this theater could, if desired, offer a seating capacity of more than three thousand. They have sacrificed a great many rows of seats, realizing that the moving picture patrons being seated for a period of approximately two hours in a semi-lighted auditorium must, of necessity, have two very important personal features to thoroughly enjoy the offerings of the management.

First, a comfortable seat, and by this is meant a seat of comfortable width, of a minimum of twenty inches, and a well padded back, rounded sufficiently to take the form of the body, and with an automobile spring seat, insures a satisfying comfort. This, coupled with a perfectly ventilated theater, adds fully fifty per cent to the pleasure of pleasing moving pictures.

It is a revelation to moving picture managers, as well as to the producers, who spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in the making of features, and are constantly endeavoring to perfect photography with lighting effects, to inspect the projection room of this magnificent theater, which is located on the main floor, directly in the center of the rear. A space twelve feet wide by twenty-four feet in length has been devoted to this purpose.

The equipment installed is the latest type motiographs, which will not be placed on the market for approximately six months, as these machines are hand-made. The base of the machines is of cast-iron. Three of these machines are installed, together with the latest model stereopticon, with every known safety device.

Many unknown novelties have been introduced, all with the purpose in view of giving a one hundred per cent picture on a one hundred per cent screen. This has been accomplished by giving painstaking care to every detail. The picture is thrown on the screen almost on a straight line from the machines to the screen, thereby avoiding distortion.

The electrical wiring of this room is worthy of the attention of every manager. Every light in the house leads to a remote control, as well as the stage curtain, so that regardless of the stage manipulations, the operator can control curtain and ceiling lights, which are on five circuits, and each of which is of a different color. A perfect blending of the color scheme is possible. At the beginning and finale of the show the operator times the action of the curtain so that perfect harmony is maintained.

A patron entering the California Theater is impressed with the spacious foyers, mezzanines, retiring rooms and broad aisles. The height of the ceiling gives a freedom of space which is colossal in its conception. The ceiling is one hundred and six feet high.

Another attractive feature of this theater is the classical manner in which performances are advertised in the outer lobby. Enlarged photographs of certain scenes are used with great effect. These photographic scenes are incased in a substantial wall-frame with invisible lights thrown on, vesting them with life and animation. The absence of a congested lobby—with brass signs and many easels—is refreshing, and gives dignity in keeping with the rest of the theater.

Many splendid features have been introduced on the stage. A wealth of velour plush drapes and curtains are used with exquisite taste. The outside grand drape is of rich brown. Immediately back of this is a golden-tone velour curtain. When this is raised the full stage is exposed, showing only a full cyclorama of plush similar to the outer curtain. When the center section of the cyclorama is lifted the audience gaze on an extremely rich robin egg-blue velour upon which a handsome embroidered peacock reposes in the center. The effect is rich and pleasing. As the operator starts the picture, the curtain of robin-egg hue silently creeps upward, and the picture enfolds itself on the permanent screen.

To advertise their attractions, the management of the California Theater uses thirty-five twenty-eight sheet pictorial stands, twenty of which are lighted by night. One hundred one-sheets are placed in hotels and prominent lobbies. Special advertising is carried daily in the amusement column of all the daily newspapers. In addition to this, fifteen thousand elaborate programs are distributed at the theater each week. The management attributes its success to consistent advertising.

High Court Favors Sunday Shows

By a decision returned at Quebec City, by the court of King's Bench, sitting in appeals, made on January 12, all moving picture theaters of the city may be opened on Sundays. This decision turns down a series of judgments of the Recorder's court, of the Superior court and the court of Revision. For the past two or three years, the local theaters had been forced to close their doors on Sundays by a municipal law which had been sustained until the Court of King's Bench had been reached with the test cases.

Imediately after this decision, a number of the local theaters decided to take advantage of the victory by opening on Sunday, January 13. These included the Victoria Theater and the four houses controlled by Mr. Drapen, including the Olympia, Imperial, Princess and Majestic. Manager J. H. Paquet of the Auditorium decided not to open his theater on Sundays for the present.

War Tax Fight Is on in Manitoba

The war tax fight is on in Manitoba. The Norris Provincial Government proposes to impose a tax of no less than twenty per cent on all theater tickets purchased in Manitoba, according to an announcement made in Winnipeg on January 12.

The proclamations, official posters and notices to be displayed in the lobbies and box offices of every theater have all been printed by government direction, it is declared. In fact, the government printing was finished on December 15, according to information from official sources. This has been done prior to the introduction of the amusement war tax subject before the Provincial Legislature which sits in Winnipeg shortly.

Agitation for Sunday Shows Grows

Since moving picture shows were operated in Nashville, Tenn., for charity on Christmas eve, agitation has been steadily increasing on the part of the general public toward making Sunday pictures a permanent feature there. Although theater men have steadfastly maintained that it was not their purpose to create a favorable sentiment toward Sunday shows by operating on that day to provide Christmas money for the poor, the insistent demand and growing realization that Sunday pictures offer splendid diversion for the Sabbath, coupled with the fact that the shows would not interfere in any way with church services, has tended to interest city officials, moving picture managers and newspaper men alike.

In regard to the Sunday moving picture situation, the Commercial Daily writes a lengthy editorial, which says:

"A scant ten per cent of the residents of Nashville attend church on Sunday morning. This condition has been the case for two decades, and is not improving. To obviate the necessity of having so many houses of worship open, union services are held to offset the small attendance. We do not favor the opening of the moving picture houses or any other place at such times as would offer an excuse or counter attraction to church attendance. The one question for us to discuss is the manner of spending four or five hours on Sunday afternoon that neither the church nor society has provided for. The right of any government, national or local, to appropriate the time of an individual on Sunday, except in army service, is purely negative. The city police cannot prohibit the reading of any book, even a book that the national government will not permit to pass through the mails. They cannot prevent a speaking or telling of anything unless it is some way treasonable. They are still some intellects so dwarfed that they cannot see the difference in reading a story in a Sunday paper and seeing that same story portrayed on the screen the same day."

Buys New Sign in Face of Lightless Nights

In view of the fact that lightless nights are becoming more and more the fashion, Manager Libson's purchase of a new electric sign for the Walnut Theater in Cincinnati, O., seems somewhat like irony. The new sign, which is one of the handsomest in Cincinnati, was ordered before the establishment of a lightless night seemed possible and Mr. Libson must, therefore, make the best of it. Besides a new sign, the Walnut is also being furnished with new seats and is being improved in many other ways.

A novel advertising plan was tried out in the Walnut Theater recently, when "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" was shown. This play was taken from a book written by a Cincinnati woman, Mrs. Miles T. Watts, and the book stores were promptly notified of this fact. A considerable increase in the sale of books, as well as the box office receipts, resulted. Hereafter the management will investigate more closely the authors of the plays they are showing. Exhibitors in other cities may profit by this same method.

Window Display Aids Exhibitor

A distinctive advertising idea productive of results commensurate with its novelty has been evolved and put in operation in Phoenix, Arizona, by John W. Rankin, of the traveling publicity staff of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. For a week recently the show window of the Arizona Gazette, the leading newspaper of Arizona's second city, contained lithographed heads of each of Goldwyn's six stars—Mary Garden, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott.

The display was arranged by Mr. Rankin with the co-operation of Business Manager Conklin of the Gazette and John Barncord, manager of the Empress Theater, where Goldwyn Pictures are first shown in Phoenix. Heads of each of the stars were cut from lithograph twenty-four sheets, mounted on heavy cardboard, backed with a prop and placed in an orderly row in the window. Above the heads and covering half the width of the front window was emblazoned "GOLDWYN."

The office of the Gazette is right in the path of everyone who has occasion to go from the residence district to the post office, so it is a safe guess that in the week the display was continued only a negligible few missed seeing the pictures of stars that Goldwyn has under its management and that Mr. Barncord's theater was the place to see them on the screen. Advertising men say this is the first time a newspaper has ever devoted its windows to such a scheme.

Uses Unusual Advertising Method

Exhibitor Gives Newsboys Free Show and Gains Their Co-operation in Exploiting His Theater's Attraction

L. R. HILLIER, manager of the Strand Theater at Duluth, Minn. adopted aggressive and unusual methods in his exploitations of "The Planter," the seven reel Mutual special starring Tyrone Power, which was his New Year's week attraction.

Mr. Hillier secured the first five hundred copies of the Duluth Herald on the first afternoon of a week's run of the picture at his house. He had a printing press waiting in a nearby shop and spread, in transparent red ink, across the entire page "Strand Theater, 'The Planter,' the sensation of the year."

Mr. Hillier had prepared in advance for his stunt. The previous week he had given a free show for the newsboys of Duluth, this securing their cooperation in the distribution of his papers to all sections of the city.

The stunt attracted wide attention. It was backed up by a liberal use of newspaper space and a general distribution of throwaways together with an effective use of the posters and the lobby display.

Mr. Hillier secured the cuts which Mutual furnishes as part of its advertising accessories and the same issue of the Duluth Herald which carried his red smash, also carried publicity pictures of Tyrone Power on the amusement page.

He knew, as so many exhibitors are discovering, that their local newspapers are glad to cooperate with exhibitors in the exploitation of pictures providing the exhibitor uses a reasonable amount of advertising space and providing he furnishes the photoplay editor with well prepared publicity copy and good cuts.

Mr. Hillier booked "The Planter" originally for three days but after the first day he extended the booking to a week. He broke his house records with "The Planter" on New Year's day, despite weather conditions.

Commend Mutual for Tax Stand

Exhibitors continue to express their appreciation of the action of Mutual in absorbing the war tax by enthusiastic letters of commendation.

F. W. Twyman, Treasurer of the Kendler Zimmerman Company, Jefferson Theater, Charlottesville, Va., writes Mutual:

"We have never taken the occasion to congratulate you on your standing as to war tax. We feel that you are correct on this proposition—there is no reason why exhibitors should pay war tax."

When President John R. Freuler announced in an open letter to the exhibitors, on October 26, that Mutual would absorb the tax, it set a precedent that many other distributors have followed.

Guy Wonders Lives Up to His Name

Whenever an advance herald not only attracts your eye, but piques your curiosity until you feel compelled to read it, you know that the man who got out this herald knows his business.

Guy L. Wonders, director of The Wilson Theater, Baltimore, Md., evidently "knows his business," according to this method of reasoning.

That Mr. Wonders also believes in giving special notice to superior photoplays, is shown in his advance herald of January 7, in which he has inserted the following paragraph:

"After personally reviewing William Russell in 'Snap Judgment,' I do not hesitate in stating that this is one of the best pictures of the year, and will appeal to everyone, whether man, woman or child."

Sells Reserve Seats

When four shows are presented at the Pantages Theater, Calgary, Alberta, in one day, the plan has been adopted to reserve the seats for the first performance in the afternoon and the first at night. The times for these shows are 2, 3:45, 7:30 and 9:15 p. m.

"Split Reel" Notes For Theater Men

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

Fight Against Censorship

Pending the solution of the censorship problem at Los Angeles, producers, exhibitors and exchanges have joined hands to censor all films now on the shelves. The censoring is being done by a committee representing the Theater Owners' Association. The committee consists of Ed Tally, W. H. Clune, F. A. Miller, Frank H. McDonald, Michael Gore, H. S. Lewis and W. F. Jensen. This action followed a conference of a delegation of film men with Mayor Woodman, at which the mayor said he would defer the appointment of a censor commissioner. The film delegation was headed by Frank Garbutt, Thomas H. Ince, J. A. Quinn, W. J. Reynolds, Harry Leonardt, Frank H. McDonald and others opposed to the new film ordinance. Meanwhile a committee of six, consisting of two producers, two exhibitors and two exchange men, will prepare data stating their position more fully and lay it before the mayor at a future conference.

Manager Changes Jobs

Charles Thropp, who has been in charge of the Nixon-Victoria Theater at Baltimore ever since the opening of the house under the Nixon-Nerdlinger management two years ago, has been transferred to the new McHenry Theater under Bernard Depkin of the Parkway. He has been succeeded at the Victoria by Abe Seligman, formerly the treasurer there. Mr. Seligman brought with him, as private secretary and assistant, Miss Hattie Smith. Miss Lulu Cleaver has been promoted to treasurer. Harry Henkel, manager of the Academy of Music, will have the general supervision of the Victoria.

St. Paul War on Again

A movie war is on in St. Paul again, brought about by the application of F. W. Ramaley for a license at 654 Grand avenue. Commissioner McColl, who voted against the license granted to Heilbron and Weiskopf previously and then announced heatedly that he would vote for all licenses on Grand avenue thereafter, at once moved that the license be granted. Mayor Irin, however, urged that the license be laid over and a hearing held in accordance with the usual procedure. This was done.

Pay Enormous Tax

Almost enough money was paid in war taxes by theatergoers of South Bend, Ind., in November and December to build a theater, according to data just compiled. The amount totaled $9,700 and represented 10 per cent on tickets sold at the Oliver, Orpheum, Auditorium, LaSalle, Castle, White Eagle and Honeymoon.

Cut Pass List

The movement in Nashville, Tenn., for curtailment of annual passes finds a new advocate in W. H. Wassman, manager of the Knickerbocker and Crystal theaters. The Nashville movement started several years ago, when one company cut off the annual passes, and Mr. Wassman's decision is in line with the expressed viewpoint of the majority. Newspaper men are furnished with book tickets to be used at their pleasure, but the distribution of passes by the wholesale has been effectively checked. All Nashville houses are collecting the war tax in strict compliance with the government regulation.

William Russell is in an embarrassing predicament in this scene from "In Bad," an American-Mutual production.

Fire Causes $3,000 Loss

The Bijou Theater at Kaukauna, Wis., was destroyed by a fire that started in the projecting room. The loss was $3,000. Insurance will cover half of it. Probably 300 persons were in the house when flames shot out of the film booth over the heads of the spectators. A panic was averted by cool-minded men who cautioned the crowd to pass out slowly. Meanwhile the operator saved himself by jumping from his booth. He was slightly injured by the fall and burned about the hands and face.

Fire Damages Theater

The Central, a suburban theater in Nashville, was damaged by fire while a Saturday night crowd filled the house. When the fire was discovered there was a rush for exits and several persons received minor injuries. Quick arrival of firemen resulted in saving the structure. The projecting machine was broken up, several reels of films burned and the walls damaged by fire, smoke and water. The loss amounted to several hundred dollars. Harry Meuson is the manager.

New Tax Levy

A new way has been found to impose taxation upon the exhibitors of Montreal. The Board of Control now is considering a suggestion that a license fee of $5 a year be charged for the privilege of using space for all permanent or temporary signs. After this fee is paid it is proposed to charge five cents per square foot per annum for the continued privilege.

Mystic Theater Sold

The Mystic at Galion, O., has changed hands. Carl Robinson has sold the house to Peter Rettig, a former owner. Mr. Robinson intends to devote his entire time to the billiard and pool business. The theater will be open on Saturday and Sunday nights only, when Mr. Rettig proposes to present high-class attractions.

Sells for $30,000

The Franklin Theater, a two-story house at 1205-1209 North Fifty-second street, Philadelphia, has been sold by Francis J. Loughran to Samuel Segall. The building is assessed at $30,000.

Opens New Theater

A new theater is to be opened in Charlevoix, Mich., which will present both motion pictures and vaudeville. The house will be known as the Stoddard and Wallace Theater.

FACTS ABOUT FILM FOLK—YOU MAY CLIP AND PRINT THEM

DURING the record cold spell that enveloped the East, Theda Bara was hard at work at the Fort Lee studios filming the scenes of her new play, part of the action which takes place in the sunny and warm clime of Java. There in the midst of tropical foliage, waving palms, and scantily clad "extras" was Miss Bara huddled in a big fur coat trying to keep her teeth from chattering.

One of Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy" stories, soon to be released by Paramount, is named "A Call to Arms" and shows the nation responding to Abraham Lincoln's call for volunteers. A Kentucky state official has written Mr. Chapin regarding the 1917 call to arms in Kentucky, especially in Larus County, where Lincoln was born. The quota of Larue county was 132 men. The first 132 called were accepted and not one failed in the physical examination or claimed exemption.

Cats, kittens and dolls will have a vacation for the time being at the Paramount western studio, and Vivian Martin may resume her knitting—much interrupted—for the space of two or three weeks, since her production of "A Petticoat Pilot,'" has just been completed under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon.

"Patsy Argyle," the frowsy little dog which appears with little Mary McAlister in Essanay's Perfection Picture, "Sadie Goes to Heaven," was brought from the farm to see his picture premiere in the Essanay studios. Patsy sat in the Essanay projection room with forefeet on the top of the chair, seeming to be absorbed throughout the special showing.

Rogers Lytton, who portrays the role of a German master-spy in Metro's massive screen spectacle "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, will be remembered by audiences for his fine work in a similiar character role in the war drama "The Battle Cry of Peace."

The axiom "Your sin will find you out," is the basis of the story of "The Guilty Man," an unusually tense motion picture feature soon to be released through Paramount. A. H. Woods produced the stage version of "The Guilty Man," written by Ruth Helen Davis and Charles Klein.

Marguerite Clark has begun work on her next photoplay, "Prunella." Her role in this play is in striking contrast to that of her last picture, "The Seven Swans," and a comparison demonstrates the great versatility of the diminutive star. Prunella's mother ran away with a French landscape gardener, and a year later left Prunella, a new-born babe, on the door step of the home of her sisters, Prim, Prude and Privacy, and disappeared, to die alone. The three old maids guarded Prunella very carefully, and she grew to young womanhood entirely innocent of worldly things.

"Superb! Marvelous! Exquisite!" Such were the words drawn from the lips of Sarah Bernhardt by the art of Mary Garden as the great French actress witnessed it at her visit to the Strand Theater, New York, to see the screen "Thais." Herself no stranger to the screen, Mme. Bernhardt's eagerness to see "Thais" was twofold. First, to honor Anatole France, the author of "Thais," who is a member of the French Academy, like herself, and to attend the premiere of her friend, Mary Garden.

When Frank Crane, director of "The Life Mask," the third picture in which Madame Olga Petrova will appear, departed for Miami, Florida, recently, with the star and her company, he left something behind. It was the glazed peak cap which Crane has worn while producing every feature of note bearing his name within the past three years. In the hurry and bustle of starting for Florida, the head-gear was forgotten on the hook where it hung at the Petrova studios. Hardly had Crane set foot in Florida, when a series of slight mis-haps convinced him that the cap was necessary to his continued good fortune. As a result, a wire was dispatched to New York and the cap en route to Florida where Crane tremblingly awaits it hoping that nothing serious will happen until the reunion occurs.

A "butterfly dinner," at which the decorations are real, live butterflies, is one of the startling and interesting features of Triangle's great drama, "Her American Husband."

That Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy" series, soon to be released by Paramount, is good entertainment for every class, is proved by the fact that Sakee & Co., of Tokio, Japan, have made an offer for the Japanese rights to these stories of early American life.

Aida Horton, child star, will be seen as a boy in Vitagraph's forthcoming production "The Desired Woman," in which Harry Morey and Florence Deshon are featured.

Marque Bara, brother of the famous Theda, is in the army, attached to the signal corps.

Rita Jolivet, the star of Metro's great screen spectacle of international war events, "Lest We Forget," which includes a reproduction of the tragic Lusitania disaster, first came into prominence with Otis Skinner in "Kismet." She was born in France and is the wife of the Italian Count de Cippico.

William C. DeMille wrote "The Land of the Free" from which Olga Printzlau pictured the Paramount offering, "One More American," several years ago, and therefore could not have had George Beban in mind when he developed the character of Luigi Riccardo. Had he really been thinking of the talented delineator of Latin characters, however, he could not have painted a character more suited to the star's ability.

Viola Dana, will be seen in an entirely new type of characterization in "Weaver of Dreams," a picturization of Myrtle Reed's novel, which is being produced at Metro's West coast studios under the direction of John H. Collins. The action is laid in a quaint New England village, and the characters are all human people of the good old "Down East" section of the U. S. A.

Nell Shipman, star of Vitagraph features, in "The Home Trail," plays a young girl in the days of 1870, the daughter of a Mississippi gambler who goes west to try his luck. The garret of Miss Shipman's California bungalow, which consists of several trunks, was searched for customing and not only did the voluminous skirt of other days come forth, but the ear-rings, brooch, and wedding ring of a great grandmother of the family.

One of the patriotic window cards now on sale, showing pictures of Wilson, Washington and Lincoln, displays instead of a real picture of Lincoln, a photograph of Benjamin Chapin, in his impersonation of Abraham Lincoln in "The Son of Democracy," the Paramount series.

Emmy Wehlen, Metro star, will next be seen as Lily Bart in a picturization of Edith Wharton's novel "The House of Mirth" under the direction of Albert Capellani who in colaboration with June Mathis made the screen adaptation.

A very remarkable and authoritative collection of gambling paraphernalia figures in Triangle's new production, "The Gun Woman." The collection is of historic interest, having been used in the early Western days. It includes faro layout, roulette wheel, poker and craps table.

Mrs. Sidney Drew, has become a godmother to many of the soldiers and sailors in the hospitals of Greater New York. Mr. and Mrs. Drew have been exhibiting their comedies to the sailors at the Navy Hospital in Brooklyn, and Mrs. Drew is collecting magazines and books which she is delivering to the hospitals as reading matter for soldiers and sailors.

A deal was consummated last week whereby the Jewel Features, Bluebird Photoplays and Special Productions will be distributed through the Universal Film Exchanges. The stockholders of the Jewel Productions, Inc., Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc., and all Special Productions, have decided that by distributing their output through the Universal exchanges it will be getting a maximum efficiency at a minimum cost, as the shipping, inspection and clerical work will all be carried on by a single staff as if there was but one organization represented. This plan was put into execution Monday, January 21, at the Chicago office, and the probabilities are that this system of distributing the Jewel and Bluebird pictures, as well as the Special Productions, will go into effect at all the Universal Exchanges as soon as arrangements can be perfected. C. B. Plough, formerly manager of the Bluebird Exchange, will be in charge of the service branch of the business, and I. L. Lesserman will become general sales manager, and have charge of the selling end of Jewels, Butterflies, Bluebirds, Special Productions and the entire Universal output.

The Advertising Association of Chicago, Tuesday, January 15, at the regular noon luncheon were shown a film recently produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, for the National Poultry, Butter & Egg Association, entitled "Food Will Win the War." The picture described in detail the methods used by the cold storage warehouses throughout the country in conserving food stuff from time of plenty to time of scarcity and the resultant stabilizing effect this has on market prices. The film is a one-reeler and has as its opening and closing features a human interest story laid in the home. E. H. Philippi of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, chairman of the Moving Picture Committee of the Advertising Club, presented the film to the members as one of a series which is being shown regularly in the dining room of the club at 123 West Madison street, Chicago.

Himes begs Margot to marry him and spend three years as his wife in name only, promising to release her then if she does not love him. After the marriage, she falls in love with her husband but is led to believe that he no longer cares. He in turn mistrusts her and after a series of misunderstandings, Margot goes away. After a vain attempt to find her, for he has learned that she loves him, Himes enlists in the army and goes abroad. There he finds Margot as a Red Cross nurse.

Triangle

The Gun Woman—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 27—Features Texas Guinan in the title role. Although apparently hard-hearted, she falls in love with a bandit but when he is not true to her, she exacts revenge. Reviewed in this issue.

Her American Husband—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 27—Teddy Sampson is featured as a Japanese girl. Reviewed in this issue.

Vitagraph

The Menace—(FIVE REELS)—Starring Corine Griffith and Evart Overton. The hero, who had been an adopted child, believes that his father was a thief. In spite of heredity, he works out his salvation. Reviewed in this issue.

World

Gates of Gladness—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 28—Starring Madge Evans. A child again softens the hearts of its elders and leads to a reconciliation between two families. Reviewed in this issue.

Mutual Pictures

Burglars—(ONE REEL)—STRAND—JANUARY 15—Starring Billie Rhodes. Billie receives an invitation to visit her uncle, and at the same time uncle's wife invites her nephew to spend a few days with them. Neither niece nor nephew have seen each other since they were babies. Uncle and Aunt motoring to meet their train, the machine breaks down. When Billie arrives at the house there's nobody home, but the door being unlocked she enters, to find a young chap wandering around whom she mistakes for a burglar, and notifies the police. The young fellow, who is in reality her cousin, makes the same mistake, and two squads of police arrive on the scene. At the height of the general melee which ensues, uncle and aunt come in, explanations are in order, and the police retire disgusted while the family celebrate the occasion in a fitting manner.

Their Little Kid—(ONE REEL)—JANUARY 22—Starring Billie Rhodes. Billie and Jack have been married for two years, and are happy in their married life and also in the expectation that Jack's rich Uncle, who lives in the west, will leave them a nice bunch of money some day.

Uncle wires that he's coming on the next train, and is anxious to "See the kid." Jack thinks he means a baby, which has not yet been added to their establishment. Fearful of disappointing uncle, they make frantic efforts to borrow, beg or steal a baby to pass off to uncle as their own.

A book-agent happens in and Jack mistakes him for his uncle, whom he hasn't seen for many years. Billie in the meantime is out trying to round up an infant, finally succeeding in borrowing one from a nurse in the park, which is handed to the supposed uncle as his niece. As they treat the book-agent royally, he decides to carry out the part imposed on him.

Enter the father and mother of the baby who create an awful scene, during which the real uncle arrives. Billie and Jack are dumbfounded, until uncle explains that he meant Jack's wife, and all is serene.

General Program

The Soup and Fish Ball—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—JANUARY 27—Comedy. Pat and Mike are sworn enemies. Their daily meeting in the street is acknowledged by the fling of a brick. And when a hobo steals their dress suits off the clothes line and sells them each believes the other has stolen his suit. At the grand ball they meet in rented suits and continue their fight. And for a time the ballroom floor is a melee of flashing arms and fists, pretty girls, portly matrons and hot-headed hod-carriers. The alarm is sent in to the police, who come roaring down the street in a jitney bus. Straight through the wall they tear and onto the ballroom floor. At this juncture Pat and Mike have discovered their suits on each other and rip the trousers off. As they run, trouserless out on to the floor the auto tears into the room. But peace and harmony finally comes to the group when a pretty girl dances to the contagious music of a ukelele. Pat and Mike shake hands.

The Grand Canyon of Arizona and Canyon de Chelly—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 2—Scenic. This Essanay scenic reveals the wonderful beauties of two of America's most picturesque spots. The motion picture camera has caught the most beautiful points of the Grand Canyon and follows the trail of a group of tourists, showing them in camp and exploring. The Canyon de Chelly, which lies 100 miles north of Gallup, New Mexico, occupies the latter half of this scenic. You will see the cliff ruins in this canyon, the Navajo Indians at their blanket making and their cliff homes that often rise to the height of from 400 to 1,000 feet in the air.

The Fifth Wheel—(TWO REELS)—BROADWAY STAR FEATURE—FEBRUARY 2. Thomas McQuade, the Van Smuythe's coachman, having been discharged for drunkenness, has joined the Bread Liners. Standing beside him is a young man, shabby but neat. Thomas learns that the young man has just been discharged from a hospital without a penny, his wife and child having been obliged to return to her mother. He had married against the wishes of his unforgiving relatives. Just then a splendid automobile dashes up and when opposite them drops an extra tire. Thomas catches it and returns it to the owner, who asks him if he knows the Van Smuythes. Thomas is forthwith taken to a palatial house. Two women are mysteriously ushered into a side room, where his host, Prof. Cherubusco, the great clairvoyant, tells them that the Chaldean Chiroscope has been successful, for had it not said "By the fifth wheel of the chariot he shall come?" But the professor learning instead that Thomas is the Van Smuythe's ex-coachman, throws him into the street. So back goes Thomas with his new friend. Suddenly a girl rushes up to him. It is Annie, his sweetheart and maid at the Van Smuythes, whom he has not seen for a month. She says his old position is waiting for him, but suddenly catching sight of the other man she screams, "Mr. Walter!" And then it appears that she had accompanied her mistress to the great clairvoyant and he had told her where she would find her sweetheart, and she had also found "Mr. Walter." After paying the carfares home she vows to give her remaining $11.85 to Professor Cherubusco, "the greatest man in the world."

Fashion Treat in "Our Little Wife

Whatever else may be said of "Our Little Wife," who, by the way, is the sort of a person that sets tongues wagging, she wears beautiful clothes. For the picturization of Avery Hopwood's play of thrills and laughter (released February 10) Madge Kennedy, the charming Goldwyn star, placed herself in the hands of Goldwyn couturiers, who furnished her with two evening gowns, a wrap, a negligee, a street costume and a motorcoat

Complete Record of Current Films

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Old Style Newspaper Office Pictured

The picturization of Larry Evans' widely read story, "His Own Home Town," which Thomas H. Ince has just produced for Paramount, with Charles Ray in the stellar role, will afford newspaper men of the present generation a good idea of what a newspaper office in a typical small town looked like a score of years ago—and what many of the "print shops" in some villages and towns still resemble. The familiar Washington hand press in "His Own Home Town" is an interesting relic. There is an absence of linotype machines, while the old time cap and lower "cases" are much in evidence. Even the job press is an ancient Gordon of a vintage that the modern printer is unable to recall. Everything in and about the "His Own Home Town" newspaper office reeks with age, is redolent of another generation in the publishing business. The atmosphere provided serves to illustrate what a tremendous advance the "Fourth Estate" has made during the last twenty-five years. In making the original Larry Evans story into a screen production much care was taken to retain all of the principal characters, so that Ince-Paramount patons will see visualized the experiences of Jimmy Duncan, the Evans hero, in his effort to re-establish a reign of civic righteousness in the little town of Warchester.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox Baby Grand stars.

Three Elopements in One Comedy

The next Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, entitled "His Hidden Purpose," will be released January 27. This comedy, it is announced, is a regular Laura Jean Libby melodrama turned into a merridrama disclosing the persecuted heroine, the hampered hero, the vile villain and the scheming father. With his customary magic touch, Mack Sennett, the comedy king, has managed to transform every little sob spot to a smile spot and the whole is said to be a joyous riot of laughter from start to finish.

There are three elopements in "His Hidden Purpose," as well as several good all-around fights, a few kidnapings and a smashing climax—smashing in every sense of the word. Also there is a delicious situation where Marie escapes thoroughly disguised in a barrel with the persistent "villun" in close pursuit. Marie Prevost plays "The Girl," Chester Conklin, "The Villain"; Gene Rogers, "The Father"; Neal Burns, "The Sweetheart," and Frank Cooper, "The Boarding House Keeper." In addition to its laugh-provoking qualities, the new Sennett comedy is said to be the most elaborate, as regards settings, ever staged for Paramount.

A PARALTA-BARRISCALE-PLAY

Writing in the Picture Play Magazine, the greatest critic in the United States, Mr. Alan Dale, says:—

"'Madam Who' is a particularly excellent picture. Miss Barriscale can give points to many a star who relies upon her 'emotional possibilities.' The 'close-ups' of Miss Barriscale's horror-stricken features are most vivid and admirable. It is the best piece of emotional work that I have seen in many a day, and some of our 'legitimate' stars might feel proud of it.

"Scenes in a night camp, and the view of a burning city and its evacuation, with rioting and pillage, lift 'Madam Who' into a prominent position. I should say that it is a distinct advance in the picture art—and I emphasize the word 'art.' Here's my hat off to Miss Barriscale."

How Do You Value a Picture?

The value of a moving picture to an exhibitor is entirely dependent upon the amount of money that it will bring into his box office.

A photoplay that does not return an exhibitor a reasonable profit is a failure. Beyond question — isn't it?

Our problem is two-fold—first to distribute pictures that will be box office attractions and second, to sell them to exhibitors at prices that will leave them a profit.

There are a few motion picture stars whose popularity is sufficient to nearly always draw a crowd. Pictures made with these stars have the first requisite of success — that of being box office attractions. If, however, these pictures are sold at prices so exorbitant that exhibitors cannot realize a proper return from them, they lack the second requisite—that of profit. It therefore follows that from the exhibitor's point of view they are not successful productions.

The basis of a photoplay is an interesting story. Motion pictures can be made, based on themes of such vital interest and so well produced, that they will contain both requisites of success — box office attractions and money-makers for exhibitors.

Triangle pictures are offered to exhibitors at reasonable prices. Any evhibitor who knows how to present moving pictures can make money with Triangle productions.

Does this method of valuing a picture sound reasonable to you?

Manitoba Places Ban on Comedies

EXHIBITORS, ENRAGED, PLAN TO CLOSE THEIR THEATERS IN PROTEST

WITH THE MOTION PICTURE given the right of way in the United States as one of the greatest of all agencies for the successful prosecution of the war, it will be hard for American members of the trade to understand the latest developments in the film war in the Canadian Province of Manitoba, of which Winnipeg is the capital.

MOTOGRAPHY's correspondent at Winnipeg wires that the provincial government, following its promise to exact a war tax of twenty per cent on the face value of all tickets, now has announced that after Feb. 28 all comedy film subjects will be under the ban.

Plan War to the Knife

The result has been that exhibtors are up in arms. Faced with a one-fifth war tax which they believe the people cannot afford to pay and the prospect of being unable to present comedies, a city-wide meeting of managers was held in the Winnipeg theater and plans were made for a war to the knife.

It was decided to close all houses as a protest. If the protest is unheeded, it is said, many if not all of the theaters will simply close up shop. Several managers of large houses declared it would be cheaper to close and remain closed than to attempt to carry on business at an almost certain loss under the new regulations.

Fear Big Box Office Loss

It was pointed out that box office receipts might be cut in two through the imposition of the 20 per cent tax. Already staggering under a sizable tax, patrons most certainly would not go more than once to the movies where they have been going twice.

On top of this the elimination of comedies, it was felt, would leave the programs so one-sided that the fans would go away depressed rather than enspirited and lose much of their interest.

Manager Voices Exhibitors' View

"I cannot understand the attitude of the government," said one manager, who declined the use of his name for fear of brooking the disfavor of the authorities. "In the United States the government officially recognizes the need of the people for entertainment and encourages the picture industry to do its best, being desirous especially of an increased production of comedies, while the provincial government not only purposes to shoulder us with a ruinous tax, but intends to shut off our comedies.

"I presume this will mean we cannot show Charlie Chaplin and every exhibitor in North America knows what a loss that will mean.

Insists Theaters Will Close

"But we exhibitors do not purpose to submit without a fight and if necessary we will close our doors. Exhibitors throughout the province will be asked to join in the fight.

"United we should be able to bring the government to its senses, but divided we face disaster. We intend to make this plain to the small exhibitors and any of the larger ones who seem doubtful. We anticipate no difficulty, however, as every theater owner in the province surely will realize without much urging that it is to his advantage to fight even if it necessitates the closing of his house. Better to close for a few days than stagger through the year, only to fail at the end."

Official Statement Awaited

Only meager details of the situation are available because the government has not shown its entire hand. Among revelations in prospect is a statement officially explaining the government's stand.

It is no secret that the authorities want to squeeze all they can out of amusements, but how they hope to get more money through such oppressive measures is a mystery.

Comedy Interpretation Due

Another thing to be cleared up is just what the government interprets as comedies. It is presumed that the ban applies only to straight comedies and does not pertain in any way to dramatic farces or comedy dramas, but no one outside of the government knows for certain.

In the meantime the theaters in Winnipeg are presenting the best available features and shorter subjects at regular prices, but are not eliminating any portion of their shows in anticipation of the new regulations.

Exhibitors Aid "Smileage" Drive

A nation-wide campaign of a week is now on to raise $1,000,000 for the entertainment of soldiers. The campaign takes the form of purchases by "stay-at-homes" of what are known as Smileage Coupons, books of which are on sale for $1 and $5. The coupons are good at all of the Liberty theaters which have been erected at the various army and navy posts, where prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents are charged.

In many cases exhibitors are selling the Smileage Coupons at their box offices. The drive, being for theatrical purposes, in addition to the fact that many exhibitors are helping through the sale of tickets, makes it of importance to the trade as a whole.

Two big facts stand out in this connection. First of all it is only through the patriotic benevolence of the theatrical business, including both producers of silent and spoken plays, that the soldiers are getting high-grade entertainment. The military circuit comprises forty theaters and tents and the very best pictures and talent are on the programs as a result of producers and actors having brought themselves down to the standard of army pay.

The second big thing is the government's interest in the entertainment of its fighting men. The desire of Washington for wholesome amusement not only makes for excellent morale in the military organization, but through the substantial co-operation of the entertainment producers the trade acquires a prestige that it is impossible to estimate in dollars and cents. The theatrical business assuredly is coming into its own.

Rothapfel and Griffith See Better Business

A big improvement in the film business is forecast by S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theaters in New York, and David Wark Griffith, director of Artcraft pictures. The views of the two men are given in a symposium on "What the Future Holds for the Moving Picture" in the New York Evening Post. Mr. Rothapfel says:

"The admission price brings the motion picture within the reach of all and by careful attention to the several units of our programs we manage to present an entertainment which is restful, amusing, bright, and clean—in short just the sort of diversion to take people's minds off the horrors of the war and give them two hours of much needed relaxation.

"I think as the war proceeds the public will feel more and more the need of that sort of light entertainment and the motion-picture theaters throughout the country, if properly handled, will not only do a real public service by supplying that need, but will earn a legitimate profit at the same time. Naturally if the theaters flourish the whole great industry will flourish, and that is my reason for believing that the picture business was never a sounder field for investment than it is at present and will continue to be for a long time to come."

Mr. Griffith says:

"We are passing through a natural period of depression just at present. We are going through a process of readjustment due to the altered conditions of our national life. This will work itself out and then people will turn again to the houses where entertainment is to be had. I consider amusements a very serviceable part of our affairs, even in war times, and think it poor economics to retrench along too many lines.

"The quality of America's motion-picture productions is constantly improving, and that improvement is sure to find its reward in larger patronage. The turn from present conditions is likely to come any week now, and then you will see a decided improvement in all amusement enterprises."

Charles R. Condon (New York manager), Machine Gun Corps.

In addition to these, Tom Kennedy, formerly a reviewer in the New York office, is now in the National Army.

World Film Opens Its Library to Clients During the War

The World Film Corporation announces that it has thrown open its library to its clients for the duration of the war and that they may help themselves to anything on the shelves. The announcement is made by Ricord Gradwell, vice-president and general manager, in the following statement:

"Much has appeared in public prints, much has been said by promoters, many protestations have gone up from various sources, more or less sincere, of so-called desire to help exhibitors.

"From the beginning of this administration, World-Pictures has been consistently working for upbuilding the industry, for the interest of the exhibitor, the safe-guarding of local business, the establishment of the square deal, the inauguration and maintenance against all odds of the principle of the Golden Rule in the manufacture and distribution of motion pictures.

"The exhibitors, long-suffering, sometimes complaining and sometimes uncomplaining, yet many times really needing help, constitute the bulwark of the industry and are the jobbers through whom we distribute to the public. It is only right that we should consider, as we consider our own interests, the interests of those who, hand in hand with us, have helped to make World service and World pictures stand for the best in the trade.

"We have now resolved to throw open our great library, like other great institutions in our country have been opened, to the use of our friends and co-workers and through them to the public.

"For the period of the war the use of our library shall be given free to exhibitors who are on contract or may be on contract with us, thus enabling the exhibitor to give, in his turn, added comfort and service to his patrons.

"In offering the use of this library to the trade we do so without any reservation, mental, actual or implied. It is a true offer, generously tendered, which we hope will be as generously and sincerely received. It must not, by any means, be made the basis of a selling argument for the acquisition of new business. It must be handled as a dignified, big, broad exposition of the general stand of World organization on matters of national policy. It must not be stultified by making it an argument to get one or more accounts.

Zukor Outlines Drive for War Funds

URGES EXHIBITORS TO USE COMMITTEE SLIDES BOOSTING THRIFT STAMP SALE

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry formed to co-operate with the government in its war program, has returned to New York from Washington after a conference with federal officials and announced new plans calling for the continued co-operation of exhibitors and the entire industry, in the new drive for war funds.

W. G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury, in a letter to exhibitors throughout the country, expressed high appreciation of the assistance the motion picture industry has given his department heretofore. The united front that it has presented when calls for voluntary service went forth has been a source of great inspiration to all who are directly charged with the conduct of the war, according to the secretary. In his new appeal to the industry, Mr. McAdoo asks the aid of the exhibitor in making the War Savings Stamp campaign a success.

"Secretary McAdoo already has started a campaign among exhibitors," said Mr. Zukor, "in connection with the new War Savings Stamp drive. Three slides, prepared by the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to co-operate with the treasury department have been accepted and are being distributed among exhibitors in all parts of the country.

"Not only is it a patriotic duty of every exhibitor to use these slides as frequently as possible, but the fact that he shows them will tend further to enhance his standing among his patrons, who will appreciate his efforts toward the realization of the goal for which we are fighting."

The activities of the committee of the national association has received many laudatory comments in Washington. In the last Liberty Loan drive, 70,000 slides were prepared and sent out under the supervision of this committee, as well as 500,000 feet of film of patriotic appeal. The effectiveness of this co-operation in the motion picture theater was soon apparent, as expressed by Secretary McAdoo and other government officials. The committee consists of Mr. Zukor, W. W. Irwin, J. E. Brulatour, Marcus Loew and George K. Spoor.

Appended is the letter that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has sent to exhibitors, as told in the adjoining column:

"Dear Sir—Convinced by the splendid spirit of patriotic co-operation which you showed in the First and Second Liberty Loan campaigns that you are always eager to assist the government in carrying out its war program, I desire to ask your aid in making the War Savings campaign a success.

"Under separate cover three lantern slides, prepared by your committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to co-operate with the Treasury Department, are being sent you. If you will display these slides as frequently as possible on the screens of your theaters you will perform a distinct service in behalf of your country.

"I cannot refrain at this time from expressing my high appreciation of the assistance that the Motion Picture Industry has given the Treasury Department heretofore. The united front that it has presented when calls for voluntary service went forth has been a source of great inspiration to all who are directly charged with the conduct of the war.

"Cordially yours,
"W. G. McAdoo."

Perfect New Process of Coloring

DeMille and Wykoff Enthusiastic Over Invention, Use of Which Is Apparent In Current Artcraft Releases

ALTHOUGH no disclosures are made as to their process for the use of colors, Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, and Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, admit that rapid strides have been accomplished with the new invention according to a statement by Mr. DeMille, of the use of which are to be seen in current DeMille-Artcraft productions. Further use of the new process is to be made by Mr. DeMille.

As explained by Mr. DeMille and Mr. Wyckoff, who have been working together for several years to perfect the invention, this process does not give glaring and noticeable colors to the films, but softens and subdues the coloring of scenes to an almost pastel effect. The process, by the way, noticed particularly in certain scenes in "The Woman God Forgot" and "The Devil Stone," by no means necessitates hand coloring.

The flames surrounding Geraldine Farrar in "Joan the Woman," the light of the sacrificial altars in the Aztec spectacle, the weird coloring of the remarkable and sinister jewel which gives the title to "The Devil Stone"—all were accomplished by the new invention.

"We have been working slowly and cautiously on this process for the past two years," said Mr. DeMille, "and have studied color photography in all its branches. We have come to the conclusion that color photography, in the sense of absolutely faithful reproduction of natural colors, or any method of coloring where the tints used are of the glaring variety, can never be used universally in motion pictures, for the eye of the spectator would be put to too great a strain, and the variety of the colors would distract the attention from the story values. It would be as if a person looked out of a car window at a highly colored panorama of action and scenery during a two or three hour journey. One cannot look out over fields of brightly colored flowers continuously for even an hour without terrific eye strain.

"Our invention makes use of color at intervals throughout a picture, and we have been experimenting with this idea in mind. The moment the spectator says, 'Oh, look how green the grass is,' or 'How blue the sea,' the value of the color is gone; it has proved too greatly distracting. The color effects we get and those we are working for resemble somewhat the shades and color tones used in Du Lac's famous illustrations. These blend and harmonize but are not too obvious."

Mr. DeMille and Mr. Wyckoff state that they expect to make greater and greater use of the invention, according to the success of their experiments, and Mr. DeMille even admits that in the near future he may make a picture drama, colored throughout by the process. The new DeMille-Artcraft special, "The Whispering Chorus," will offer several new departures along these lines, it is announced.

Fatty Arbuckle Exempt

Uncle Sam's officials at Los Angeles have decided that Fatty Arbuckle is exempt from the drafted army. The big comedian is overweight, and so he will continue his fun activities for the amusement of film fans.

A Soft Tenderfoot, with Tom Fox (Fox Comedy)—"An old copy but in good shape. The audience showed their approval by laughing their utmost. It's a comedy hard to beat."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

A Rich Man's Plaything, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"We don't run Suratt features as a rule,but this one was quite exceptional and pleased the patrons."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

Camille, with Theda Bara (Fox)—"Miss Bara never did draw here but this one got over nicely. A dandy picture, well produced."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

The Conqueror, with William Farnum (Fox)—"The greatest film Farnum has played in. Very, very spectacular with great human appeal. Cast well selected."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

Thou Shalt Not Steal, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"Did a good business on account of the title, but it did not please. A very poorly produced dime novel."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

Betrayed, with Miriam Cooper (Fox)—"The audience treated it as a huge joke."—Jackson Brothers, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

A Daughter of the Gods, with Annette Kellerman (Fox)—"The storm hit us while we were running this. I played it two days and while I had current, I did a capacity business at advanced admission. A wonderful production."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

A Milk-Fed Vamp (Fox-Sunshine Comedy)—"The monkey incident in this two-reel comedy received the biggest laugh I ever heard in our theater. The first three Sunshine comedies are certainly laugh producers."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Jack and the Beanstalk, with Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"For children only. Did not attract grown-ups."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

The Yankee Way, with George Walsh (Fox)—"George always gets the crowds here. I think this one of his best."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vermont.

GOLDWYN

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Don't be afraid to boost this production. It can't help but please the most critical. Well directed and splendidly acted. Capacity business with Fairbanks' latest as opposition."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—"Star has wonderful drawing power. The picture as a whole is not up to the Goldwyn standard but with different direction the star should make good as a picture actress."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Six reels. Will go big and please all as it is a first-class comedy-drama and the star is all that could be expected of any of the class A movie stars."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Eight reels. It certainly brought the children and pleased them. The title of this play is well known almost anywhere one may go."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Rex

Beach-Goldwyn)—"An eight-reeler and the best of its kind I ever ran. The better class of patrons thought the first two reels pretty 'strong' in spots and I think myself a couple of scenes could have been eliminated."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Rex Beach-Goldwyn)—"A splendid production, well directed and well acted, perfect in every detail. It holds the attention closely through eight reels. Can be boosted strongly. It pleased immensely here and brought capacity business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Scrub Lady, with Marie Dressler (Goldwyn)—"The poorest high-priced comedy I have run in eight years. Let it alone."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

KLEINE-PERFECTION

Skinner's Dress Suit and Skinner's Bubble, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-Perfection)—"Both fine pictures, good comedy dramas, clean and with good drawing power."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Graustark, with Bushman and Bayne (Essanay)—"An old picture but in good shape and very interesting."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Conquest Programs (Edison)—"A very good program for schools, in fact good enough for anyone."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Pants, with Mary McAlister (Essanay)—"It took the children by storm and pleased the grown-ups, too."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

The Appletree Girl, with Shirley Mason (Edison-Perfection)—"A light picture. Gave good satisfaction. Very clean."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

METRO

The Pretenders, with Emmy Whelen (Metro)—"A laugh from start to finish. A good Saturday night picture."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

Red, White and Blue Blood, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"It sounds like a patriotic war story but it contains no battle scenes. Plenty of comedy and an interesting story."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Adopted Son, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"The best I have ever seen these two stars play in. Metro always gets the money."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

PARAMOUNT

Mrs. Dane's Defense, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"A very satisfactory picture. A good title. The star has a very good role. Some of our patrons stated that the picture does not follow the original play. Business satisfactory."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Seven Swans, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A very pleasing picture. We played to many children during the week's run. The play pleased the feminine portion of the audience better than it did the men. All in all, a very good picture which should draw business anywhere."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

The Judgment House, with Wilfred Lucas (Paramount)—"I advertised this as a J. Stuart Blackton production, but that did not attract our patrons. Business was below average and the audience did not care for the picture."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Clever Mrs. Carfax, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—"A very good drawing card. Eltinge is a coming picture star. Satisfied our audience very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"One of Miss Clark's best pictures. Exceptionally good business. Drew more children into the theater than a Chaplin picture does."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Call of the East, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"A well made picture of its kind, but the type is one that didn't please my audience."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Son of His Father, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"A typical Ray picture that pleased them all."—R. J. Self, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Fair Barbarian, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"One of my patrons, going out, said 'I'm very glad I came over to see the picture. It is just dandy, but it did not sound good when I looked it up to see what you were running today.' It is full of good, clean comedy and is a picture that no one could criticize as to amusement value. It provides a good hour's entertainment for any class of audience, young or old."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

His Mother's Son, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"A good picture of this star's specialty, a 'boob' country lad who makes good. It will please all and has lots of comedy. However, the star does not draw in proportion to the rental price we pay for his offerings."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Nan of Music Mountain, with Wallace Reid (Paramount)—"This is some picture. A big crowd and all satisfied."—John C. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Secret Game, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"This picture is good, but the star has no pulling power for us. He should be rated in 'class C' on the Paramount program. The 'class C' stars draw better than he does for us and, from what I hear, a great many other exhibitors feel the same way about it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"This went over with a bang; everyone tickled to death. Good business."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Eternal Grind, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"A play with a good moral. Patrons thought this a wonderful Pickford part. Little Mary always fills the house to its capacity. Do not miss this good picture."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

The Dummy, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A picture that went well here. The star is liked and he is at his best in this picture."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

Poor Little Peppina, with Mary Pickford (Paramount)—"I simply can't say enough about this picture. Mary still leads them all. Our patrons wish to see it again."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

PATHE

Under False Colors, with Frederick Warde (Pathe)—"We did a good business on this production. Patrons seemed well pleased."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kans.

The Candy Girl, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"A good comedy drama, a nice picture for the family program."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Tanks at the Battle of Ancre (Pathe War Picture)—"Played to the biggest house we ever had. Picture well liked and everybody was satisfied at twenty-five and thirty-five cent admissions."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theater, Platte Center, Nebr.

SELECT

The Public Be Damned, with Mary Fuller (Select)—"A great production in six reels. Advertise it strong."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

The Price She Paid, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"The poorest of Miss Young's pictures which I have run."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

The Barrier (Rex Beach-Select)—"A great production. Fine acting. A winner for the box-office."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

The Easiest Way, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"The star is popular here, but the story is slow and without much action."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

The Silent Master, with Robert Warwick (Selznick)—"A great mystery drama which pleased our patrons very well."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

Scandal, with Constance Talmadge (Select)—"This is the picture that got stuck in the snowstorm. Everybody liked it and I guess everybody saw it, for we had nothing else to run."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

The Wild Girl, with Eva Tanguay (Select)—"According to reports from other exhibitors, this was supposed to be a 'lemon,' so I did not boost it. But on the contrary, it is a good picture and if your patrons are not familiar with Eva, I would try it. It will get money and please."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

TRIANGLE

Dangers of a Bride (Keystone-Triangle)—"A dandy comedy, a sure-fire laughmaker and some extraordinary thrills."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Betty Takes a Hand, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"A pretty good picture. Pleased our audience, but drew small business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Flames of Chance, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—"The picture is first class and drew pretty good business, although the star is not well known."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Man Above the Law, with Claire McDowell (Triangle)—"The picture is very good, a first class production. It drew little business, but satisfied those who saw it."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Man Above the Law, with Claire McDowell (Triangle)—"A good western story, but not much business."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

I Love You, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"One of the best pictures of the season. Star at her best. Business just fair."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Golden Rule Kate, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A fine picture. The star is great. Wonderful story."—H. N. Jorgensen, Best Theater, Dallas, Texas.

Because of a Woman, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"Some class to these new Triangles. I think they are the best on the market."—H. N. Jorgensen, Best Theater, Dallas, Texas.

The Sudden Gentleman, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"One of the best pictures I have ever run. Business has increased fifty per cent. since I started Triangles."—H. N. Jorgensen, Best Theater, Dallas, Texas.

The Gowns of Destiny, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"Alma Rubens is a great star and is already drawing big business."—H. N. Jorgensen, Best Theater, Dallas, Texas.

Wild Winship's Widow, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"A very good picture. The star carried her part well. Some wonderful scenery."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Girl Glory, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"The star alone got this by. Miss Bennett did some clever work."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Love or Justice, with Louise Glaum (Triangle)—"A very good picture. Did a pretty good business. Weather bad. Star not very popular here."—J. P. Lannan, Swan Theater, Clarinda, Iowa.

The Clodhopper, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"My audience went wild over this. Advertise it strong. You will not only clean up, but please your patrons. It's a knockout."—J. P. Lanna, Swan Theater, Clarinda, Iowa.

The Millionaire Vagrant, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"This picture is simply great. The print was in fine condition. Ray is a great favorite here."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

The Snarl, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"The acting of this star in a dual role was simply wonderful."—C. Mickelson, Delite Theater, Hudson, Wis.

The Bond of Fear, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"Film in good condition. Picture and subject below the Triangle average. Attendance 30 per cent above the average. My patrons come to see Triangle pictures regardless of the stars and are seldom disappointed as with this picture."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

VITAGRAPH

Big V. Comedies (Vitagraph)—"Real laugh producers. Maintain a good standard every week and rarely fall down."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Bobby Connelly Series (Vitagraph)—"These child stories draw business, grown-ups as well as children, and are usually good."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Grell Mystery, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"An excellent star. Business pretty fair. Pleased everyone."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Grell Mystery, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"Capacity business. In my opinion it is not up to Williams' standard, but patrons were pleased."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kans.

Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation (Vitagraph)—"Fine picture and draws the crowds."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Artie, the Millionaire Kid, with Dorothy Kelly (Vitagraph)—"Good picture. Star pleases. Fair business in bad weather."—E. W. Laun, Lyric Theater, Platte Center, Nebr.

The Awakening, with Montague Love (World)—"A beautiful picture, a wonderful story. Very sad all the way through. Montague Love's work is wonderful, also that of Dorothy Kelly, co-star."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

SERIALS AND SERIES

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Absolutely the best bet in serials today. Action swift and getting swifter all the time."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"So far we have failed to receive a knock."—Jackson Brothers, Opera House, Bushnell, Ill.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"For excellent photography and hair-breadth escapes, this serial is simply the best ever and is bringing us the best attendance we ever had."—House & Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"A clean-up for me. I have booked the next serial, Vengeance and the Woman."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

The Fatal Ring, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"Full of action. A money-getter."—L. W. Schultz, Comique Theater, Montpelier, Vt.

Who Is Number One? with Kathleen Clifford (Paramount)—"We had to cancel this on the third chapter. Story impossible, star failed to register, support weak."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Ninth episode. This serial is holding up well. Business about capacity."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Second episode. This was advertised as a Universal serial. The first episode was shown in a blizzard. My patrons are hoping to see another Voice on the Wire. Capacity business."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

War's Women, with Frank Keenan (Supreme)—"This picture may have been O. K. several years ago."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea (Universal)—"Not so good as one would think from the advertising it has."—A. L. Brown, Gem Theater, Philip, S. D.

Redemption, with Evelyn Nesbit (Steger)—"This made good for us in the box-office and pleased our patrons also."—House & Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

The Zeppelin's Last Raid, with Howard Hickman (Ince)—"A good picture with only a fair title. It is certainly worth an admission to see the inner workings and detail work of the Zeppelins as Thomas Ince has shown in this film. For plot it reminds us of Civilization. It is a special feature."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Cold Deck, with W. S. Hart (Doll-Van)—"This is Hart's greatest picture. The audience was very enthusiastic. Drew very satisfactory business on a ten-below zero day. I would recommend this as a good offering and money-getter in any locality."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Vitagraph Company Nearly Perish in Storm

Nell Shipman and her company of Vitagraph players for a fortnight have been living in "prairie schooners" far in the interior of the Mojave Desert, filming scenes for "The Home Trail." The storm that swept the country recently, causing much havoc, was a disastrous one for the Vitagraphers.

A sand storm was needed for the picture, but a terrific gale, which nearly cost the members of the company their lives, was not expected. With little or no knowledge of the etiquette of sand storms, the players, when the sand first began to fly were delighted and photographed scenes. When the fury reached its height and they saw the storm was to continue, they realized that they had lost much time working while they might have started for shelter. The matter soon assumed a serious aspect.

William Wolbert, directing, had the lives of nearly thirty persons in his hands, to direct in the crisis, and when some of the women employed as "extras" became panic stricken he made the quick decision of not attempting to reach the only shelter he knew of, some little distance away, but to remain where they were and wait until the storm lifted.

Nell Shipman took charge of the women and worked hand to hand with the men in fastening down the tops of the wagons and doing what they could to protect themselves against the wind and sand. After five hours the storm abated and they were able to shovel their way out. Two of the horses had run away and were not found until the following day, but outside of the shock and the terrible cold, none of the company suffered injury.

How Would You Like a Twenty Per Cent Tax?

IT is reported by our correspondent at Toronto that the provincial government of Manitoba, Canada, has promised to impose a theater ticket admission tax of twenty per cent, and further, to limit to some extent the use of comedy film subjects. This latter provision, while it probably will not affect the more "serious" comedies—among which even the international Mr. Chaplin can be classed—will make considerable havoc, if it goes through, among the one and two reelers.

The alarmed and indignant exhibitors, the report says, are gathering together to express the only conclusive protest they can carry home—by closing their doors. They are convinced it will be impossible to collect from the public so large a tax, especially when it is coupled with an enforced reduction of program.

The situation, especially in Winnipeg, calls for a demonstration of the strength of organization. The big houses, determined to go dark if the one-in-five tax law carries, are now engaged in seeking the support of the small houses in that proposed action. It is incidentally noteworthy and creditable to the Canadian spirit of showmanship that not one of the houses threatened by the drastic order has so far curtailed its show or reduced its quality in the slightest degree.

American exhibitors, reading this bit of news, will regard the situation of their northern brothers with mixed feelings. There is cause to be thankful that American taxes so far have been less unreasonable, and that American legislators have shown a disposition to keep the burden within the limits of profit and loss if the facts are properly presented to them. But there is cause for apprehension also in the light of what might, and may, happen in our own United States.

We believe that our Congress, bombarded though it may be by critics and slingers of mud, stands as ready and eager as any legislative body in the world to do justice to all; and especially that includes the man of small business—the small exhibitor. But Congress keeps no sets of books for our industries. It cannot know what is profitable to us and what unprofitable, except as we present our evidence.

A ticket tax has been imposed in this country which averages twelve or thirteen per cent. Exhibitors are complaining bitterly about it—to their families and to each other. Congress does not know that. If the picture theater business swallows the present tax without unanimous and urgent protest, and continues to do business, it will be accepted in Congress that the industry will stand a supplementary tax. In plain words, if we can stand the thirteen per cent tax, we will be given a twenty per cent tax.

It is plain human nature to holler when you're hurt. If you were pinned under a railroad wreck with a broken leg, and lay there smiling, the doctors and nurses would pass you by to attend to the fellow who was shrieking for help. If you stand a tax that makes the money travel out of your pocket every week instead of in, you can't blame Congress for thinking you like the tax.

The moral is too obvious for repetition.

The Profits of Idealism

THE Reverend Sidney D. Eva, director of Detroit's new hundred thousand dollar church house of the Simpson Tabernacle Methodist church, while installing a motion picture equipment for the entertainment and education of his charges, was moved to remark:

"If Jesus were alive today he would command for religious purposes every form of human ingenuity and skill to prosecute His mission of uplifting and rebuilding character, and the 'movie' would not be left out."

While all of us in the trade will enthusiastically agree with him, probably most of us never thought of it exactly in that light.

With all our commercialism, our sordid jostling for place, our hopes of financial success and fears of financial disaster, the picture itself, the principle, goes on doing its good, raising the standard of human life, robbing the halls of mischief of their attraction, lightening the hearts of the people, making intimate the heroes of history and fiction and dreams.

It is a business with us. It is a business even to the practical American citizen buying his tickets at the box office and wondering how much money the exhibitor makes. Only the children, and possibly the women who come in from the farm, see the picture as it really is, untainted by thoughts of percentage on the investment, the highest price for the least cost, and other considerations that beset our workaday minds.

The thought sounds unpractical, we know. But we wish more exhibitors would try to keep with them that image of the ideal—would struggle against the tendency to become calloused and hardened to the sensitive side of picture showing. Why assume that preserving the dream will make the reality a failure? The most successful exhibitors we have, the few really great presenters of pictures, are our greatest dreamers, our most pronounced idealists. And in that class is also our greatest producer.

The most practical and profitable occupation in the world is the materializing of dreams. The most successful exhibitor in the world will be he who can make his people forget, for an hour, that there is a practical world whose problems oppress them.

To put it all into a sentence, the exhibitor who throws his heart and soul into exhibiting, will find success far sooner than he who throws in only his pocketbook.

That Luminous Paint Idea

JUST about a month ago, discussing the administration's "Lights Out" order, we remarked in sort of a whimsical vein—not at all serious—"There is no way to get around the order unless some resourceful exhibitor should care to coat the front of his house with luminous paint, like an officer's Ingersoll wrist watch, and let nature take care of his lighting."

That the thing could be done was obvious enough; but that it would be practical to do it was, we confess, no part of our thought in printing it. Yet now we are confronted with a brief but succinct report from the United States Food Administration. Here it is, in its entirety:

LUMINOUS PAINT INSTEAD OF ELECTRICITY

A Boston hotel with a large electrical sign, when compelled to cut off its illumination under the recent Fuel Administration order prohibiting such uses of current, had the sign painted with luminous paint, which is said to be a fairly satisfactory war-time substitute.

It is woefully short on specific information. It does not even mention the name of the hotel, whose ingenious manager surely deserves credit. But coming whence it does, we cannot question its authenticity. Somebody has gone and done it.

The radium paint composition is probably expensive; but so is electric light. Perhaps the saving on light bills over a period of lightless nights would pay for a permanent equipment of radium paint discs, suitabl e for a double row around the facade, high enough to be out of reach of covetous small boys and souvenir hunters.

Maybe that fool idea we voiced so lightly and thoughtlessly will work into a practical scheme and become popular if the privations of war last long enough.

Griffith Sees Permanent Peace

ARTCRAFT DIRECTOR RELATES OBSERVATIONS ON TRIP TO FRONT

BY DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

Here is a story in which David Wark Griffith, director of Artcraft pictures, relates observations of a trip to the battlefront in Europe. What Mr. Griffith saw will be the basis of many thrilling scenes in a new war film upon which he is now engaged.

"THIS awful thing must never be allowed to happen again as long as the world lasts."

That is the thought that was uppermost in my mind as I stood in the front line trenches in Flanders and watched the horrid tragedy of war blazing back and forth across the wastes of No Man's Land. And that is the universal cry that is coming from all the tortured nations at war.

All Europe is pressing on to more fighting, more blood and more suffering in the hope that this debacle of slaughter may sweep warfare out of the world forever.

This desolate and piteous cry has probably followed every war since the world began. Has our anguished prayer any better chance to be heard than all the other cries for peace that come echoing with mockery to us out of the illimitable sorrows of the past?

From my own experiences at the front it occurs to me that our generation has perhaps a better weapon to use against war than those who wept in ages gone by.

Lays War to Romance

To my mind it is clear that this grim reeking monster, War, is very likely to perish from the earth forever owing to a shortage of his favorite food—Romance.

There is no question at all that wars happen very largely owing to the eagerness of soldiers for adventure. The military caste in every country is ever pressing for war.

If there had been no military caste in Germany there would have been no war. And without the picturesque glamor that always has gone with armies there would have been no military caste.

Stripped of its feathers, it would have been difficult to persuade men to become soldiers.

The proposition that he give up his daily work for two years in order to learn how to kill men he never saw would have been rejected with indignation by every German alive. But the progress of raising the great German army was insidious and fascinating.

A Case in Point

Consider the case of the German farm boy. From infancy he has been getting up at daybreak; he has worked all day in the fields when not pegging away at school. At night he crawled into his weary bed. Day followed day in sodden succession. Nothing came to lighten his life. Every day was like every other day, and every day was a day of bitter uninteresting toil.

The time came when he was called to the colors. He found himself transformed into a young god. He stood at a palace gate with a drawn saber flashing in his hand. A silver breast-plate covered the swelling chest that but yesterday was concealed by a soiled farmer's smock. On his head was a silver casque with a tall horsehair plume that nodded and tossed in the breeze.

When he went on guard duty a magnificent military band escorted him down the Linden. Emperors and princes answered the salute of his gleaming sword. At times he rode forth on a proud charger who minced his steps like a dancing master.

This was the farmer boy's day of glory. Never thereafter would he walk the plow furrow with the same sodden step. He had lived. And it was the grim, cruel monster War who had made him live, who had breathed this subtle flattery into his ear to make him a slave for future slaughter.

To a lesser degree was this true in other countries.

Peace to Stupid

Our civilization has been guilty of one tragic error. It has made the machinery of peace dull, tiresome, stupid, old. It has made the machinery of war vivid, picturesque, beautiful, attractive and young—young. Armies thrill with life and adventure. Armies are proud; they tingle with pride.

It is an old saying that every disease has its own cure. But we could go further than this; every disease is, in fact, its own cure. The defense that science has erected against smallpox is a pocket edition sized case of smallpox caused by vaccine and cured by the aroused blood corpuscles.

I have a feeling that this war will do a great deal toward squeezing the romance out of army life. The dreadful squalor of modern fighting gives a new aspect to this age-old drama.

After the war is over the farmer boy may go back to the palace gate; he may wear again the gleaming cuirass; his saber may flash as of old, but it will never be the same. Under the shining armor he will in imagination feel the crawling vermin of the trenches. When the military band escorts him down the Linden he will remember how, on another day, he was escorted into a trench that crawled with lice and gave forth reeking, vile odors that was horrible with filth and mud.

Never again can they make him feel romantic about the business of making war.

Soldier Merely Laborer

The life of a soldier in modern war is the life of an underpaid, overwoked ditch digger compelled to live in discomfort and danger.

And there is another, still more compelling, reason upon which perhaps we may venture to lean.

This is an age of intense individuality. In this age people are struggling for individual expression. Every man and every woman is aware of the God-given right to be heard. War denies individuality to men. It ships them in bunches and kills them in bundles and buries them in open ditches. War is out of tune with the times. This is one of the strongest reasons why we must fight on at any cost until Germany is beaten.

Out of this situation may we not hope that, when this war is done, the war drums will beat no longer, that the battle flags will be furled!

Jane Lee Puts One Over

Bracing but not really cold weather prevailed in Philadelphia, recently, while Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, were there during the week their picture, "Troublemakers," was shown at the Palace Theater. Neither of the little Lees wear full length stockings, no matter how cold it is, because they have always been accustomed to wearing socks.

As they were entering the North American newspaper office, a woman, nicely dressed, created a scene by threatening to have the Lees' publicity agent arrested for "cruelty to children" because of the short length stockings. Jane piped up and said:

"Say Missus let's see what kind of stockings you wear, will you?"

The overzealous intruder did not "make good," but muttered, "You little imp," and disappeared, laughed at by the crowd which had congregated.

George Loane Tucker Takes New Job

Becomes Managing Director of Productions for Goldwyn, But Will Produce Pictures Personally Just the Same

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER, one of the ablest directors and producers in the motion picture industry, has become managing director of production for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will have oversight and supervision of all the company's releases.

This announcement by Goldwyn will be good news indeed to exhibitors everywhere because of their confidence in Mr. Tucker and the success they have had in the past when playing Mr. Tucker's own productions.

From the earliest days of Goldwyn Mr. Tucker has taken a vital interest in the company because he felt then and now that it presented one of the greatest opportunities for screen achievement in the entire industry, and because he was in entire harmony with the Goldwyn plan of making only quality productions.

That George Loane Tucker should step into this important post is of great value to Goldwyn for many reasons, not merely because he is an able and brilliant director, but because he is one of the greatest judges of story values for the screen as well as a master of continuity—one of the most difficult and exacting details of the picture art.

The assumption of these increased duties by Mr. Tucker fortunately will not win him exemption from personally producing pictures, for he will continue to make a definite number of releases for Goldwyn in its annual scheduled output. But, in addition, he is to give his careful and patient attention to all other Goldwyn productions and this will unquestionably greatly increase the Goldwyn average of excellence.

Already Mr. Tucker has produced two splendid and popular pictures for Goldwyn—Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" and Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million."

Third Talmadge in Movies

Fatty Arbuckle has drafted Natalie Talmadge into service for his new comedy of country hotel life which is being produced for the Paramount program at the Balboa studios, Long Beach. The third of the Talmadge sisters is private secretary for the Arbuckle company, and she had avowed intentions of never appearing on the screen.

Roscoe declares the Talmadge talent is too good to lose, so he has persuaded Natalie to play a small role.

New Vehicle Chosen for Miss Normand

Production Is Newspaper Story in Which Comedienne Appears as Journalistic "Ne'er-Do-Well"—Strong Cast in Support

WORD of the forthcoming release of Mabel Normand's "Dodging a Million," another George Loane Tucker subject, has brought such enthusiastic response from exhibitors everywhere after private screenings at Goldwyn exchanges that it is imperative for Goldwyn to follow it up with a second Mabel Normand production as soon as practicable.

Accordingly, a new story has been chosen which will present the comedienne in a role unlike any hitherto essayed by her. Nor is the character of the production similar to any with which Miss Normand has been identified in the past. It is a tale of newspaper life combining comedy and thrills, and the role to be assumed by the Goldwyn star is that of a "copy-girl," a sort of journalistic ne'er-do-well, whose sudden, brilliant "beat" covers her paper and herself with glory. The production has not yet been given a title.

This unusual story, at present without a title, is being directed by Clarence G. Badger, brought from the West Coast for this undertaking. His long experience as a journalist and magazine writer, followed by work on the staff of Lubin, Universal and Keystone gives him the writer's keenness of perception so necessary in modern cinema production.

With its usual care in casting, Goldwyn has assembled a distinguished company of players to support Miss Normand. Again Tom Moore, most popular of leading men, is given the chance to distinguish himself as he did in "The Cinderella Man" and "Dodging a Million," the Selwyn-Kennedy mystery play. His part is even more like a role expressly created for him than in the other dramas. He is Hunter Mason, a rich young religious enthusiast who conducts a Bowery mission. His own secretary is a crook, and much of the excitement comes when Patsy (Mabel Normand), masquerading as a criminal, discovers and unmasks the secretary.

Charlotte Granville, distinguished English portrayer of society types, is given the part of Hunter Mason's mother. Miss Granville is identified with the great successes of Sir Herbert Tree, Sir John Hare, Sir Charles Wyndham and Sir George Alexander in England. She was brought to this country by Henry Arthur Jones for his play "We can't Be So Bad As That" at the Thirty-ninth Street Theater, and has remained ever since.

Helen Dahl is another player recruited from the highest class of stage productions. "The Chorus Lady" and "Maggie Pepper," with Rose Stahl, enlisted Miss Dahl's services for several seasons, and she is remembered for her capital work in the farce, "A Pair of Sixes." She is especially well cast in the Normand production.

Chaplin Starts Work on New Contract

FIRST RELEASE WILL BE READY THE LATTER PART OF THE PRESENT MONTH

WITH a battery of three cameras trained on him and occupying for the first time his beautiful new motion picture plant in Hollywood, Cal., Charlie Chaplin last week started his initial production under his million dollar contract with the First National Exhibitors' circuit.

Twenty weeks have elapsed since Chaplin last performed before the camera. With his return he enters the motion picture field in another capacity, that of producer. Under the terms of his contract, Chaplin will make eight subjects. Although a time allowance of eighteen months has been specified for the completion of the pictures, it will be greatly to the star's advantage to finish in a shorter period.

Chaplin's last work before the camera was for the Mutual Film Corporation. Twelve two-reel subjects were made for that concern, the last of which, "The Adventurer," was completed in August.

Makes Visit to Hawaii

The comedian then purchased ground for his own plant at LaBrea and De-Longpre avenues, Hollywood, and after approving the architect's plans departed for a vacation of five weeks in Honolulu.

Since his return from Honolulu Chaplin has been active at the studio site. He has carefully watched the progress of the erection of the various buildings, while special attention has been given to the stage, a tremendous span of more than twenty thousand square feet. Its design is original, being a combination of glass and outdoor variety.

The same organization which was affiliated with Chaplin at the Lone Star studios surrounds him today, although the million dollar comedian has made a number of additions to the various departments. One of the sad losses to the organization was that of Eric Campbell, throughout the past year chief foil for Chaplin, who was killed in an automobile accident a month ago.

Edna Purviance Remains

Edna Purviance, for almost two years Chaplin's leading woman, will continue in the same capacity. Syd Chaplin, the comedian's brother, is personal manager; John Jasper, studio manager; Roland Totheroh, chief of the camera department; Danny Hall, technical director; Frank Crompton, director of construction; Alf Reeves, stage director; "Chuck" Riesner, Charles Lapworth and Melvills Brown, members of Mr. Chaplin's personal staff, and Carlyle R. Robinson, director of publicity.

Chaplin's new plant occupies five acres of ground in the heart of the exclusive residential section of Hollywood. From outward observation the spectator would scarcely discover that a motion picture studio existed. The buildings are all of quaint old English architecture and in place of the crude fence the site is surrounded by beautiful trees and an abundance of flowers.

Same Design Throughout

The same design is carried out on the interior with a general color scheme of grey and white. The various buildings are all in easy communication of each other, thereby doing away with all confusion.

Chaplin's first release for this year should be ready not later than the latter part of February. The story is an original one and the comedian aims to surpass any of his previous efforts. As was the rule last year, no disclosure as to the nature of the forthcoming subject will be made until the comedy is entirely finished and ready for release.

Charlie Chaplin and Harry Lauder as they appear in film to help raise the Lauder $5,000,000 war relief fund.

New Kellermann Release Soon

In "Queen of the Sea," a new William Fox standard picture which soon will be released throughout the country, Annette Kellermann is said to have done her best work in the silent drama.

New Company Is Organized by Metro

Screen Classics, Inc., Will Produce Super Features for Distribution Through Parent Corporation—Rowland Enthusiastic

VERIFYING its announcement of several weeks ago that "Metro intends to go after the leadership of the motion picture field on the merit of its productions," the Metro group has organized and within the week will incorporate a new company to be known as Screen Classics, Inc., which will acquire, produce and present big feature productions which will be distributed through the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Screen Classics, Inc., will be composed of some of the men prominently identified with the present Metro organization, together with others who have now associated themselves with it, for the larger activities. The stock of Screen Classics, Inc., will not be offered to the public.

The new concern will handle all of the big special productions up to the point of distribution, and will control all of the super pictures which Metro already has demonstrated its ability to produce.

Screen Classics, Inc., is the natural outgrowth of Metro's entrance into the field of first, second and third run productions, as well as theater runs of a longer period.

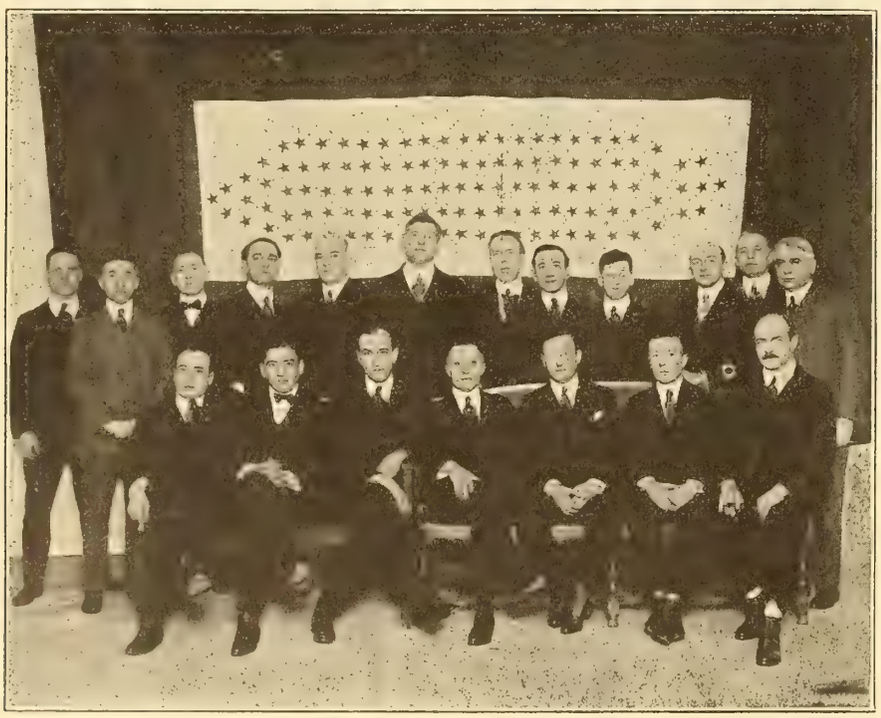
Beginning with "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," Metro's line of big production successes has been unbroken. "Blue Jeans" with Viola Dana, "The Legion of Death" with Edith Storey, "Lest We Forget" with Rita Jolivet, and now "Revealation" with Nazimova and the Drews in the big five act feature novelty "Pay Day," made a special company necessary.

President Richard A. Rowland of Metro, in speaking of the new company, said:

"Metro's larger requirements made a big feature producing and handling company necessary, as Metro has only begun on its great schedule, carefully outlined and prepared during the last eight months. Proceeding on the Metro policy of being sure of our ground before entering upon any enlargement of our activities, we have gone slow, but surely. The new company will make great pictures, some with big stars, and some without. The essential dramatic necessity, the play, will in each case be the guide and aim."

Alice Brady's New Role

Alice Brady's new photoplay, "The Spurs of Sybil," will be published on the regular World Pictures program March 4. In this production Miss Brady appears as an exceedingly ambitious young woman who meets with numerous and almost insurmountable obstacles before she finally "wins her spurs." There is a closely apportioned mixture of comedy and serious interest in story and character, leading to an impersonation said to be one of the best on record.



Two Kinds of "Blowings Up"

There are two kinds of "blowings up" in "Whims of Society," the new Ethel Clayton production for World-Pictures Brady-Made. The first is administered by the rich mill owner to his son for paying perfectly honorable attention to the poor, but pure factory girl. The second is promoted by an anarchist who sets off his trusty bomb underneath the rich mill owner's office, thus efficaciously avenging outraged labor and frustrating the old man's design to disown his son.

"Heart of the Sunset" Completed

Rex Beach Film Drama, to Be Distributed by Goldwyn, Is Two-Fisted Story of the Southwest

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION announces the completion of another great Rex Beach film drama, "Heart of the Sunset," made from the famous author's successful novel of that name. Unlike "The Auction Block," which was purchased from the Rex Beach Pictures Company and released as a regularly scheduled Goldwyn subject, "Heart of the Sunset" is to be distributed as a special Rex Beach production.

"Heart of the Sunset," the final scenes of which have just been completed in the Southwest, is declared by its producers to be in every way a worthy successor to "The Auction Block," a "clean-up" picture for exhibitors everywhere. After viewing it in its unassembled state, Rex Beach declares he believes it is a more powerful production than "The Barrier," his most successful film story of life in the elemental.

Anna Q. Nilsson is the featured feminine player in "Heart of the Sunset." In the leading masculine role—the Rex Beach pictures have no stars, so called—is Herbert Heyes.

"Heart of the Sunset" is a two-fisted story, such as Rex Beach loves to write, of the free country of the borderland between Texas and Mexico at the time the revolutions threatened to involve that country in serious trouble with the United States.

Others in the cast of "Heart of the Sunset" besides Miss Nilsson and Mr. Heyes are Robert Taber, F. L. Fernandez, Jane Miller, William Frederic and Irene Boyle.

Sees Industry Seriously Crippled

AILEEN ST. JOHN-BRENON SAYS U. S. WILL DRAFT THE BEST BRAINS

BY AILEEN ST. JOHN-BRENON

IN THIS COUNTRY, it seems to me, we have not yet grasped the grim seriousness of the war into which we have lately entered.

I am not a calamity howler and I am not one of those who believe the war is going to send the motion picture industry to the dogs. The motion picture has come to stay. It has already taken its place among the foremost industries of the world.

But that the war is going to cripple the industry, I haven't a doubt. Not because of the war tax, not because of increased admission prices, or the salaries of stars and the hundred and one comparatively insignificant reasons that are being continually set forth, but because the government needs men. When I say men, I do not necessarily mean brawn. In this particular instance I mean brains.

Many forecasts of what the war will do to the industry have been made, but here is one that is unique in that it deals with conscription of man power as the trade's biggest problem. The writer predicts that the government will draft the best brains in the business, from executives to skilled workmen, and as a result the industry will be seriously crippled.

Sees All in the War

The government is going to call upon the brains of the industry to help win the war. In a year or two there won't be an able man to be found in this country who is not devoting his energies, his skill and his entire time to doing his bit for his country.

The motion picture industry will do its share. It has a vast supply of resources which even now the government is calling for. Do you think our young men are going to refuse to answer?

When the government calls for mechanics, where will better ones be found than in the studios? Electricians, camera men, still photographers, scenic artists for camouflage, telephone operators and stenographers—all will respond to their country's call and the industry will be crippled.

Can't Expect Normal

We can't expect everything to run smoothly and calmly in these troubled times. We, too, must use our vast resources to help win this war. Is it going to harm the industry that we must be hampered a little in producing entertainment? We have other work to do. We can turn our cameras to better use. Our directors are going to devote their skill towards making pictures that deal with the war and the vital questions that the stupendous conflict has raised. Is that ruining the industry? Far from it. It's fulfilling one of the highest developments of which the motion picture is capable.

You can't ruin an industry like ours. It is destined to take an important place in the world's work. Now is the time to prove what it can do.

Pictures Help Win War

The motion picture is going to be one of the vital factors in the winning of this war. It's going to be a strong factor in bringing the various countries closer together, to express their real aims and accomplishments and to spread propaganda. The screen tells the truth. The written word has little value compared to seeing with one's own eye.

Even at the present time the various drills and war tactics of our allies are being demonstrated to our boys in the camps by means of motion pictures. They are made to realize the havoc that Germany has wrought wherever she has been by means of the screen.

You can't go into a moving picture theater without seeing a picture that shows our audiences what our boys are doing at the front, and how they are being taken care of. They say the moving picture is going into a decline. Why, it hasn't even come into its own. It's just beginning to do its great work and to demonstrate its power and its strength.

New Spirit Forseen

Before many months are over you will find that every able bodied man will be taking the war very seriously. Unless he is doing his bit he will feel ashamed.

If these calamity howlers feel that the industry is unable to bear the tax that has been put upon them, let them get together and unite to make their own sacrifices. Let the star who is getting, say $100,000 annually, show his patriotism by accepting a little less. Let the president of his corporation forego a little of his personal profit and gain. They can't possibly spend all the money they are receiving and if they do let them make sacrifices just the same as everybody else.

The whole forces of the United States will be devoted to this stupendous business of making war and conquering a ruthless enemy, and everything else will come second. The motion picture industry will be doing its share. It will be crippled for the time being, of that there can be no doubt, but it will not, and never will be crushed.

Direct Sales Plan Wins Two More Producers

The Frohman Amusement Company, Herbert Brenon Productions, Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, Ivan Film Corporation, Triumph Film Corporation, Harry Rapf Productions and The Shubert, Hammerstein & Ince Productions now constitute the independent producers co-operating with motion picture exhibitors' units throughout the country in the direct sales plan for the furnishing of service direct from producers to exhibitors, eliminating intervening profits and expenses.

The Herbert Brenon Productions and the Shubert, Hammerstein and Ince companies are two new companies affiliating in this plan. They were invited by the original five independent producing companies to join and did so at a meeting held in the Longacre building, New York City.

Thomas J. Hamlin, secretary and general manager of the Associated Theaters, Incorporated, with headquarters at Minneapolis, has signed a contract for one release per week for 645 members of that organization and announced that he is starting west immediately to extend the organization in the states of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and Montana, and that those states will book in conjunction with the states which he now represents, Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota.

Contracts will be closed next week for New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, Illinois and most of the south. Exhibitors' organizations in every state are organizing to handle this service and the seven independent producing companies are confident that the plan has "gone over" and will be a success.

Charles C. Pettijohn of Indianapolis and Louis L. Levine of Brooklyn, both prominent members of the two national exhibitors' associations, prepared the plan

Griffith Works Sixteen Hours a Day

Great War Spectacle Closely Guarded From Trade and Public, Not More Than Ten Persons Knowing Plot

D. W. GRIFFITH is working sixteen hours daily in editing and titling the film of his next great spectacle, a drama of the western front, which he is producing under the auspices of the British and French war offices. The measure of the task is appreciable when it is known that he has shot 263,000 feet of film to be shrunk for display purposes to 10,000.

The footage of film consumed closely approaches that used in the production of "Intolerance" and exceeds that used in "The Birth of a Nation," his other great spectacles. Persons who have had the privilege of watching the drama in the studio projecting room declare that Griffith has surpassed all his previous efforts.

Never has such great secrecy surrounded the making of a motion picture. Not more than ten persons know the plot. Its larger details, however, have been approved by the experts of the British and French war offices.

The announcement that it was to be a war drama has aroused aggressive curiosity from unexpected sources. A special watchman whom Mr. Griffith has at the studios appealed to him for aid because of questionable incidents. To offset possible trouble, Mr. Griffith ordered the films placed in a secret vault in a Los Angeles bank. As he needs them they are brought from the vault to the studio and returned each night.

Several weeks will be required to complete the films for release. To speed up the work, Mr. Griffith arises each morning at five-thirty o'clock, is at the studio shortly after seven and with the exception of two short recesses for lunch and dinner remains at his work constantly until midnight. This schedule continues seven days in the week. Not once in more than seven months has he had more than six hours' sleep during the twenty-four.

His indefatigable industry inspired comment by his chauffeur, "Mac," to a stranger who was loitering about Mr. Griffith's big blue limousine. Of necessity, Mac has to be on duty as many hours as his employer, although he sometimes cheats by snatching a little sleep in the afternoon in the car.

The stranger awoke Mac during one of these snoozes.

"Is this Mr. Griffith's car," he inquired.

"Yes."

An interval of silence, then:

"What do these initials 'D. W.' stand for?"

Mac, with unwholesome opinion of the long hours Mr. Griffith observed, looked at the man critically.

"Not many people know it," he said, "for it's sort of a secret, but those initials stand for 'Don't Work.'"

Sullivan Writes New Play for Hart

C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the best known and most successful of scenario writers, is at work on a William S. Hart picture for Artcraft. It is a story that ought to provide Hart with the very sort of role that he likes best, and Author Sullivan expresses the belief that picture patrons will find it to be the best he has ever fashioned for the popular western actor.

It is worth remembering that it was Sullivan who wrote for Hart a story which the latter believes a masterpiece of celluloid romance and adventure—"The Aryan." Sullivan, too, wrote "Hell's Hinges," which ran a close second to Hart's favorite story of the white man who conceived a great and terrible hatred for his own race.

Author Sullivan and Star Hart confer daily over the details of the new story. At present Hart is putting the finishing touches to a picture written by J. G. Hawks, one of the Thomas H. Ince staff of authors, who has provided Hart with many successes. The picture narrates a tale of the old adobe days of the southwest, and marks a return of Hart to the field of cinema action in which he has won some of his most noted triumphs.

Brooks to Run Hesperia

The latest addition to the ranks of film exploiters on a world-wide scale is the Hesperia Films Company, Inc., of which concern Edgar O. Brooks has been elected vice-president and general manager.

The Hesperia company will handle big features only, of both foreign and domestic manufacture, for exploitation in the United States, Canada, Cuba, South America and Central America, with a probability of extending its operations later to Australasia, China, Japan, the Philippines, India and South Africa.

The directors of Hesperia have shown great business acumen in appointing such a well known and experienced executive for general manager. Mr. Brooks recently resigned the general sales management of the Mutual Film Corporation, after a connection lasting upward of two years, and his previous affiliations with the firms of Gaumont, Universal and Cosmofotofilm, when he handled every conceivable branch of the business end of motion pictures during six years of active participation in the American field, will make him invaluable to the firm.

Russ Movies a Distinct Brand

LATE COMERS HAVE TO WAIT IN ANTE-ROOM FOR THE NEXT SHOW

WHILE RUSSIA REVOLTS and negotiates peace with the enemy and threatens to begin fighting again, residents of the cities calmly take in the movies just as do the stay-at-homes in the United States.

The Russian movie as an institution is vastly different than it is in the United States. How different is told by John A. Embry, American vice consul at Obessa, writing in a current issue of Commerce Reports, the publication of the Department of Commerce. Mr. Embry says:

"Odessa, with a population of 700,000, has 34 motion-picture theaters with a total seating capacity of about 20,000. These theaters are open seven days in the week (except on the eve of religious holidays) from 7 until 11:30 p. m., and are almost invariably crowded.

Offer Double Prices

"The price of admission ranges from 0.55 to 2.50 rubles (a ruble is 13 cents), according to the class of the theater and the location of the seat sold. The usual price paid for desirable seats in the first-class motion-picture theaters is 1 to 1.50 rubles, but the complete schedule of prices has on numerous occasions been successfully doubled by the management when an unusually attractive or expensive film was being shown. The seating capacity of the average motion-picture theater is about 800. Three or four of the first-class theaters have a seating capacity of about double this number.

"The programs in Russian motion-picture theaters greatly resemble American programs. There is usually a drama of four, five, or six reels, followed by a film of current events, travel, or comedy. Two or three performances are given each evening, according to the length of the program. Not more than two or three theaters in the city combine motion pictures and vaudeville. When the program in a Russian motion-picture theater has begun, patrons coming late are compelled to wait in an anteroom until the next performance commences. In this anteroom music is often provided, and there is generally a small buffet where one can buy sandwiches, tea, and candy. Frequently the anteroom of a Russian motion-picture theater occupies a half or even two-thirds as much space as the picture hall itself.

Tragedies Predominate

"The films shown in Russian motion-picture theaters are of many kinds and makes, but the great majority are of domestic manufacture and are almost always tragedies. No one ever saw or heard of a Russian love story ending happily in the films. But in spite of the popularity of the Russian tragedy, it is the writer's opinion that the typical American romance would be all the more welcome to Russian motion-picture audiences for having a knack of ending happily.

"For variety the managers of the Russian motion-picture theaters always have to depend upon films of foreign manufacture. Foreign films frequently seen in Russia are of Italian, French, and American make—named in the order of their importance in the Russian market. These foreign films never fail to draw good audiences. When one hears a motion-picture film praised in Russia, it is almost certain to be a film of foreign manufacture. The most successful foreign films are those of a strong tragic or criminal character and classical pictures, such as "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria." The classical films draw crowds from every class of Russian society.

Demand for Foreign Films

"The demand here for high-class foreign films is practically unlimited; the greater the variety of themes the better. Dramas, tragedies, comedies, detective stories, patriotic pictures, current events, novelty pictures, all are cordially received by Russian motion-picture audiences.

"As a general rule, it may be safely stated that any film that has a successful run in the United States will be well received in Russia. Film brokers interviewed on this subject especially emphasized the demand for first-class films of a tragic or criminal character and also inquired about railway-touring films, the new submarine films, and the new apparatus that produces the sounds occurring in the picture shown on the screen.

"Successful dramatizations of well-known novels would also be popular. The Russians are great readers and the best of the French and English literature has been translated into the Russian language.

Some of the Films Shown

"Well-known motion-picture films that have been shown in Odessa and the prices at which they have been sold are the following:

"(1) Quo Vadis, city rights released for 2.50 rubles per meter (a meter is 39.37 inches); royalty for first night shown, 50 per cent of admission receipts, all other nights 40 per cent. Double prices of admission were charged when this film was shown.

"(2) Cabiria, release rights for three governments in southern Russia, 3.50 rubles per meter; hire for each evening shown, 250 rubles.

"(3) The Fall of a Nation, release price not learned; hire for each evening shown, 250 rubles.

"(4) Macbeth, city rights released for 5,000 rubles; hire for each evening not learned.

"(5) Peg o' the Ring, release rights for three cities, 2 rubles per meter; hire for all five series for each evening, 600 rubles."

"Broadway Bill" Completed

With the filming of a few remaining scenes which had to be made in New York, following two location trips and a long period of work in the studio, the production of Harold Lockwood's coming Metro wonder play, "Broadway Bill," was completed last week by Director Fred J. Balshofer.

The making of "Broadway Bill" entailed considerable traveling on the part of Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Balshofer and their aides. The interiors were made in New York, but for the exterior scenes the company went first to Florida and then to Maine in order to get the proper atmosphere.

Picturesque rustic scenery was obtained in Florida, while lumber camp scenes in mid-winter were photographed in the north. The material obtained, particularly in Maine, where a good bit of the action of the story was staged in a blizzard, will draw more than passing commendation, it is expected, and lend a charm to a story which is strong in dramatic values.

The story of the film revolves around "Broadway Bill," a rich young man who gives up the life which has earned him his picturesque sobriquet and makes good in a Maine lumber camp, proving to a girl that he is worthy of her love. The manner in which the story is worked out shows many original touches.

Opens $1,000,000 House

Sid Grauman, one of the leading theatrical lights on the Pacific Coast, has opened his big new $1,000,000 photoplay house in Los Angeles. It is the most beautiful and pretentious motion picture house on the coast. It was christened by William S. Hart in the Artcraft production, "The Silent Man."

Margarita Fischer, American-Mutual star, in two scenes from "Jilted Janet."

"Jilted Janet" Sparkles with Comedy

Margarita Fischer, Appearing in New American Film, Is Shown in a Myriad of Funny Situations

THE AMERICAN FILM COMPANY, Inc., has given a refreshing script to Margarita Fischer for her newest play, "Jilted Janet." It is like a crisp breeze from a cool ocean on a warm day, with its snappy comedy and unexpected situations, which are taken care of by the vivacious little screen star of the American with all of her usual resourceful and vibrant personality.

Helen Starr wrote the story and Elizabeth Mahoney polished up the continuity, while Lloyd Ingraham has given us a very clever interpretation of a spirited girl, who has lost her fiance because she has lost her fortune and who keeps her head level under both losses and plugs right along into a better love and a better fortune. Jack Mower is Miss Fischer's leading man in this sparkling comedy drama.

Miss Fischer, as Janet Barnes, has invested the remnants of a fortune in a sickly, down-at-the-heels lemon grove in California. Her brother is disgusted with poverty and lemon groves and the bugs that frequent them. Janet tries to cheer him up by reading him the letter that her very frank fiance has written her. Fiance has a weather eye for the main chance and tells Janet right out that the engagement is off because he is going to marry a former pal of hers—who still has a little money.

"Oh, very well," says Janet, nonchalantly. "Cheer up, brother—we'll knock their eye out with this picture of the Graham estate next to ours. Maybe they'll think it is ours."

And that's exactly what is done. The picture excites their envy to the extent of a desire to see it. So here is poor Janet with a couple of over-night wedding guests on her hands and no estate.

Didn't I tell you that Janet was resourceful? She runs over and makes love to the old Italian caretakers of the estate and borrows the place for just one night. You see, the bachelor owner of the place is not expected home for a long time and they think they can play safe.

Well, there you are. All the ingredients for a perfectly grand mix-up.

The owner happens along, gets on to the plot and pretends to be a butler and buttles for the lunch. Then some political crooks come down from the city to get him and a plainclothes man is sent to protect him and the bride catches her husband trying to make love to Janet and she decides that there are altogether too many crooks and thugs and mysterious young butlers around to suit her. So the unwelcome guests leave, to the great relief of Janet.

Ah, but she still has to reckon with her host.

"You stole my house," he says sternly.

And poor, confused, frightened but nervy little Janet has to plead guilty—and accept sentence.

Blackwell Would Play Villains

Carlyle Blackwell's secretly cherished ambition, as recently confessed, is to play "heavy" roles—otherwise villains. More particularly Mr. Blackwell, the beau ideal of dress clothes heroes for World Pictures, would be perfectly happy if he could be cast for a series of tramp parts. It seems that he once played such a character for two years in vaudeville, and when he quit, the "big time" powers refused to continue booking the playlet.

Ann Pennington Film Ready Soon

Ann Pennington's newest Paramount picture, "Sunshine Nan," is now rapidly nearing completion in the Famous Players-Lasky New York studios. "Sunshine Nan" is Alice Hegan Rice's highly successful story, published this year, the original title being "Calvary Alley." Miss Rice will be remembered as author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Lovely Mary," "Mr. Opp," and others.

As Nan, Miss Pennington appears in the part of a fascinating little slum girl. Nan lives in Calvary alley with her stepmother and the latter's second husband. There she is a regular tom-boy, fighting with the "alley cats," when there is trouble between them and the choir boys in the fashionable church, behind which the alley runs.

Her particular gallant is Dan, a waif. Life in the alley affords considerable excitement for both Nan and Dan and in the course of years the former proves herself the stronger of the two. Through her efforts the young man reaps the benefit of an invention which enables them to marry and helps her to win her heart's desire at last—to "clean up" Calvary alley and transform it into Cathedral court.

Mrs. Lewis McCord, whose death was recently reported, had already commenced work in this picture. Her part has been turned over to Helen Tracy. Others in the cast are Richard Bathelmes, John Hines and Charles Eldridge. Charles Giblyn is directing the film, the scenario having been written by Eve Unsell.

New Fox Star Begins Work

Peggy Hyland is in New Orleans, where she has begun work on her first picture for William Fox. O. A. C. Lund will direct the picture.

"Nerve" Is Freuler's Biggest Asset

Writer Depicts How He Climbed to Top Through Being Sure as Possible, but Taking a Chance

NERVE ABOVE ALL things "made" John R. Freuler, according to Irving S. Sayford, writing in the February number of System. Mr. Freuler's entrance into the "game" and on up to the successful position he now occupies is reviewed. The article follows:

"'Be as sure as you can, but take a chance.' Every successful business man, probably, has fixed business principles and methods by which he aims to guide his course. John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has a number, of which this is foremost.

"Freuler was 30 years old and had a modest but thriftily successful banking business in Milwaukee when he first became interested in motion pictures. That was 15 years ago. It came about in an odd way. He had lent $25 to a needy acquaintance, who was paying it back in $1 and $2 instalments.

"The debtor, grateful and desirous of returning a favor for a favor, was keeping his eyes open for some money-making tip he could carry to the banker when an itinerant motion picture show drifted into Milwaukee and foundered. The man who owed the $25 got wind of it, told Freuler, and urged him to back the show as a permanent attraction in a vacant store room downtown. Freuler investigated, made as sure as he could that there was money in the enterprise, and—took a chance.

"He bought the picture outfit for $450 and established the showman in the old store room as manager on a fifty-fifty basis. But before long Freuler ousted him and took over the 'Theater Comique' entire, to protect his investment. He injected real business methods into the show, and in a short time was earning a good profit on the small capital he had invested. The theater, one of the early motion picture houses in the United States, still is doing business, though it's no longer Freuler's—he sold it years ago for a lot more than it cost him.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"In the earlier days of the photoplay there were no exchanges for the systematic distribution of films to exhibitors. Films, Freuler knew from his meagre experience, were peddled about in suitcases from theater to theater by salesmen who made it curtly plain that they cared little whether a manager took them or left them. Generally, too, they were scratched and dingy from much handling by many people.

"Or, again, the exhibitor could write to the distributing house, which, like the several producing companies, was controlled by a small coterie, for a given number of reels a week; then, like as not, he would be sent 'repeaters,' films which he had already shown in his house. He had to show them again or let his screen go blank until the next consignment arrived.

"'I had had these experiences myself at first hand,' says Freuler, 'and I concluded that the men in control could pyramid their enormous profits, despite the ridiculously unbusinesslike way in which they operated, only because they had a cinch on something the public was clamoring for and because they had no competition. I decided to become their competitor myself—to enter the distributing end of the game.'

"He quietly reinforced his knowledge as a customer of the unsystematic methods of doing business by fuller investigation; then he started himself along the road of film-distributing by opening the first 'independent' exchange. He obtained his films from the producing companies and marketed them to the theaters under sound business methods of his own devising.

"Then he entered the producing field. He worked out shipping and checking systems which made it impossible for the same picture to be sent to an exhibitor twice. He established a special bookkeeping system by which he could tell at a glance, at any time, exactly where his business stood. He figured out a motion picture card accounting system. When a new play was to be screened and the question arose of the best actors and actresses for it, he had only to turn to this and see at a glance the strength and weakness of every player in his employ. That file is a running inventory of personality values.

"'Imagination,' holds John R. Freuler, 'is a vital asset in the carrying on of a successful business.' Perhaps the following is a concrete proof.

"No one had, apparently, thought of making an international success of two-reel comedies. Freuler put in six months of thought in wooing his imagination toward that end—and at the end of the six months his imagination told him that Charles Chaplin was the actor for the job. The public knows the rest—but only Freuler and his associates know what large profits already have accrued from this investment.

"'Watch detail; it is the hairspring of trade,' says Freuler. Here is a typical instance of how he watches it. One day he was viewing a picture in a Mutual projection room, but he was not satisfied with its lighting effects. He went up to the screen and rubbed his fingers over the sheeting to see if it needed renewal—he found it smudged with dust, apparently accumulated there for months. He had the screen cleaned off—and the picture stood out well. And so he sent word to the sales department: 'If an exhibitor anywhere complains of any of our pictures as dim, blurred, or improperly lighted, suggest to him to see whether there is an accumulation of dust on his theater screen.'

"It is also a Freuler axiom to 'Use your utmost knowledge of human nature, backed by personal acquaintance with record, in selecting the captains who are to handle your working units.' Dennis J. Sullivan, general manager of Mutual, worked in the same bank with Freuler years ago; they were friends of long standing. Later Sullivan rose to a place on the general sales board of the American Tobacco Company. Freuler wanted a new general manager for Mutual. He hired Sullivan and got his consent to 'take the road' selling Mutual films. For three years Freuler watched Sullivan rise step by step; then he made him general manager. You can't walk in and hang up your hat and sit down at one of the important desks while J. R. Freuler is around; and he generally is around.

"Does Freuler believe in good pay for good work, you ask? Well, now, suppose you ask Charles Chaplin."

Make New Enid Bennett Film

Work has been started at the Thomas H. Ince studios on the second Paramount picture starring Enid Bennett, the dainty little actress from the Antipodes. Jerome Storm is directing the production under Mr. Ince's supervision and Earl Rodney will support Miss Bennett again. The scenes are laid in a small Kansas town and many rural types will be introduced.

Everything indicates that the picture will prove fully as interesting as the first Paramount in which Miss Bennett appeared, which will be released in the near future. The first picture has as the working title, "The Keys of the Righteous." The second production has not yet been given a name. Jerome Storm was director of the first film also.

Two Directors for Mary Miles Minter

Edward Sloman Hereafter Will Collaborate with Henry King—"Extra! Extra!" First Under New Arrangement

MARY MILES MINTER, star in American Film Company productions, will hereafter film all pictures under the two-director system. Edward Sloman will collaborate with Henry King, who has been directing the Minter pictures. Miss Minter's new story "Extra! Extra!" written by Will Richey, is being completed under the new management.

Captivating June Caprice, William Fox star, in a scene from "The Heart of Romance."

Mr. Sloman has just signed a new contract with the American Film Company after completing in the last year a series of twelve pictures starring William Russell, in which every picture rang the bell. While William Russell is deciding what he will do for the coming season, Mr. Sloman will work with Henry King to complete the American plans for putting out Miss Minter in the very best pictures to be found or directed.

"Extra! Extra!" is Miss Minter's seventh story in this series and as she regards the number "7" as her lucky figure, it is easy to see that it is going to be one of her very best.

In this picture Miss Minter experiences a giddy whirl from the secluded fastness of a girl's exclusive finishing school to the managing editorship of a flourishing daily. She changes its policy around to suit herself, and although the staff fear that it means the ruination of the paper, it brings about the downfall of a disgraceful political crook who has long sought to run the town and puts the paper over the hill on easy street.

Miss Minter has an opportunity to wear some beautiful gowns in this picture. She spent a week prior to the rehearsals in Los Angeles selecting a wardrobe that will dazzle the eyes of her admirers. She has ten new gowns for this picture alone and the modiste swore with crossed fingers that no duplicates of them exist.

Theda Bara Is Well Cast in "The Forbidden Path"

A story particularly well suited to her emotional abilities and to her personality is said to be provided in the new Theda Bara super production, "The Forbidden Path." J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed all of the Theda Bara super productions, was in charge of the new picture. Adrian Johnson was the author of the scenario. The picture has just been completed at the William Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J.

In "The Forbidden Path," Miss Bara plays the part of a girl who is wronged by a rich youth. She exposes him as he is about to wed a society girl. The society girl repudiates her wealthy sweetheart when she hears the story and she forces him to agree to marry the poor girl whom he has ruined. The poor girl gets her revenge at the altar. There is a dramatic ending.

Comedies Become a Hard Problem

Fans No Longer Laugh at Usual Stunts and Producers Face Task of Finding New Situations

BY LLOYD (HAM) HAMILTON
Of "Ham and Bud" Fame.

MAKING COMEDIES today is one of the hardest problems that a person ever tackled. It isn't like in the old days; and by this I mean only a year or two ago, which we call the old days because a comedy taken during that time seems decidedly old fashioned now, due to the rapid rise in comedy production.

There is not one phase in the production of motion picture comedies today that isn't a great improvement over the fun film of the past. Of course everyone has his opinion as to the cause of the great improvement. The biggest reason is the public or fans themselves. They have become tired of the old hokum comedy, the poor sets, hideous make-ups and other stuff such as throwing pies. A year or two ago an audience would scream if someone was hit in the face with a pie—but today the kids are the only ones who seem to enjoy it.

In other words, it is getting harder to make the people laugh. They want to laugh bad enough; but they have seen the old hokum so much that it no longer appears humorous to them. Just like a joke, the more you hear it, the less you like it, and finally it doesn't even bring a smile. The big problem of the comedy producer and comedian today is, "What can we do to make them laugh?" Something new, which hasn't been shown to them until it has become tiresome, must be found and this is where the hard part comes in.

About two years ago when I was doing my present character of Ham in the "Ham and Bud" comedies it was easy to get the people to laugh. Any time that the director wanted to break up a situation he would cut to me making all kinds of falls and tumbles for no reason at all, and this would get screams from an audience, but today it is doubtful if they would smile at this. If anyone takes a fall in a comedy now they want a reason for it, some logical situation that causes the comedian to fall. If not, they won't laugh at it.

The question has resolved itself therefore into getting new situations, new ways of doing things, and new forces to produce laughs. This all takes time, and explains why it now takes from ten to fourteen weeks to make a good comedy where we used to make them in four days. They cost thousands and thousands of dollars now, where they used to cost only hundreds.

In my first Sunshine Comedy for the Fox program we were quite a while getting a new angle to work on, but finally it was hit upon to make a comedy and use real lions to help make the situations humorous. Few persons, I suppose, can see anything funny about a lion, but I am sure that all those who saw "Roaring Lions and Wedding Belles" will agree with me that the lions certainly helped make the situations screamingly funny. Of course, it wasn't funny at all to work with the lions roaming around with me at large in the sets, but it was very funny to look at on the screen.

Some of the funniest things on the screen which get the biggest laughs are not in the least bit funny to do, but if they are sure to get the laughs in a theater that is all we care about. The thing to do is to get the film fans laughing and to do this some new and original "gags" and situations must be manufactured.

An automobile tearing through a shack was a riot a year or so ago, but to get a good laugh now the car would have to tear through a mansion, so you can see with the rapid progress that comedy films are making it is just a question of "What Can We Do to Make Them Laugh?" I tell you it's getting harder to get a laugh every day, and yet the public want to laugh more than ever.

"One More American," Is Beban's Next Picture

Following the release of "Jules of the Strong Heart," in which George Beban makes his current re-appearance in Paramount pictures, after an absence of several months, the distinguished character actor will be seen next month in "One More American," picturized by Olga Printzlau from the stage play, "The Land of the Free," by William C. DeMille, presented in New York several seasons ago with signal success.

While it was merely a short play—a "slice of life"—it received much praise from the press and in its developed screen form, with a happier ending than that originally appended, will prove, it is believed, one of the most pleasing vehicles ever chosen for Beban.

The fact that it is located in New York—Ellis Island—and the colorful precincts of "Little Italy," gives it an added interest to metropolitan audiences, while its extremely human qualities, the pathos and humor combined, will make it equally entertaining to every variety of audience.

Song Dedicated to "Kiddie" Star

A war-time ballad, called "Bring Back My Daddy to Me," is dedicated to Madge Evans, "the World's kiddie star," whose real daddy, by the way, went off to war in Uncle Sam's service months ago. The new ballad, which is published by Leo Feist, carries little Madge's portrait, with a very serious expression, upon the cover.

Darrell Foss and Teddy Sampson in "Her American Husband." Texas Guinan in a scene from "The Gun Woman." Both of these plays are released on the Triangle program.

Vitagraph Men Preach Optimism

Representatives Under Instructions to Show Exhibitors That Year Is Bound to Be a Good One

THE sales chiefs of the Vitagraph distributing organization, following a series of important conferences held at the home office last week, have taken the field again and carry with them instructions from Walter W. Irwin, general manager, that the entire sales force must act and preach confidence.

"I have instructed our division managers to carry into every branch of our organization the spirit of big business, which is an honest reflection of our sales records for the last six months," said Mr. Irwin.

"Vitagraph has just gone through some of the best months in its history, and our outlook for the coming season contemplates the biggest business in the history of the company.

"Much of the industry's present-day trouble is due to fear and lack of courage. That fear is unfounded and that lack of courage to push ahead should not enter the breast of any one is proved by the history of the industry in England. At the beginning of the war the picture business in England became panicky, but within a few months they were and still are doing a bigger business than ever before. This was because wholesome entertainment for the people at home as well as for the men at the front is even more necessary in times of war than in normal times.

"With the financial stress in mind, through which England has gone, and of which we, by comparison, are sure to continue to be relatively free, how can any thinking man in any branch of the industry lose courage instead of gain it?

"Where local conditions are for the moment unfavorable, the industry as a whole should recognize that these conditions are only temporary, and accordingly there should be no let-down in confidence or let-up in efforts. The moment a person loses confidence or lets his courage ebb, his efficiency and earning capacity are at once reduced to a point far below par.

"I want our entire sales organization to sell courage. I want them to sell their goods not only on merit, but by selling confidence. I want them to carry good cheer, based on confidence, into every theater that they visit, whether they sell film or not, for just to the extent that the various sales forces imbue the spirit of confidence into the exhibitors will the exhibitors radiate optimism to their patrons.

"An exhibitor who meets his neighbors with cheerfulness and confidence draws to his house not only those of a similar disposition, but those who are unduly frightened and need the warmth of the atmosphere of confidence and optimism.

"A great deal of criticism has been heaped upon President Wilson because he at one time said that business depression is psychological. To a very large extent, the President is right, and as recognition of this fact all great national businesses recognize their duty to keep business normal by destroying pessimism and plowing ahead and shouldering their taxation burdens with a smile. The greater the burdens, the greater the necessity for bigger business.

"Our own faith in business conditions is witnessed by the program we now have under way. At a tremendous cost we are in the serial field for one episode for every week in the year. We have in preparation 'Over the Top,' in which Sergeant Guy Empy is featured, the greatest drawing production ever offered to the exhibitors.

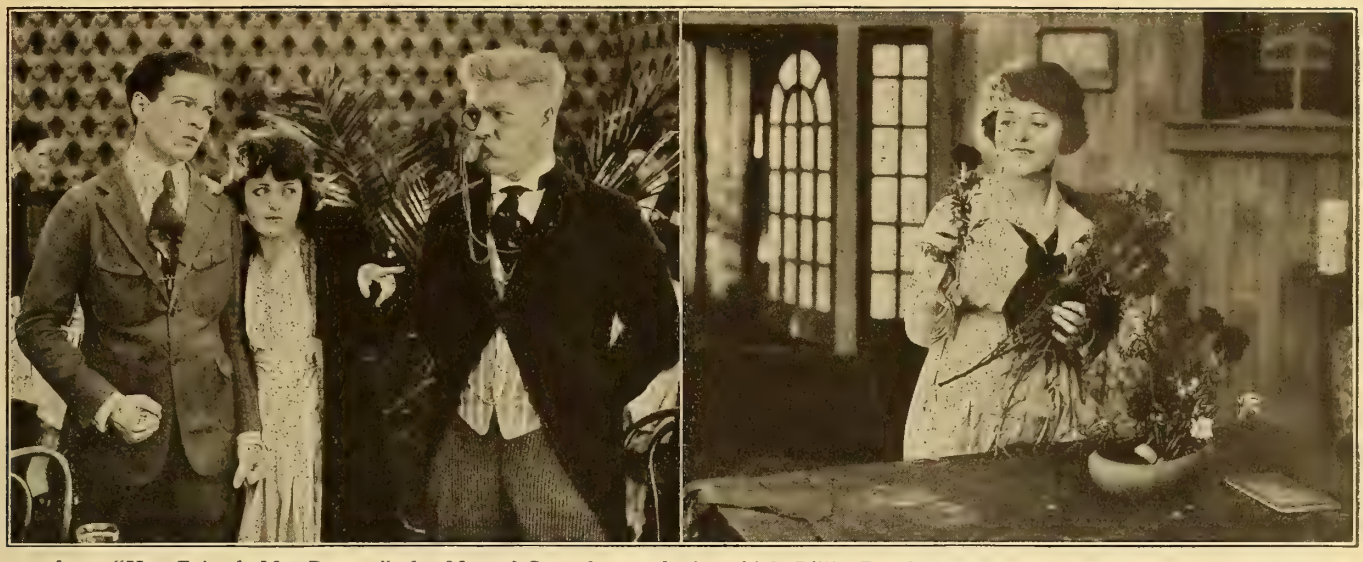
"We have the New York state patriotic film, in which Governor Whitman appears, and which teaches a lesson not only of what a state can do, but what every individual in the United States can do to aid the Government; and we have a varied and well-rounded program for every need of every theater.

"All of this involves an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars for promotion and advertising work alone, to say nothing of production and distribution costs. If we did not feel certain of the market, regardless of temporary handicaps, we certainly would not have the courage to undertake the tremendous projects now under way.

"But, as I have stated above, the market is right, and we are going ahead with every assurance of big, sound business for 1918."

Leonhardt to New England on Special Mission

Harry Leonhardt, general western manager of Goldwyn Pictures, with headquarters in Los Angeles, has been called east and is now on a special commission for his organization in New England, and temporarily stationed in Boston.



Mr. Leonhardt, who is one of the best-known executives in film salesmanship, has direction for Goldwyn in the Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle zones and is one of the outstanding figures in the west coast country.

Owing to his years of experience and his business association with the Keith and Proctor interests, he is known to theatrical men in every part of the east.

Mr. Leonhardt's family are remaining in warmer California, where there are no such things as coalless days and where sunlight does the work that Edison current is called upon to do in the Yankee states.

Pick Title for New Hayakawa Film

Paramount Feature Will Be Known as "The Honor of His House"—Action Is Based on Triangular Love Affair

THE title of Sessue Hayakawa's newest Paramount picture, to follow "Hidden Pearls," which will be his next release, is "The Honor of His House," from an original story and scenario by Marion Fairfax and directed by William C. DeMille.

A triangular love affair that develops in this story culminates in a remarkable feat in surgery by which blood transfusion is carried to its uttermost limits, a scientific dream—wherein the blood is literally pumped from the veins of one person while that of another is pumped in. In this self-sacrificing incident a great wrong is righted and the problem involved satisfactorily solved.

The picture affords some remarkably fine opportunities for dramatic acting, while the scenes on a barren island and the deck of a great liner are particularly effective.

Florence Vidor supports Mr. Hayakawa in this film, which is declared by those who witnessed the film in the making to be the most intensely emotional story in which the Japanese Paramount star has ever been seen.

"Hidden Pearls," Paramount's next screen offering, in which Sessue Hayakawa will appear before the public next month, has for location the islands of the South Seas, of which Robert Louis Stevenson wrote and where he lived and died. The Hawaiian islands were actually utilized in filming the picture, under the direction of George H. Melford.

Naturally, photographic effects of a high order will characterize the picture and Paul Perry, who did the camera work, caught some extremely beautiful scenes, vistas of tropical beach and woodland, glades overhung with the waving fronds of exotic trees, bits of the rocky headland, with the booming surf beating upon it, etc.

That the spectator who enjoys particularly the scenic aspects of motion pictures will revel in this film, even as he is thrilled by the truly compelling story written by Beulah Marie Dix, is readily anticipated.

The plot has its beginning in the city of Honolulu, but is developed and culminates in the mystical island of Uahiva. Approximately enough the ending is under the palms on the island shore, with moonlight and the song of the surf as a fitting accompaniment to the triumph of love.

New Edition of "A Woman"

Current Essanay comedy releases are unusually rich in those elements which appeal to good showmen, according to General Film Company. Heading the list is Charlie Chaplin in the new edition of his sensational success of some time ago, "A Woman."

Charlie involves himself in a lot of difficulties from which he extricates himself, or attempts to do so, in the guise of a woman. This is the sixth of Essanay's new editions of Chaplin's early successes.

Fox Star in Dual Role

One of the William Fox February releases is Gladys Brockwell in "The Moral Law." In this picture Miss Brockwell has a dual role of two sisters. The picture, it is said, gives her a chance for one of her best characterizations.

Ten Paralta Plays Ready to Show

All Feature Either Presents J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale or Henry B. Walthall

W. W. HODKINSON this week announced that ten Paralta plays featuring the three stars, Kerrigan, Barriscale and Walthall are now being distributed or are practically ready for distribution.

This is stated as assurance to the exhibitor of one of the important claims which Mr. Hodkinson has been making; that is, a continuous product of assured quality.

It is pointed out that these plays, prepared so long ahead as they have been, allow the Paralta company to live up to the high standard of quality which it has set.

The ten plays which are now ready are the following:

"A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan (issued).

"Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale (issued).

"His Robe of Honor," with Henry B. Walthall (issued).

"The Turn of a Card," with J. Warren Kerrigan.

"Humdrum Brown," with Henry B. Walthall.

"With Hoops of Steel," with Henry B. Walthall.

"Rose O'Paradise," with Bessie Barriscale.

"Within the Cup," with Bessie Barriscale.

"Blindfolded," with Bessie Barriscale.

"Patriotism," with Bessie Barriscale.

Triangle-Keystone Speeds Up Work

Favored by Delay in California Rains, Five Companies Are Busy on Snappy Schedule of Comedies

FAVORED by the delay in California rains, the Triangle-Keystone forces have been making hay while the sun shines. Five companies are busy at the Culver City studio on the extensive schedule of unusual comedies which S. C. Burr, comedy production manager, has mapped out for the present year.

An all-star cast under the direction of Herman Raymaker is completing work on the two-reel comedy, "A Playwright's Wrong," in which one of the striking scenic features is the interior of a motion picture theater. Much of the sparkling action which prepared the way for a series of novel and ludicrous situations takes place within this specially constructed palace of silent fun.

Throughout the filming of this story there have been few moments when Raymaker's troupe was not playing to a big audience composed of directors and performers who were off duty. Billy Franey, Maud Wayne, Dora Rodgers, Ward Caulfield and Milton Sims had exceptional opportunities to show their skill in straight comedy work and the laughs they drew from the critical crowds gathered around the camera convinced them that their work "went over."

Director Charles Avery has a big cast at work on a "society-crook" comedy, "Her Bohemian Party." Dainty Ruth Langston plays the principal feminine role, a society girl whose longing for new sensations leads to many harrowing and laughable experiences. Eugene Corey, as her sweetheart, and Arthur Moon, as a suave leader of a band of discriminating crooks, have good roles. Others in the cast are Al Harris, Joseph Belmont, Jim Rowe and Cliff Jordan.

Director Reggie Morris, who contracted a severe attack of grippe during the holiday season, is back at work on a one-reel comedy, "Three Hats and Two Heads." The complications which result from the similarity of milliners' creations and the finding of one of these hats in another man's home are so original and funny that Morris and his coworkers have many real laughs. In the cast are Rae Godfrey, Frank Bonn, Mario Bianchi, Rose Carter, Martin Kinney and Marianne Torre.

"A Rough Diamond," with Paddy McQuire, headed by a big cast of well-known fun makers, is having its finishing touches adjusted by Director Harry Edwards. Many of the important scenes are "shot" at one of the largest and most exclusive jewelry shops of the west. With thousands of dollars worth of gems within reach, temptation insisted upon flaunting itself in the face of McQuire, who happened to be cast in the role of a former crook who was finding it hard to reform.

Director William Beaudine has his latest two-reeler, "Slinging It," almost ready for the cutters. An unusually large cast, headed by Ray Griffith and Max Asher, was busy for nearly two weeks on this comedy, which is described as a "muddle of mud and money." Many exteriors, showing various phases of city and country life, were taken before any work was attempted at the studio. The weather man was guessing that rain might descend "almost any day" on southern California and Beaudine hurried along his outside "shots" and had them completed before the first big shower of the season set in.

Quaint Types in "Prunella"

The cast in "Prunella," Marguerite Clark's next vehicle for the Paramount program, includes quaint and interesting types of days gone by. Miss Clark plays the title role of Prunella, the unfortunate child of an elopment, who, after the death of her mother was reared from infancy by her three spinster aunts, Prude, Prim and Privacy, characterized in the photoplay by Isabel Berwin, Nora Cecil and Marcia Harris.

Carmel Myers in the Bluebird film, "The Green Seal."

Jules Raucourt, who has just completed his work in "La Tosca," with Pauline Frederick, as Mario, plays the part of Pierrot, the impetuous lover who takes Prunella from the home where she has been brought up to young womanhood as innocent of worldly things as a child, and after a few years of married life deserts her. He finds that he cannot live without her, however, and comes back to the broken-hearted girl humble and penitent.

"Prunella" holds pleasant memories for Miss Clark, for it was in this vehicle that she scored one of her biggest stage successes and which led Adolph Zukor to seek her services under the Paramount banner.

The extreme innocence of Prunella and the efforts of her aunts to withhold from her all knowledge of affairs of the world leads to many humorous situations, in marked contrast to the later incidents in which Prunella excites much sympathy.

Maurice Tourneur, who has won such great commendation for his artistic direction of "Rose of the World," an Artcraft picture starring Elsie Ferguson, and who has just finished the spectacular production of "The Blue Bird" for Artcraft, is directing Miss Clark.

Exhibitors Praise Mutual

Mutual's big stars, William Russell, Mary Miles Minter, Ann Murdock, Edna Goodrich, Margarita Fischer, Olive Tell and Billie Rhodes, continue to elicit unqualified praise from exhibitors and Mutual's service is being commended.

When an exhibitor writes: "You seem to feel that I am not a 'second-story man' and you are serving me as though my business was appreciated," there is no doubt that he is well pleased. This is what Geo. A. Bleich, manager of the Amusement Enterprises, Owensboro, Ky., writes Mutual, and also adds: "Don't send any salesmen to see me; just continue supplying releases of the quality as at present, and I will be with you every minute."

The popularity of the William Russell picture continues to grow. F. M. Holmsley, manager of the Crystal Theater, Pittsburg, Texas, writes: "Keep sending me such pictures as 'High Play' and I will use them as long as I am in the game."

The consistent excellence of Mutual star productions is expressed in a concise manner by L. E. Holwager, manager of the Grand Theater, Madison, Indiana, who writes: "There is nothing on the market better than Mutual all star features."

"The Cross Bearer" Ready in March

New World Film a War Romance of Belgium In Which Cardinal Mercier Is Principal Personage

"THE CROSS BEARER," in seven reels, will be published March 18 by World-Pictures Brady-Made. This picture play has Cardinal Mercier as its principal personage and Belgium as its setting. It is to be issued upon the regular World program at regular World prices, in keeping with the fixed policy of that corporation.

"The Cross Bearer" will be the third special feature to be distributed to exhibitors of World Pictures without extra cost. "Rasputin, the Black Monk," and "The Burglar" were published similarly, at greatly increased expenditure on the manufacturer's part. Like these productions, "The Cross Bearer" was made as a personal venture by William A. Brady and purchased by the World Film Corporation for its regular patrons by way of demonstrating that big features can be brought within the reach of program houses.

One of the big scenes of "The Cross Bearer" is an authentic reproduction of the Louvain cathedral, in which Cardinal Mercier is celebrating mass when the German forces rush in and take possession, ejecting the congregation, piling up the seats and setting fire to them, and afterward making a barracks of the edifice.

This scene was built alongside the World's studio in Fort Lee, and was exceedingly massive and imposing. Upon an adjoining lot a street scene several blocks in length was constructed upon a scale sufficiently large to permit the passage of artillery and great numbers of men and women. On the night before this street scene was to have been "shot" a heavy wind storm arose and flattened the structure completely, besides carrying parts of it a long way into the interior of New Jersey, so that it became necessary to rebuild the set entirely.

Montagu Love plays the role of Cardinal Mercier in "The Cross Bearer," and the impersonation is said to be the most impressive exhibition of acting yet contributed to the screen by this always dependable artist.

There are no episodes of carnage in this picture, which, however, contains a number of military scenes, such for instance as the German soldiers entering Louvain and taking formal possession of the city. Many of the interiors, reproducing various rooms in the cardinal's residence, are of regal magnificence, showing furniture, tapestries and paintings of great value.

These interiors were made following photographs of the real cardinal's palace, and there was no sparing of expenditure in this or other directions.

The love story of "The Cross Bearer" concerns the beautiful young ward of the cardinal and an officer in the Belgian army. Plotting to capture the girl for purposes of his own is the German governor general, whose designs are foiled by the superior craft of the aged prelate known as "the protector of Belgium."

Mutual's Schedule of Releases for Late February

Mutual's schedule of late February feature releases includes productions starring Margarita Fischer, Ann Murdock and William Russell, while March will bring pictures starring Mary Miles Minter, Olive Tell, Miss Murdock, Mr. Russell and Miss Fischer.

The schedule for late February is:

February 11—Margarita Fischer in "Jilted Janet."

February 18—Ann Murdock in "My Wife."

February 25—William Russell in "Detective Dan Cupid."

"Jilted Janet" has been pronounced one of Margarita Fischer's most entertaining pictures. It deals with the adventure of a daredevil miss who stole the mansion next door to entertain the lover who jilted her, and his bride, the unexpected arrival of the young master of the house and the girl's frantic efforts to get rid of her company and avert exposure.

"My Wife," is one of the Charles Frohman plays in pictures, produced for Mutual by the Empire All Star Corporation. It is a clever adaptation of a clever play and casts Miss Murdock in the role of a young English girl who marries for convenience to comply with the terms of an eccentric aunt's will, and finds herself in love with her husband despite her betrothal to a soldier in France. It is a role admirably suited to the clever Miss Murdock. She is supported by a cast of Frohman players.

The forthcoming William Russell production was produced under the working title of "Detective Dan Cupid," and gives the capable young screen actor the role of a romantic Sherlock Holmes. It provides Mr. Russell plenty of opportunity to develop the particular quality of humor which has marked his most recent motion picture productions, every one of which has been a distinct box office success.

Doris Lee Supports Ray

Pretty Doris Lee, the young leading actress who played opposite Charles Ray in Thomas H. Ince's productions of "His Mother's Boy" and "The Hired Man," is once more leading woman with this popular Paramount screen star in his latest picture, which has not yet been titled.

"Les Miserables" in Nine Short Reels

Fox Production With William Farnum Is Cut to 8,400 Feet After Long and Carefully Thought Out Work

WILLIAM FOX could not cut "Les Miserables" to eight reels. The William Farnum de luxe production therefore will go to exhibitors in nine short reels. Its total length, as the work stands completed, is substantially 8,400 feet, approximately 1,381 feet having been eliminated. This is about 400 feet short of the cuts which it had been proposed to make.

"Shortening this picture to bring it within the length requirements of exhibitors has been one of the most difficult and heart-rending tasks ever imposed upon our organization," said William Fox. "Mr. Lloyd, the director, thought the limit had been reached when he turned the production over to us. The film then measured 13,000 feet. For the showing at the Lyric Theater in New York City we managed to cut it to 9,781 feet and our opinion then was that we could not possibly take out another inch.

"We realized, however, that further curtailment would be expected before the picture was released and accordingly a very careful and exhaustive study of the possibilities was made during the whole of the time the production was being run in New York. We sought opinions from everyone. Representatives of all departments of our organization saw the picture repeatedly, and finally, just prior to the last Lyric showing, all of these persons made a final inspection of the film and then submitted detailed, written reports suggesting every sort of cutting or trimming which they considered feasible.

"An abstract of these suggestions, with others coming to us from outside sources, was made, and, using this as a basis, I began work with our editorial department on actual eliminations. The best we could do, however, was to reduce the total length to 8,400 feet. We did, it is true, actually get it lower than that, but I declined to let all of these eliminations stand.

"There were some sacrifices I could not consent to make—sacrifices, not of the story value of the production, but of its artistic side. I insisted that these be restored and I think when exhibitors see the picture they will agree with me that there is not a scene of it, not an incident, that can be spared."

Only two eliminations of sufficient length to be properly termed cuts have been made, according to the Fox management, and these are of the scenes showing Fantine leaving Cosette with the Thenardiers and of Jean Valjean's escape from prison. Fantine now is introduced for the first time as an employe of the mayor's factory in Malence. The other cut is only partial. The intention of Jean Valjean to escape is shown and following this he is seen being brought back by guards, the elimination dealing with his dropping down the prison wall on a rope and with his attempt to elude the guards.

The remainder of the eliminations are trims. The battle scenes have been shortened and so has the death scene. There also has been some slight shaving of the hero's experiences in the sewer and of the incident leading up to Javert's renunciation of his life-long policy of hounding Jean Valjean.

The production, which is to be released February 10, was shown during the week of January 20 in the chain of Fox theaters in New York City and surrounding territory. At the historic Academy of Music, according to the Fox management, all records for both receipts and attendance were broken. The first day alone is said to have been the biggest day in the history of the academy and this in the face of the fact that many of the greatest productions of the stage have had their premiere there. Previous records had been held by "The Honor System."

Clara Kimball Young Gets Rights to Elinor Glyn Novel

Clara Kimball Young has obtained the moving picture rights to Elinor Glyn's much talked of novel, "The Reason Why," and is planning to make it her next Select production.

The story was first published serially in a well-known magazine and later came out in covers as one of the most widely discussed books of the year. It deals with the tangled love affairs of a charming American girl and her English husband and provides as a setting for the unusually absorbing tale it unfolds the sort of romantic background for which the author is famous. The screen adaptation has been made by Mary Murillo.

Sidney Drews Are Robbed

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have been robbed. Someone ran off with the safe of their Park avenue residence in New York, which contained many valuable manuscripts, the will of S. Rankin Drew, who is now an aviator in France, and a number of private papers—not to mention $4,000 worth of jewels belonging to Mrs. Drew.

At the time of the robbery, Mr. and Mrs. Drew were downtown in the Metro projection room showing their new five-reeler, "Pay Day," to Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, and the Metro staff.

The private papers, Rankin Drew's will, and the manuscripts were of far more importance to Mr. and Mrs. Drew than the jewels, and they are offering liberal rewards for their return.

Announces "Blue Ribbons" for March

President Smith Prepares Program That Includes Alice Joyce, Harry Morey, Earle Williams and Nell Shipman

THE March list of Blue Ribbon Features to be released by Vitagraph is announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, as follows:

March 4—"The Song of the Soul," featuring Alice Joyce with an all-star company.

March 11—"The Desired Woman," featuring Harry Morey with Florence Deshon.

March 18—"An American Live Wire," featuring Earle Williams with Grace Darmond.

March 25—"The Home Trail," featuring Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman.

This promises an unusually strong program, presenting as it does several of Vitagraph's most prominent stars. In addition, the Vitagraph announcement states that each of the plays contains a strong story, with the stars in exceptionally appealing roles.

In the first of the March releases, "The Song of the Soul," Alice Joyce has with her an excellent company, including Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Barney Randall, Stephen Carr, Edith Reeves and others, and Tom Terriss, who directed the picture, is said to have produced one of the best pictures of his career.

"The Desired Woman" marks the advent of Will Harben as a motion picture author. The play is from the book of the same title and exhibitors are promised one of Harry Morey's best efforts.

This picture will mark the second appearance on the Vitagraph program of Florence Deshon, the Seattle girl who was lured from the legitimate stage into pictures and scored such a sensation as the adventuress in "The Auction Block." Prior to entering motion picture ranks, Miss Deshon had gained favor in several successful Broadway plays, among them "Seven Chances."

Pretty Jean Paige, heroine of many O. Henry pictures, in this picture will make her first appearance in five-reel features. Paul Scardon is directing the picture, many of the scenes of which will be made in the hills of Georgia.

"An American Live Wire," in which Earle Williams is to be starred, is the first picture the famous Vitagrapher has made on the Pacific coast in more than five years. It is an adaptation from the O. Henry story, "The Lotus and the Bottle," which, as O. Henry fans will recall, is one of the group of stories included in the "Cabbages and Kings" volume.

In this play, Mr. Williams plays a role somewhat different from anything he has been seen in for months, that of an American consul, and he does it with all of the art and individuality that has made him one of the screen favorites of the world. Grace Darmond, the magnificent girl who was seen opposite Mr. Williams in "In the Balance," plays the leading feminine role.

All of the atmosphere and humor that make O. Henry's stories so palatable will be present in this picture, because it is under the direction of Tom Mills, who made many of the O. Henrys for Vitagraph and left off the short reel subjects to take up the direction of Mr. Williams.

"The Home Trail" is the third of the pictures with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman as a team. Their first was "The Wild Strain," by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester, and the second "Cavanaugh of Forest Rangers," which is to be released in February.

The mysterious Mojave (pronounced Mo-hah-ve) desert supplies the locale for the story of "The Home Trail," which is laid in the early seventies, and William Wolbert, who is directing it, is said to have picked his locations with the same remarkable care as he did in the case of "The Flaming Omen," one of the most artistic productions Vitagraph has put forth in a year.

Mabel Normanl in Goldwyn's star production, "Dodging a Million."

Billie Burke's Play Completed

"Eve's Daughter," starring Billie Burke, has been completed and will soon be released on the Paramount program. The subject is a comedy drama in which Miss Burke as the willful Irene Simpson-Bates manages to become involved in many difficulties, some of them amusing and others quite serious.

She finds ultimate happiness with an obscure lover whom she does not appreciate when she breaks the shackles of home restraint and plunges into a life of gaiety, but whose intervention at the opportune time to save her from seriously blighting her life brings her to a realization of his worth.

The play was written by Alicia Ramsey, and was a starring vehicle for Grace George on the speaking stage. It has proved an excellent vehicle for Miss Burke, who has done her best work in vivacious roles, and gives her an opportunity of accentuating her attractiveness by the wearing of beautiful costumes, in the role of a young society girl.

Her next production will be a play in a high vein of comedy, to be directed by Joseph Kaufman, who has just completed "The Song of Songs," starring Elsie Ferguson.

The supporting roles in "Eve's Daughter" are played by Thomas Meighan, Lionel Atwill, William Riley Hatch, Florence Flynn, Harriet Ross, Lucile Carney, Mary Navaro and Harry Lee. Mr. Atwill and Miss Flynn appeared in the stage production and have the same parts in the photoplay adaptation.

Good Bushman-Bayne Cast

RANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne, the popular co-stars, are supported by a cast of favorite picture players in "The Brass Check," a screen version of George Allan England's story of the same name, which appeared in the All-Story Weekly. June Mathis of the Metro scenario staff made the screen adaptation and the production is being directed by Will S. Davis.

Frank Currier, a Metro favorite, is cast as Silas Trevor, father of A. Richard Trevor (played by Francis X. Bushman) and head of the rubber trust. Currier has just completed another "father" role, playing Pharos, the parent of Azah, the gypsy girl portrayed by the great Nazimova, in her second Metro picture. He has supported many of the Metro stars in picture productions, including Nazimova in "Revelation," Emily Stevens in "Outwitted," and Emmy Whelen in "The Trail of the Shadow."

Two scenes of Mary Pickford in the widely heralded Artcraft feature, "Stella Maris."

Hobart Henley to Direct Mae Marsh

Goldwyn Scenario of New Irvin Cobb Play Now in His Hands and Cast Is Being Selected Gradually

PREPARATIONS for Goldwyn's new production starring Mae Marsh include the engagement of Hobart Henley as director. Mr. Henley's pronounced success in presenting "Parentage" to the public brought him to the attention of Goldwyn, and a contract was signed whereby he becomes the guiding factor in the Mae Marsh drama.

Mr. Henley's capital work as leading man in several Universal features, notably "The Evil Women Do" and "June Madness," seemed to make stardom his future place in the world of motion pictures. But he chose to give directing a higher place than acting and produced a number of features before sponsoring "Parentage."

The finished scenario of the Mae Marsh play is now in his hands and the cast is being gradually selected. Owing to the importance of the offering, Goldwyn believes that unusual attention should be given all the preliminary details. As all the parts practically are principals, this becomes a task in itself. Mr. Henley is patient, however, and his enthusiasm over the story gives him confidence in the result of his search for a balanced cast.

Again Irvin S. Cobb furnishes Mae Marsh with a play from the pen all America watches. It is a doubly interesting pen since Miss Marsh's latest success in "Fields of Honor," adapted from Mr. Cobb's story of the same name. Mr. Henley completes the trio of distinguished names shaping the Goldwyn play and promises to sustain the director's important part with noteworthy skill.

"Woman in the Web" Well Under Way

Vitagraph's New Serial Being Directed by David Smith, Producer of Several O. Henry Stories

PRODUCTION on Vitagraph's new serial, "The Woman in the Web," which will follow "Vengeance—and the Woman" on the Vitagraph program, is now in full swing, under the direction of David Smith, brother of Albert E. Smith and producer of a number of the O. Henry stories.

Hedda Nova, the beautiful Russian actress who plays the part of a Russian-American princess, and J. Frank Glendon, popular star of many O. Henry successes who will be seen as an adventurous young American, are the stars of the new serial.

They are supported by an exceptionally strong cast of Vitagraph favorities, including Otto Lederer and Ronald Bradbury, character actors of established standing.

Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the scenario.

Special attention is being given to the sets to be used in "The Woman in the Web" and a special force of studio workers under the supervision of Director Smith are now engaged in constructing sets that for sheer elaborateness and size, are unprecedented in the annals of serial production. A striking feature f "The Woman in the Web," will be an authentic reproduction of the ballroom in the White House, the President's official mansion.

"Love Me" a Sullivan Product

C. Gardner Sullivan, author of many successful photoplays, is responsible for "Love Me," in which Thomas H. Ince will present Dorothy Dalton via Paramount following "Flare-Up Sal." This will be, according to the prophecies of those who have witnessed the picture under process of filming at the Ince studios, one of the most effective in which Miss Dalton has appeared for Paramount.

A powerful cast has been chosen for Miss Dalton's support and the direction by R. William Neil, under the supervision of Mr. Ince, will, as usual, be absolutely painstaking down to the least detail, it is announced. Indeed, it is this feature, together with the realism achieved in the Ince productions for Paramount and Artcraft, that have won for them much praise, coupled, of course, with good stories, stars of real worth and superior photography.

"Love Me" has an alluring title—and a star who will live up to the requirements of the chief character, that of Maida Madison, to the last degree.

The story ranges from the social precincts of Philadelphia to the wilds of a North Dakota construction camp; gives opportunities for highly effective scenic investiture and much action of an exciting nature. But the delicious love strain that runs through it is said to be particularly delightful.

Author Titles "Light Within"

Through an error inadvertently committed by a member of the studio staff of the Petrova Picture Company, credit for the titling of the second feature starring Madame Olga Petrova, was misplaced. To Mrs. L. Case Russell, author of the scenario of "The Light Within," which is an adaptation of her original story, "Laurel Carlisle," should go the credit.

Eight Fox Releases Due This Month

Two Are Standard Pictures, Four Special Features and Two Sunshine Comedies—One Is Farnum Picture

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by William Fox of the scheduling of eight productions for release during February. There will be two Standard pictures, four Fox special features, and two Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies.

June Caprice and Henry Lehrman are providing the first releases, the former appearing in "The Heart of Romance," and Mr. Lehrman's comedy offering being "Hungry Lions in a Hospital." Both of these are available now.

"The Heart of Romance," a Fox Special feature, shows Miss Caprice as a rich girl whose guardian suspects a struggling young author of courting her for her money. The plot revolves around the test which proves the sweetheart's sincerity.

The second week of the month, beginning February 10, will be a big week from the standpoint of the Fox management. The special feature set down for this date is "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal," in which George Walsh is featured. This production has been advertised as an extra-special offering exclusively for exhibitors who hold contracts for special features. It is based on a serial story written by George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and published in that journal and in book form.

The other release of this week, considered the most important which William Fox has made this year, is "Les Miserables," the William Farnnm de luxe production that has just finished a long run at the Lyric theater in New York City.

Gladys Brockwell will be seen in "The Moral Law," beginning February 17. This special feature gives the actress a double role, that of two half-sisters, and makes her both heroine and villainess.

Another Sunshine Comedy also will be released this week. It is titled: "Are Married Policemen Safe?" It was ordinarily scheduled for January 13.

Jane and Katherine Lee have completed a new Standard picture which will be offered to exhibitors February 24, but which is not yet named. The Fox "Baby Grands" are active this time in an orphanage and at an army post. The Fox special feature for the week of February 24 will be "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes," a western drama in which Jewel Carmen is the star.

"Wild Youth" Has Solid Background

That immutable law of love—the call of youth to youth—which defies the shackles of conventionality, the bars of prison, in fact, every barrier, is the basic principle upon which Sir Gilbert Parker's wonderful story of "Wild Youth" is founded.

Scenarioized by Beulah Marie Dix, the story in film form will retain the qualities and incidents that made the work of the famous British novelist so much liked and placed it in the class of the very best of his books.

It is the third story from his pen that has been translated to the screen for Paramount under the personal supervision of Commodore Blackton. George Melford is directing the picture at the Lasky Hollywood studios. Paul Perry is doing the camera work.

The tale is told something after this fashion: Louise Mazarine is the girl wife of Joel Mazarine, a veritable cave man, old enough to be her father, and who is really more of a jailer than a husband. He is a rancher, and Louise comes to him virtually in payment of a mortgage and to satisfy the bestial cravings of a belated manhood, coarse in its every demand.

Orlando Guise, the youth, is the son of a neighboring ranchowner. The two young people meet and the result is inevitable. Joel is attacked and is saved from a thug by Orlando, who thus gains access to his home—and his child wife. The coarse husband's jealousy is awakened and he suspects with cause the mediation of Li Choo, his servant, whom he beats severely. Louise plans to escape and is placed by a doctor under the protecting care of a Mrs. Boyle, at the latter's ranch.

Mazarine has become a demon of vengeance. But he is later found dead and suspicion points to Orlando. Finally, however, Li Choo confesses that he is the murderer, calmly declaring that age cannot remain as a barrier to youth and love. Thus the two young people are united and love has its way.

Theft of Shoes Halts Film

Wallace MacDonald, playing the lead in "The Shoes that Dance," now being produced by Triangle, recently purchased an expensive pair of shoes for the part. The other night there was a dance hall scene with about two hundred "extras."

The shoes hurt. Wallace was sleepy. He took off the shoes. He went to sleep. In time he awoke and the shoes were missing. And they're still missing. Who can guess what was said when two days' work had to be retaken on account of "The Shoes that Hurt."

Ann Murdock, Mutual star, in "The Impostor."

Doctors Supervise Petrova Film

Laboratory Scenes of "The Light Within" as a Result Will Stand the Most Rigid Scrutiny of Medical Profession

"THE LIGHT WITHIN," the second production in which Madame Olga Petrova is soon to appear, necessitated the expert services of two eminent New York laboratory specialists during the taking of several scenes.

The story of the starring vehicle to be released following the Petrova production of "Daughter of Destiny," is from the pen of Mrs. L. Case Russell and deals with the discovery of a curative serum for the purpose of combating the dread plague of infantile paralysis. Mrs. Russell's scenario called for many important scenes to be filmed in the laboratory of Laurel Carlisle, famous woman specialist, skilfully depicted by Madame Petrova as the leading character of "The Light Within."

In order to avoid the errors so frequently committed in photoplay scenes of this nature, Madame Petrova decided to guarantee their accuracy by the presence of two prominent research and laboratory specialists. Mr. Mason Levinson, bacteriologist of the New York Board of Health, was personally drafted by the star for this important work, while Dr. Noel Campbell, famous New York surgeon, placed his private laboratory at the exclusive disposal of Madame Petrova and her director, Larry Trimble.

During the filming of "The Light Within," under the direction of Trimble, the two specialists were in close attendance, with the result that these scenes will bear the most searching scrutiny of any professional audience. Their faithfulness to detail has elicited enthusiastic praise from a body of physicians and surgeons who recently witnessed a special screening of "The Light Within" given by Madame Petrova in honor and appreciation of the services given to her by Drs. Levinson and Campbell.

The role of Laurel Carlisle, as depicted by the distinguished Polish star is distinctly an innovation in screen characterization. Her finely executed delineation of the woman surgeon, torn between the conflict of professional duty and maternal love, is destined to provoke wide-spread comment among film critics and photoplay fans alike.

"The Shuttle" Completed

"The Shuttle," Constance Talmadge's latest Select picture, in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, has been completed and is now being cut and titled. It is the first production to be made by the star since her arrival in Los Angeles and provides her with a role of unusual dramatic force.

Fatty Arbuckle in New Comedy

Fatty Arbuckle is producing a new country comedy at the Balboa studios, Long Beach, for the Paramount program, which he expects to outclass his late success, "A Country Hero," which made Jazzville famous as a classic of the comic screen.

As a bellboy, waiter and head barber in a rube hotel, Fatty is at his best, the combination of funny characters depicting what must be a source of great worry to the traveling man.

Playing the same roles as Fatty's nimble assistant is the inimitable Buster Keaton, whose pantomine and amazing falls in the last three Arbuckle comedies have made him famous. That human elastic band, Al St. John, is the hotel night clerk who adds his absurdities to the burlesque.

Dainty Alice Lake is a regular vampire this time in her delicious portrayal of the city manicurist who toys with all the hearts of the village cut-ups.

The small town of the Twain or Tarkington description is the setting of Fatty's latest fun fest. Everything that you remember of boyhood days is there—the main street with its general store, livery stable, op'ry house, commercial hotel, brick bank and other typical landmarks.

Enid Bennett to New York

For the first time since he commenced to make motion pictures, Thomas H. Ince will send one of his stars, Enid Bennett, to New York to make several photoplays for Paramount that call for metropolitan scenes of the sort that cannot easily be duplicated with the scenery ordinarily available at a motion picture studio.

Miss Bennett and company will have the benefit of Jerome Storm's direction in Gotham and it is likely that Mr. Ince will make a transcontinental journey to supervise some of the scenes. The Ince star will have her own studio, and that she may feel very much at home her New York dressing room will be a reproduction of the one she uses in Los Angeles.

Jess Willard Calls Farnum Real Scrapper

We have it from Jess Willard himself that William Farnum's fights in the William Fox productions are the real thing. Listen to what the heavyweight champion of the world says:

"I see many photoplays because, for one reason, they begin early and end early and that lets me keep decent hours. I can say truthfully that William Farnum is one of the greatest rough and tumble fighters I have ever seen."

Reviews of Current Film Releases

WRITTEN BY MOTOGRAPHY'S TRAINED MOTION PICTURE REVIEWERS

"Stella Maris"

Artcraft-Paramount Starring Mary Pickford. Released January 20. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

FOR the first time in her career Mary Pickford essays to portray dual roles, and her most recent picture, Stella Maris, is truly a remarkable revelation of the star's versatility. As Stella Maris, a wealthy child who has been a paralytic for years, confined to her bed and free from the hardships of life, Miss Springtime brings love and happiness to Stella Maris.

Pickford adds a delightful touch of human interest to her interpretation. And then her conception of the orphanage ugly duckling, Unity Blake, living on what she can gather from waste cans, kicked around by all, and loved by none, tends to strengthen the belief that Miss Pickford is indeed an artist in make-up heretofore unrevealed. The great differences in the natures of the two characters makes Miss Pickford's performance all the more admirable.

The story has been adapted for the screen from the popular novel by William J. Locke, and has moments of intense interest intermingled with humorous touches, pathos, pity for the deformed Unity, all of which make it an absorbing study. Conway Tearle is admirable in the part of John Risca and adds to his growing popularity as a film favorite. Marshall Neilan directed, and has achieved another success.

The story: Stella Maris was an orphan, paralyzed for years and surrounded with every luxury wealth could possess. In the confines of her room she was separated from the rest of the world and all knowledge of strife and sorrow; she developed an angelic nature and a purity of mind and heart which caused all to love her. A frequent visitor to her domain of happiness was John Risca, a prominent journalist and distant relative. In his youth Risca had married a girl of lowly origin and years had brought to him despair. His wife harbored a secret love for liquor which she proceeded to satisfy to his great discomfiture. Ten years had made Mrs. Risca a physical wreck and John had separated from her. Unable to get a servant to stay in the house with her, Mrs. Risca had gone to the orphanage and taken Unity Blake as her helpmate. Unity was a deformed and ugly child and gifted with less than an ordinary degree of intelligence, and submitted without complaint to the many cruelties perpetrated until one day Mrs. Risca beat her with a red hot poker. For this act of extreme cruelty the woman was sentenced to the penitentiary for three years.

John Risca adopted Unity to atone for his wife's errors, and his aunt keeps house for the two. This act of kindness won Unity's heart and she delighted in looking after his comfort.

Stella Maris' guardians retain the services of the most prominent physicians and an operation gives the girl the power to walk. Her childish regard for John had turned to profound devotion, and John had found that his love was now an overwhelming passion. The passing years had given Mrs. Risca her freedom and she meets Stella. The shock of learning that John had not told her of his wife affects the health of Stella Maris and Unity, to insure the future happiness of the man who had befriended her, kills his wife and then herself. So Stella Maris and John are free to continue in their love.

"The Grain of Dust"

Ogden-Crest Pictures Starring Lillian Walker. State Rights—Early Release. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THE screen version of The Grain of Dust, one of the most popular novels written by David Graham Phillips, production of which was started by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, but later taken over and produced under the supervision of Carle E. Carlton, president of Crest Pictures, Inc., makes an exceedingly interesting study of human nature. A thoroughly gripping drama in every sense of the word, it depicts the havoc a seemingly insignificant person—literally a grain of dust—creates in the life and affairs of a prominent man. Suspense is maintained throughout, and the situations which arise do not merely happen, but result from a sequence of events leading up to them.

Harry Revier, the director, has adroitly handled the production, and its many points of interest bespeak of his capability. Lillian Walker, as Dorothy Hollowell, gives a pleasing interpretation of her part. Yet, despite her presence in the leading role, the story is really more suitable for a male star. As the story has to deal with business and its big men, it is only natural that a representative of the stronger sex be constantly in the foreground. But the palm must be granted to Miss Walker and Ramsey Wallace, who plays opposite her, does not lose any prestige by it.

Another bit of interest is the presence of Edith Day in the cast. Miss Day is at present starring in a musical comedy on Broadway, but probably will not stay there long for the screen promises a bright future for her. Her winsome smile and easy manner before the camera mark her as a coming favorite in the near future with film followers.

The story: Frederick Norman is a prominent lawyer highly respected because of his integrity and far-reaching influence, by the big men of the financial district. He sees in his office Dorothy Hollowell, a stenographer, whom he had never noticed before. To this big man she is but a cog in the great wheel of success which he has made, yet her bright smile and unusual charm haunt him. He is unable to put his mind to his work, and under pretense of helping her father visits her at her home.

"Mr. Norman sent me to see if you are comfortable."

His constant cancelling of appointments excites the suspicion of his fiance, to whom he had been engaged merely for ambitious reasons. Norman entices Dorothy to his apartment under pretence of signing incorporation papers for her father's business, which Norman finances, and there begins his insidious campaign to possess the girl without the benefit of the clergy, and his fiance, warned by a jealous clerk who secretly loves Dorothy, discovers him with the girl in his arms.

Dorothy's father dies and she leaves the city to forget while Norman, dissipating, soon becomes a wreck. His name no longer respected and his business gone, he collapses and is sent to a sanitarium.

Time brings Dorothy back to the city despondent, and Norman again in good standing. Dorothy struggles along while Norman, his genius reasserting itself, has built up another prosperous legal practice. Returning home one evening he sees the girl about to plunge into the river. He takes her home, and then follows the struggle within the hearts of each to do good, and finally realizing their love for each other the two embrace, rejoicing in their rejuvenation.

"The Hopper"

Triangle Picture Starring George Hernandez and Walt Whitman. Released February 10. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

AN ancient and valuable Chinese vase may not often cause old friends to quarrel and disrupt the tranquilities of their homes, but it happens in this Triangle picture and provides a means of excellent entertainment. Unusual interest and wholesome comedy is injected throughout by the antics of a child who considers valuable antiques excellent playthings, much to the chagrin of the elder collectors. The story, written by Meredith Nicholson, starts from two different angles and then works to a single conclusion. One phase of the plot concerns the efforts of a trio of crooks to reform and then takes them into the lives of the main characters, two men who had made the collection of curios and valuable specimens of old pottery, their life's work.

Of course there are the children of the two men, who marry much to their parents' displeasure, but with the aid of the reformed crooks all turns out happily and pleasantly and the two men are convinced of the errors they have made and return to their old friendship.

George Hernandez and Walt Waltman have the respective roles of Wilbur Talbot and John Wilton, and accredit themselves favorably. Irene Hunt and Eugene Corey are their children, who enlist the aid of the crooks to end the feud between their parents.

The story: Wilbur Talbot and John Wilton quarrel when it is discovered that the former had beaten his friend to purchasing a valuable vase which each had wanted as an addition to his collection. They attempt to compel their children to break their engagement, but are unsuccessful, and the two are married. Three years pass and the feud is still unsettled. Roger Talbot goes to his father to enlist his aid in a business venture. The elder Talbot refuses unless his son will give up his wife, who had gone to her rather at the same time seeking aid for her husband.

The crooks are then brought into the plot. One of them, returning home, meets a detective from the east who had hounded him in the old days. Fearing apprehension, the crook, known as the Hopper, gets off the car and, seeing a roadster apparently without occupants, purloins it and drives home. There he discovers a child on the rear seat and takes it into the house. A locket identifies the child as the son of Roger and Muriel Talbot.

Old friends quarrel about a curio.

Now we are brought back to the first pair. Roger leaves his father's home, and, not seeing his car, believes his wife had driven it home. Then his wife comes out, and, not seeing the car, believes the same as her husband. Getting home first, the wife discovers the Hopper in her apartment. Keeping the secret of the child from its mother, the Hopper is induced to enter the homes of each of the irate parents, steal a valuable specimen from each, and return them to Mrs. Talbot.

Roger returns without the child, explanations are made, and then begins an all-night search. The robberies are discovered and each curio collector accuses the other. But then the Hopper comes up with the child and the two curios. He makes the final explanations, goes away happy, and the two old men are pacified to a point of continuing their friendship and uniting the two collections which had caused all the trouble.

"Madame Spy"

Jack Mulhall in Universal Special Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a timely picture and deals with the present spy problem in a comedy-drama fashion. There is a good deal of action, and Jack Mulhall masquerades in feminine costume during part of the play in a fashion which will greatly amuse the average audience. Donna Drew plays the heroine. The production as a whole is well done, acting, directing and photography, and it is interesting and pleasing enough to satisfy all patrons.

In advertising, the comedy and the timely elements might well be emphasized. Jack Mulhall, as the hero, gets a clew to a German spy plot, but in order to trace and foil it, he is forced to masquerade as a foreign adventuress whom the conspirators expect. Lee Morrison wrote the story. Douglas Gerrard directed it.

The story: Robert Wesley returns home from a term at Annapolis and later learns that he has failed in his examinations. Robert's father is an admiral, and at a party given in their home, Robert overhears a conversation between two of the guests which arouses his suspicions. He learns that they are spies and are expecting the arrival of the Baroness Hulda, who will give them further directions. Robert had played feminine roles in college theatricals, and gets the idea of pretending to be the baroness. The real adventuress is captured by one of Robert's aids, and Robert deceives the conspirators for a short time. Then the real baroness, who had escaped, arrives. But Robert is able to put the entire band in the hands of the police. As a reward, he regains the standing lost through the examination he failed.

"The Divine Sacrifice"

World Pictures Starring Kitty Gordon. Released February 4. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THE underlying moral of this film is undoubtedly to show to what lengths mother love will reach to assure the future happiness of her child. It is thoroughly dramatic throughout, and should appeal mostly to grown people in that it depicts the differences which ofttimes crop out of the question between man and wife as to whether or not there shall be children brought into life as a means of blessing to the home.

The plot covers incidents which take place in this country and also in far-off Arabia. The market and theater scenes have been staged in capable fashion and the atmosphere of Arabia is strictly adhered to. There are many well-selected local exterior scenes which reveal some new sections of natural beauty within easy reach of the city commuter, and they afford a very attractive background.

Kitty Gordon has earned an enviable position in screen circles due to her dramatic capabilities, and now her daughter, Miss Vera Beresford, essays to emulate her illustrious parent. Miss Gordon enacts the part of Mrs. Spencer and gives a convincing portrayal while Miss Beresford, although entrusted with a small part, does her little bit very satisfactorily. The supporting cast acquit themselves creditably.

The story: Doctor Carewe is unhappy in his childless home, his wife being a society matron unwilling to sacrifice her popularity for the beauties of motherhood. He seeks solace in an orphanage, where his greatest pleasure is to comfort the children. There he meets Mrs. Spencer, the second wife of a notorious gambler, and her interest in the children brings many meetings.

Mrs. Carewe goes abroad and meets Spencer traveling with a woman whom he introduces as his wife. In their absence the Doctor and Mrs. Spencer continue in their companionship, and when word comes that the entire touring party had perished in a fire, the Doctor and Mrs. Spencer decide to live together as man and wife. They are astounded to learn a few weeks later that Mrs. Carewe had been saved and is back in the city.

Mrs. Spencer makes the divine sacrifice.

As Mrs. Carewe will not divorce him, the Doctor continues to live with Mrs. Spencer, who is soon to be a mother. They leave the city for the Doctor's country home and there the child is born.

Eighteen years pass and the Doctor and Mrs. Spencer have kept from their child, now a young lady, the secret of their true relationship. One day the girl brings home a young man and announces that they are to be married. The young man is introduced as Rupert Spencer Junior, and he is recognized by Mrs. Spencer as the son of her husband by his first wife. Realizing that to prevent her child's marriage would mean great unhappiness, Mrs. Spencer induces Mrs. Carewe to pose as the girl's mother. The deception is carried out and the young couple are married, the girl as the daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Carewe.

"Innocent"

Fanny Ward in Her First Pathe Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

PATHE'S first feature starring Fanny Ward is an unusually attractive offering, a fine introduction for Miss Ward on the new program. Taken from the stage play of the same name, the picture not only contains a role peculiarly rich in opportunity for the star, but it has a dramatic and holding story and is beautifully and fittingly staged and photographed. It is that rare thing, a picture that will go equally well in any theater, of high or low class clientele. Its appeal is universal.

One hardly knows which to praise most highly, the drama itself, the star or the beautiful production. Miss Ward is remarkably fitted for the title role, for she looks and acts like the little girl she is supposed to be in the early scenes; portrays with rare skill the development of the girl's worldly instincts, in the Parisian environment, and is quite equal to the emotional scenes which form the climax of the drama.

The play is taken from the A. H. Woods stage success written by George Broadhurst, in which Pauline Frederick last appeared in spoken drama. John Miltern, who played Wyndham on the stage, plays the same role in the picture. It is intensely interesting and appealing, and from the first scene to the last is vivid and dramatic.

The scenes are laid in China and in Paris. The foreign atmosphere is nicely suggested. The photography is beautiful. Miss Ward's costumes are elaborate and add to the beauty and interest of the picture. Armand Kalitz plays Doucet. Frederick Perry plays the father of Innocent.

The story:—When Innocent's dissolute father died in China, where they have lived for many years, the girl is left in the care of John Wyndham, her father's best friend. Wyndham takes Innocent with him to Paris. He tries to keep the girl apart from the world he knows, but Innocent's heredity impells her to seek adventure and luxury.

Louis Doucet, a gambler, meets Innocent and, reading the girl's true nature, determines to win her. She is willing to accept his attentions and gifts, even after she has promised to marry Wyndham, whose love she has quickly won. When Wyndham loses his fortune at Doucet's gambling palace, Innocent agrees to an elopement with the gambler, who has continually showered her with gifts. The two go to the Riviera, but are overtaken by Wyndham, who shoots Doucet. Innocent allows the suspicion of the murder to rest upon her, but makes her escape. Heartbroken and disillusioned with the life she had thought she wanted, she goes back to her old home in China. There she finds Wyndham and becomes his wife.

"A Mother's Sin"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Starring Earle Williams. Released January 28. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

OLD situations have been kindly treated and characters cleverly portrayed in this most recent Vitagraph release. Earle Williams has the leading role, that of Patrick Yardley, scion of a wealthy English countryman, whose father is bitter at the resemblance of the son to his mother, who had years before deserted husband and child. The story has for its locale a suburb of London, and the quiet country atmosphere of this section of England is maintained throughout. Ernest Maupain, a recent addition to the Vitagraph players, is the irate, stern father, and enacts the role with convincing forcefulness. A clever bit of character work is done by Charles Horton as a blackmailing valet, who carries his part to well-earned favorable comment.

The story: Patrick Yardley is a spendthrift son and appeals to his father for an additional allowance with which to pay off some debts. Yardley senior refuses, preferring to see his son penniless and friendless as payment for his mother's unfaithfulness years before. Patrick leaves home and his cousin Vincent becomes heir of the estate and fortune. The elder Yardley learns of an affair that Vincent has had with a young girl, and which Vincent had blamed on Patrick. The father then realizes his mistake in bequeathing his fortune to his nephew, and in his last moments makes out a new will in favor of his son. He hides the will and dies before he can reveal its hiding place. Vincent comes into the fortune and is being constantly blackmailed by a former valet of Patrick who is familiar with Vincent's affair with the girl.

Celia Graham, a girl whom Patrick had courted, becomes acquainted with Vincent and because of an aspiring aunt turns her affections to Vincent with the result that they announce their betrothal.

Time brings about the discovery of the new will by a barrister friend of the family, and Patrick is sent for. The estate is turned over to him, and Vincent is now the penniless one. Maxton, the valet, continues in his efforts to blackmail Vincent, who, now unable to meet the demands, becomes involved in a fight and is killed. Maxton reveals Vincent's implicity in the death of the girl he had betrayed, and Patrick's name is cleared. Celia and Patrick are again together and secure in their love for each other.

Triangle Pictures Starring Olive Thomas. Released February 10. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THE pleasing countenance of Olive Thomas again graces the screen in Triangle's latest offering, "Limousine Life." With the object in view to please the audience, it does all of that and then some. Delightfully human in theme and plot and abounding in real homelike atmosphere, this picture is one sure to satisfy.

The aristocracy and wealth of Three Oaks.

There is no mystery, no murder, no sex problem involved, and the only point left open to speculation is who is getting the best of the bargain, the immaculate rich city fellow or the seemingly unsophisticated country girl who meets him.

Olive Thomas enacts the innocent one to perfection, and is ably assisted by Lee Phelps, as her city beau, and Joe Bennett, who is of the exclusively wealthy of her home town. Jack Dillon directed, and has produced some humorous incidents which give the story a touch of good, legitimate and well-liked comedy.

The story: Minnie Wills is the belle of the town of Three Oaks, and feels the desire to go to the city and see a little different life. She is aided by her sweetheart, Jed Brinson, and escapes to Chicago, where she knows a Mrs. Malvon, who runs a boarding house. Securing a position in a fashionable modiste's shop, she meets Moncure Kelts, son of the idle rich and well-known society man. His many affairs of the heart and notorious escapades are known by a girl in the shop, and Minnie is warned, but she accepts the attentions of the young man and leads him on.

Kelts showers the girl with gifts in his attempt to win her, but she keeps him at a distance. Finally he proposes marriage and gives Minnie a ring. She proceeds to sell all the other presents and buys many pretty clothes with the money obtained, and the girls in the shop believe that she has fallen a victim to the young man. Then Minnie meets Mrs. Kelts, mother of the young man, and welcomes her as her mother-in-law to be. Mrs. Kelts is surprised to learn of her son's impending marriage, but decides it will settle him down and so takes Minnie to her home. Then the young man decides that to allow Minnie to carry out her plans would in a way affect his future plans, and he induces her to retturn to her home town, and makes a settlement with her. Minnie marries her first love, and with the money she got from Kelts establishes a business and proceeds to success.

Episode No. 7, The Wolf Trap. Released January 28. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THIS serial continues to abound in unusual feats of daring. Carol Holloway and William Duncan are never resting in their efforts to produce thrilling moments, and the suspense is maintained so thoroughly that one cannot know what to expect next.

Blake is in the hands of the outlaws and is rescued by the posse searching for him. The outlaws carry Mrs. Blake away and the posse give chase. The outlaws hold up the stage coach and compel the passengers to get out and they commandeer the coach and ride off. The posse splits up to surround the escaping convicts and coming around a sharp turn the coach plunges down a steep embankment. Blake, hotfooting it in pursuit, goes down the embankment and the outlaws, none the worse for the fall, now have both Blake and his wife.

The two unfortunates are taken to a cabin and there the outlaws exact a written promise from Blake to have the hunt for them stopped if they let Mrs. Blake go free. Mrs. Blake is given a twenty-minute start, but is followed by a member of the gang and brought back. Blake is blackjacked and the outlaws ride away with his wife. Recovering consciousness, Blake continues the chase and falls into a wolf trap which the outlaws have laid for him. Night falls, and with his leg still in the trap, Blake is surrounded by a pack of wolves and, weak from loss of blood, falls unconscious as the wolves charge in on him.

"The Studio Girl"

Select Star Series Starring Constance Talmadge. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THE third Select picture starring Constance Talmadge is an adaptation of the French comedy "La Gamine." The story deals with the efforts of Celia Laird to escape from the confines of the quiet seaside town in which she had been forced to live since early childhood. Her escapades are numerous and culminate in a harmless affair with an artist visiting the town in search of recuperation. How she finally does get away from the town after arrangements had been made for her marriage to the village lout, makes a very interesting story, and one that should please the most critical audience.

Miss Talmadge is assisted by Earle Foxe, who has appeared with her in her most recent successes, and a capable supporting cast headed by Johnny Hines. Charles Giblyn directed.

The story: Frazer Ordway, a portrait painter, leaves the city in ill health and lands in Cliff Haven, a tiny New England town. There he meets Celia Laird, who is living with her maiden aunts, and who are fearful lest the girl run away, as did her mother. Chafing at her empty existence, she sees in the visitor a relief from usual routine and agrees to pose for him. Many meetings cement their acquaintanceship into warm friendship, and the girl confides in Ordway her desire to leave the town. He advises her to stay at home and get rid of the idea of running away. One day the two are discovered by the aunts, and the gossip creates a furore in the village. To hush it up the aunts rush preparations for a quiet wedding with the girl and Obed Daw, the best catch among the eligible young men of the town, as the principals.

Ordway decides to leave the place, but before doing so goes to the girl's home to make explanations.

The aunts refuse to listen to his explanations, and he leaves. The parson arrives to perform the ceremony, and it is discovered that Celia has disappeared. Suspicion naturally points at Ordway, and efforts are made to get him. Meanwhile a storm has come up and the rain is falling in torrents. Ordway stops his car to put up the shed and finds Celia hidden in the rear of the car. He takes her to the railroad station, gives her his coat and some money, and puts her on the first train that comes along. Unfortunately for him, the train is New York bound, and the girl gets to his home ahead of him, having found one of his cards in the coat pocket.

Now the situation becomes complicated, especially as Ord-

Hearing a woman's voice the affianced one comes to the studio to find Ordway and Celia togteher. She notifies the authorities at Cliff Haven, who come post haste only to find that in the meantime Ordway and Celia had gone out and had been married.

"Out West"

Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy Starring Fatty Arbuckle. Released January 20. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

FATTY ARBUCKLE'S latest is a dashing, slashing, shooting tale of the west. Fatty literally falls in on an isolated town in the Western desert and routs the bandit who is about to loot the place. The bartender is shot in the fight and Fatty gets his job. His quickness with the gun and ability to shoot gains for him the respect of the townsmen.

But the bandit and his gang return for vengeance, and this time carries away the Salvation Army girl, the only good thing in the town, and this touches the heart of Fatty. He starts in pursuit, and then follows one of those uproarously funny chases that cannot but help convulsing an audience in mirth and laughter. Fatty beats up the villain, brings the girl back to town, and all turns out well.

"Why don't you give up this life?"

This is bound to be a sure fire hit. It is a departure from what the big comedian has done in the past, and its burlesque on the familiar western dance hall with its two-gun man, made even the sometimes hard-hearted and unrelenting reviewers and critics laugh. When this can be done the subject must, indeed, be a humorous one. Al St. John, the popular contortionist and tumbler who has appeared in many of the Arbuckle successes, is again very much in evidence in the part of the rascally bandit. But, as usual, he gets the worst of it.

"The Phantom Riders"

Harry Carey Star of Universal Special Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is well up to the standard of Harry Carey plays. It contains the same sort of material which we usually find in his western pictures, swift riding, danger, a plot in which a beautiful girl is rescued from outlaws, panoramas of magnificent mountain scenery, and some fine long "shots" of large numbers of horses and riders. If your patrons like Harry Carey, advertise this as one of his best and you will not disappoint them.

Carey plays "Cheyenne Harry." Vesta Pegg is a villainous villain. Molly Malone is appealing as the heroine. Bill Gettenger, Buck Connor and a large number of cowboys are in the picture. Henry McRae and George Hively are credited with the story. Jack Ford directed.

The story: Dave Bland is the dominant figure of the valley of Paradise Creek—a tract of land belonging to the government. Through the efforts of a band of masked, white-clothed riders under the leadership of the "Unknown," Bland reserved the entire tract for himself. Everything was coming his way, and having conquered Pebble Grant and made him his subservient foreman, he stretched forth his hand to Pebble's daughter Molly. Then one day Cheyenne Harry, with his single helper, drove his little herd into the valley, and when warned to leave declared his intention of fighting Dave's band single-handed. His first act was to disarm Dave himself and give him a slap in the face for insulting Molly. This brought down upon him a sentence of death, but gained him two supporters—Pebble and his daughter Molly. The former made an appointment to meet Cheyenne the next night, and when Cheyenne came to the appointed place he found Pebble hanging from the limb of a tree stone dead. Such was the swift vengeance of the Unknown, and when the Unknown got a flash of Cheyenne Harry himself, he called off his phantoms and told them that this man was his meat, and that he would get him himself. But Cheyenne was too much for him, and in a bar-room fight he put to rout the half-drunken phantoms, who were celebrating Bland's marriage to the unwilling Molly. The cattlemen caught him, however, and he stood siege until nearly nightfall, until Molly could ride to the neighboring canyon and get the United States rangers, who came in the nick of time to save the day.

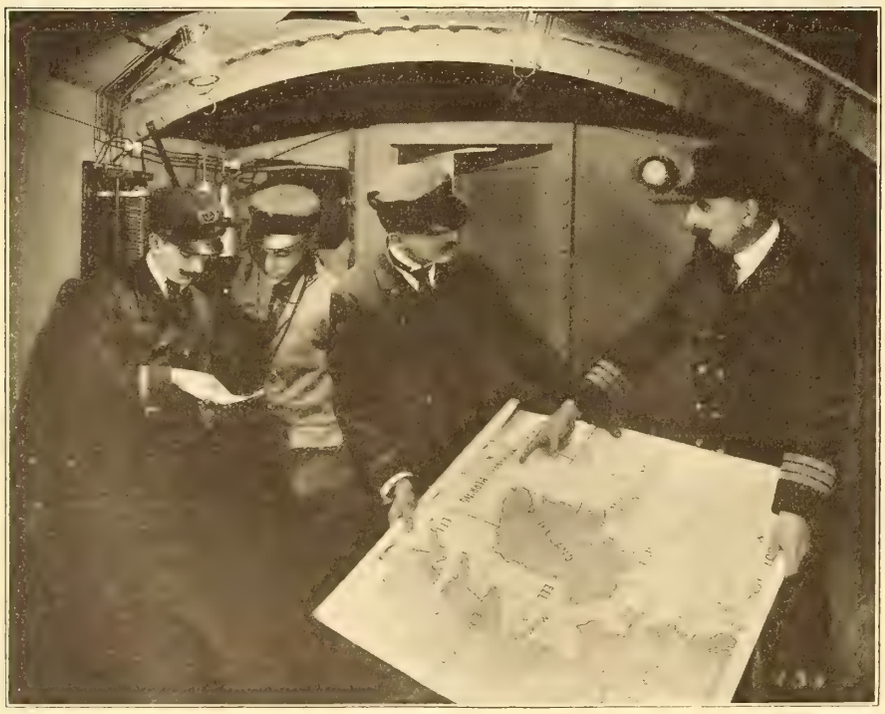
UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Original Sales Scheme Is Success

Sawyer and Lubin Book "Mother," for Boston House and Prove Drawing Power Before Selling New England Rights



ON THEIR RETURN to New York from Boston, last week, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin reported the successful consummation of an entirely original sales scheme, which they placed in operation in the interests of the feature, "Mother." The two executives of General Enterprises, Inc., reversed the usual procedure of disposing of the picture to New England buyers by first booking it in one of Boston's leading photoplay theaters in order that its drawing powers might be fully tested.

This six-part feature, starring Elizabeth Risdon and directed by George Loane Tucker, was played at the Tremont Temple and following the first day's run immediately established itself as a box-office attraction. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin were literally swamped with bids from many prominent New England film purchasers who witnessed the success of their sales innovation.

After due consideration of the various offers, "Mother" was disposed of for the entire New England states to the Boston Photoplay Company, represented by Edward Golden, pioneer exchange man and well known throughout the territory. The picture will be exploited on an extensive scale by Mr. Golden and he states that he considered it a decided addition to his program.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin reported that their Italian war spectacle, "The Warrior," had created a sensation during a week's run at the Boston Theater. The management of the Boston has contracted for another seven days' booking for "The Warrior" on the strength of the remarkable showing made by the General Enterprises feature, thus establishing what is said to be a record unequaled heretofore by any state right offering.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin are now preparing to distribute the latest addition to their string of state right successes, "The Crucible of Life," a seven-part melodrama of the great war, starring Grace Darmond and Jack Sherrill, and adapted from the famous stage success, "Fairfax." This picture has been presented in New York for the first time at the Park Theater in order to give it the prestige of a Broadway run.

Jester Sales Announced

That the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, the international mirth maker, have met with approval by territorial buyers can be attested by sales made to the following:

For the state of New York—Photo Drama Co. (Ben. Title, rep.), New York City.

For southern New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania—Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Pa.

For western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia—United Business Association of Pennsylvania, Inc., Cleveland, O.

For the state of Michigan—The Strand Features, Detroit.

For Minneapolis—Standard Film Exchange, Minneapolis.

For Omaha—Standard Film Exchange, Omaha.

For Kansas City, Mo.—Standard Film Exchange, Kansas City.

For St. Louis—Standard Film Exchange, St. Louis.

The above sales were reported by William Steiner, founder of the Jester Comedy Company, who is now on tour with the first two releases: "The Recruit" and "His Golden Romance," giving special screenings pursuant to the show-you policy of Jester.

"The Bargain" Pleases Fans

According to reports received from the various exchanges throughout the country by the W. H. Productions company, the company's first Hart super-feature, in which Hart appears as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," is meeting with wonderful success.

T. E. Larson, manager of Favorite Feature Company, who controls the rights for Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas, says: "Our success on 'The Bargain' has been exceptionally good as to date we have closed practically every big town and the future looks very bright to us."

Harry Bernstein, manager for the Jake Wells organization in the south, states that "bookings are coming in very steadily on this Hart production, and four salesmen are now combing the territory. We are quite satisfied this will be one of the biggest money makers the exhibitors have had for a long time."

Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C.,

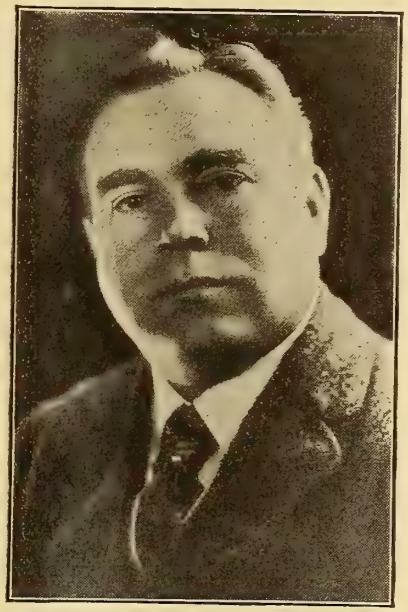
who is playing "The Two-Gun Man" at his Strand Theater, states: "I turned them away my first two days, and expect to do a land office business for the balance of my run of this production."

Although the rights to New York have not yet been sold, the W. H. company states that requests are coming in every day for bookings.

New Serial Abounds in Thrills

Preliminary inspection of the first six episodes of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," released through General Film Company, reinforces the produce's confidence expressed some time ago that this new serial is to be the thrill sensation of the year. Each episode is crowded with tense and dramatic situations well calculated to hold the fans glued in their seats. Besides, many of the German spy outrages figuring in the serial are among those dealt with in the columns of the Providence Journal during its stirring series of exposures.

Jane Vance, the heroine of this exciting serial, is a daring sportswoman whose feats will endear her with fans who are looking for new sensations. A few of the many exciting events in the early chapters of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" are:



A race on ice between an automobile and an ice boat, a collision at sea between a yacht and a motor boat, the theft of the government secret code by spies, the destruction of a munitions plant by bombs planted by a German agent, the arrest of the plotters and their escape from jail with the aid of explosives, the ingenious attempts of plotters to obtain the secret of the theoscope, a marvelous war invention, the rescue of the inventor from a rock rapidly being enveloped by the tide, a disastrous fire started by German agents, an attempt to "get" the hero by cutting down a tree from which he is making observations, the roundup and capture of members of the spy gang, a saw mill scene in which the master spy puts the heroine at the mercy of the machinery, a fight atop an ice-covered rock between the hero and the master spy and the former's thirty-foot fall into the arms of soldiers below, a clever ruse by which the heroine throws the enemy off guard and sends a wireless call for help, and the capture of members of the gang in their secret cave.

The final episodes of the last half of the serial are nearing completion. General Film exchanges report a heavy inquiry for the film in every part of the country.

Foreign Rights Sold First

A deal has been consummated between Charles H. France, president of France Films, Inc., and Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., through which the latter concern has acquired the entire foreign rights to the France Films production, "The Natural Law," recently shown to the trade at the Broadway Theater, New York City.

Considerable significance is attached to this sale in that the exploitation of a state rights production is usually begun, and often is quite well under way, in the United States before attention is given to it by exporters. In this instance, the sale of the foreign rights was made prior to any for the states, which augurs well for the quality and strength of "The Natural Law" as a production of merit.

Ernest Shipman, who is handling the sales of the Shorty Hamilton series for the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Co.

Another outstanding feature of this deal is the fact that it was consummated within fifteen minutes after the picture was privately screened for Mr. Garrett—without a doubt a record sale.

Following the sale of the foreign rights, the first state rights were sold to the Elk Photo Plays company of New York City, which was given control of distribution in New York and northern New Jersey.

Sales by W. H. Productions

The W. H. Productions company announces the following sales:

The rights to William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," in six reels, to Max W. Herring, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The rights to William S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher," in five reels, to Max W. Herring, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The rights to William S. Hart in "The Hell Hound of Alaska," in five reels, to Max W. Herring, Pittsburgh, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The rights to The W. H. Productions company's twenty-eight two-reel Keystone Comedies to Consolidated Theaters Company, Cincinnati, for Ohio and Kentucky.

Big Features for Canada

W. H. Clune's two big feature successes, "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona," will have the most elaborate presentations throughout Canada of any pictures that have been sent into the Dominion, according to Charles H. Haystead, representative of the A. J. Small Circuit of Canadian theaters, who is in New York completing plans for the exploitation of the pictures. Both features are to be shown with special scenic, musical and lighting effects in all the principal theaters.

The plans for the exploitation of the Clune successes were arranged by the Arrow Film Corporation.

Loew House Thrives

Since the Princess Theater at Memphis, Tenn., was taken over by Marcus Loew, business has been above normal. The formal opening took place December 23. The house, which formerly operated on a 5-cent scale, has been changed to 10 cents for all seats, including the war tax. It has one of the largest theater auditoriums in West Tennessee, and the $10,000 pipe organ, just rebuilt, is a big feature.

Fight Begun on Maryland Censor Law

State Exhibitors' League Seeks Repeal at Present Session of Legislature—Film Men Prove System Is Failure

DISGUSTED with the state's censorship law, Maryland exhibitors have begun a fight for its repeal and expect action from the present general assembly. The Exhibitors' League of Maryland is carrying on the fight.

The league has opened headquarters at 210 West Lexington street, Annapolis, and has issued a pamphlet on "State Censorship—What It Means." The book dwells with emphasis on article 40 of the Maryland Constitution, which provides for the liberty of the press and the inviolable right of every citizen to speak, write and publish his sentiments, being responsible for the abuse of the privilege.

The book reviews the history of the censor law in Maryland and its origin and result. Further it gives an extract from Bagby's Annotated Code, showing plainly the police power already possessed in the state to deal with obscene or other improper pictures without resort to the arbitrary censor law, which has been shown to be the hobby of a small group of people, and it carries extracts showing George Creel's repudiation of arbitrary censorship and the editorial views of many of the most prominent papers of the country unanimously against censorship.

The resume shows that the censor board produced a revenue of $8,000 during its first year, with $4,000 to its credit during the first six months of the second year. Against this, however, is the fact that the present censors propose to ask the Assembly for several thousands of dollars additional funds to cover traveling expenses and additional paid inspectors in various parts of the state. This additional allowance will cut the revenue to the state to almost nil.

Against this situation is the fact that conditions in the motion-picture world have changed since America entered the war. The movie houses have been doing their bit in Maryland and elsewhere with patriotic propaganda thrown hourly on the screens and with thousands of benefit exhibitions to raise funds to increase the comfort of the soldiers in the camps and trenches.

Despite this increased expense the amount of film used in pictures has been curtailed and will be further curtailed at the request of the government with an increase in quality. This condition will cut down by almost a third the receipts of the censor board, which are based on the amount of film by feet which is censored.

Therefore, with a curtailment of the film and with increased operating expense it is predicted that the revenue from the law will be wiped out during the year, leaving the measure to be operated solely for the benefit of those who desire arbitrarily to pass upon what the general public shall be allowed to see on the screen.

The exhibitors' league is headed by Frank A. Horning, president; Louis Schlichter, first vice-president; Eugene McCurdy, second vice-president; W. A. Humpf, treasurer, and L. A. De Hoff, secretary. These officials, with E. C. Sandell and Walter Pacy, constitute the legislative committee. Louis Rome is counsel for the league.

All Theaters in Elyria, O., Merge

Increased Dividends for Stockholders Are Expected to Follow With the Overhead Cut to the Bone

AIRING of merger talk among the producers seems to have been infectious, spreading to the exhibitors, for word comes of a merger of the interests of all the exhibitors in one town.

Elyria, O., is the town. All of the five theaters there have been pooled under the head of the Elyria Theaters Co. It is said that the company expects to increase dividends largely because overhead will be cut to the minimum.

It was not easy sledding to perfect the merger, according to reports. Several times when the deal was thought to be nearly completed it went on the rocks, but after much effort the stockholders of the five theaters were called together and the merger formally approved.

The following board of directors was elected:

H. A. Dykeman, owner of the recently destroyed Elyria Theater, and subsequently interested in the Rialto ;O. J. Bannon, of the Bannon Theater; Melton Phelas, manager of the Strand and Rialto; C. Neufer, who was interested in the Strand and Rialto; John Pekras, of the American; L. B. Fay and F. A. Stetson.

The directors then perfected the organization with O. J. Bannon as president, John Pekras vice-president and general manager, F. A. Stetson secretary, and L. B. Fay treasurer.

Mr. Pekras as general manager has charge of the general management of the theaters and films, while Mr. Bannon will act as house manager. It is understood that there was considerable rivalry for the controlling offices, but now that everything has been put on a firm business basis, harmonious co-operation is the anticipation from every member of the board.

Washington House Nearly Ready

Crandall's Metropolitan Theater, now in the course of erection at F and Tenth streets, Washington, D. C., in which all right and title was purchased by Harry M. Crandall, Barry Bulkley and R. W. Bulkley, will throw open its doors to the public of Washington about the middle of February.

This new and handsome addition to the amusement houses of the nation's capital covers approximately 10,000 square feet. The entrance is on F street, the lobby extending back 30 feet to a rotunda promenade leading directly to the auditorium proper of the theater, which, extending at a direct right angle, covers the remainder of the property to Tenth street. This affords an immense area on the first floor, the plans calling for 1,200 seats on the orchestra level alone.

Extending over half of this space is hung the cantilever balcony and mezzanine. Private boxes and lodge seats will occupy the entire mezzanine. The arrangement of the balcony is novel in that it consists of a series of rises, reached by a system of ornamental fireproof tunnels or promenades. This is declared to be utilizing such manner of balcony approaches for the first time in theater construction in the United States.

The mezzanine floor will have a seating capacity of more than 300, while the balcony will seat approimately 700, giving the theater a total seating capacity over 2,200. This makes the Metropolitan the largest theater in Washington.

For the convenience of ladies attending the matinee performances the Metropolitan will maintain a large and roomy nursery playroom with toys for the little folks to amuse themselves while their mothers enjoy the performance.

The Metropolitan will be strictly a motion picture house and Mr. Crandall has already arranged for the first Washington showing of many photographic productions featuring the well-known stars of the film and stage worlds.

Cleveland Exhibitors Elect

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland has elected the following officers for the coming year: President, Henry B. Lustig; vice-president, R. H. Grey; recording secretary, Joseph Lefkowitz; financial secretary and secretary, Adolph Mahrer.

"It is the aim and ambition of this administration," said Mr. Lustig upon taking the chair, "to weld this organization into a strong local body. We want only such members as will co-operate with the administration in accomplishing this. The members who like to reap the benefits of our labors without bearing any of the responsibilities we intend to weed out.

"Our slogan will be 'co-operation,' and I intend to exert my power as president in enforcing compliance with the fundamental principles of this league."

Mr. Grey and Mr. Lefkowitz heartily endorsed the sentiments of Mr. Lustig, and promised to support him in the reforms which he intends to introduce.

"Split Reel" Notes For Theater Men

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

Buys Kalamazoo House

THE Fuller Theater in Kalamazoo has been taken over by W. S. Butterfield in the interest of a corporation. Feature films will alternate with road shows.

Machine Company Incorporates

The Color Motion Picture Corporation has filed articles of incorporation at Dover, Del. The corporation deals in picture machines. It is capitalized for $500,000.

Takes Out Big Policy

The Penn Mutual, Prudential, and Mutual Life have issued a $100,000 insurance policy to H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation.

General Film Moves

General Film Company, New York, has settled in its comfortable new quarters on the seventeenth floor of the Berkeley Building at 25 West Forty-fourth street, one of the finest buildings in the city.

Michigan Theater Burns

The Temple Theater at Alpena, Mich., was destroyed by fire twenty minutes after 500 persons had filed out upon the conclusion of the final performance. The house was owned by William A. Comstock. The loss is estimated at $15,000.

Woman Made Manager

Miss Alpha Speck, who has been cashier and assistant manager of the Gem Theater at Little Rock, Ark., for three years, has been promoted to manager by Saul Harris. Miss Speck succeeds Percy Scholer, who has joined the quartermaster's department at Camp Bowie.

Theaters Bar Children

At the request of the commanding officer of Fort Ogelthorpe, orders have been issued by the city government of Chattanooga, Tenn., to theater managers to refuse temporarily the admittance of children to all shows on account of the prevalence of numerous cases of cerebro spinal meningitis.

New Branch Manager

G. W. Whitney, an experienced film salesman and executive of several years' standing, has just been appointed manager of General Film Company's branch office at Denver. He leaves the management of the Mutual exchange at Butte. Mr. Whitney formerly owned a theater in Denver.

New Company Formed

Articles of incorporation have been filed at Harrisburg, Pa., by the Sealed Orders Motion Picture Corporation, a company formed to produce pictures with a capital of $250,000. The incorporators are Arthur W. Britton, Louis H. Gunther and George V. Reilly of New York City.

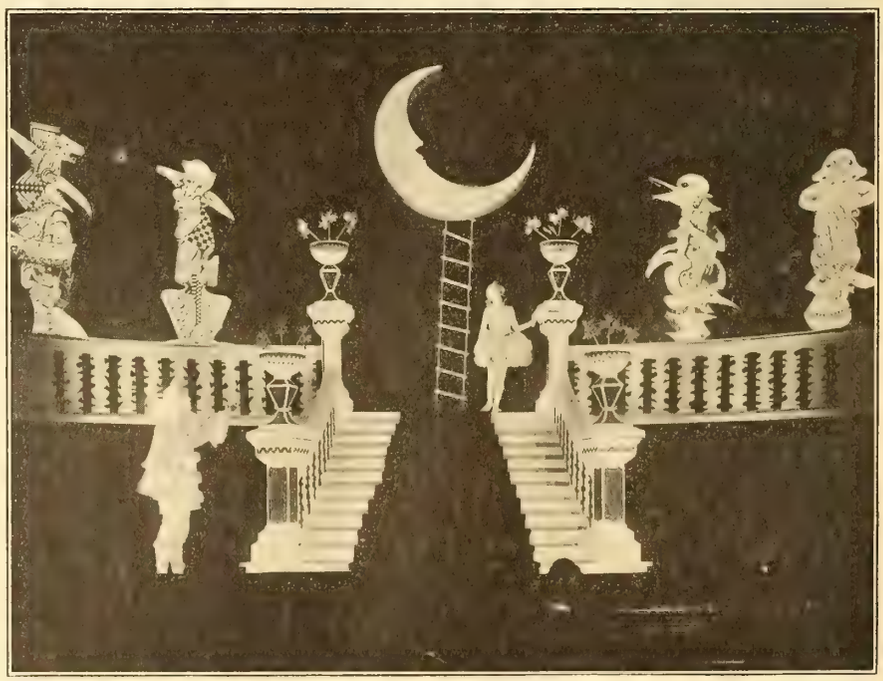
Titian License Revoked

The license committee of the Illinois Council of Defense has revoked the license of the Titian Pictures Corporation to show "The Garden of Allah" in aid of soldiers and sailors, the contention being that the corporation failed to live up to its agreement. Charges of stock jobbing were denied by Frederick Russell Clark, Titian's president. He said the corporation was not selling stock. Titian is capitalized for $1,000,000.

Pastor Writes Scenario

Permission has been given the More Deadly Than Battle, Inc., a corporation formed to produce a picture by that name, to issue 30,000 shares of stock to the Rev. Paul Smith, in exchange for the scenario and other services, and to sell 30,000 shares at $1 a share at not less than 90. The permit provides that until the cash investors have been repaid the full amount of their investment the minister shall not receive dividends on his stock to exceed $2,000.

"Extras" Pay to Work



The Red Cross profited by several hundred dollars recently as the result of a scene made at the Vitagraph western studio for "The Woman in the Web," the serial in which Hedda Nova, the Russian actress, and J. Frank Glendon are to be starred. Some of the most prominent Los Angeles and Pasadena society women, numbering among them members of the winter colony, appeared as "extras" in the White House ball room scene and not only wore their own jewels and gowns, but paid for the privilege of appearing in the picture, the money being turned over to the Red Cross.

Mae Marsh Christens House

When Poughkeepsie's new $100,000 motion picture theater, the Stratford, opened for the first time recently, the honor of the first attraction fell to a Goldwyn production—Mae Marsh, in "The Cinderella Man."

The Stratford is distinctly a Poughkeepsie institution, made possible by the public spirit and interest of the following named subscribers: Ely Elting, Herbert R. Gurney, John Lurie, W. De Garmo Smith, D. W. Wilbur, Dr. H. L. Salsbury, Albert F. Schwartz, John H. Doherty, Edward E. Perkins and C. W. H. Arnold.

It is located at the corner of Liberty and Cannon streets and is the largest theater for the exclusive production of photoplays in that section of the state.

FACTS ABOUT FILM FOLK—YOU MAY CLIP AND PRINT THEM

LITTLE Pauline Starke, who scored such a success in her Triangle picture, "Until They Get Me," that she was given the lead in "The Shoes That Danced," is given another big chance in Director Frank Borzage's latest subject the working title of which is "Innocent's Progress." Miss Starke who is but sixteen years old, is picked as a "comer" by fans and already has a large following in the film world.

Edgar Lewis, producer of "The Barrier," "Bar Sinister," and several other features, has arrived on the Coast where he will make several productions. Mitchell Lewis, who has been one of the featured members of his previous casts is also out here with him.

Mae Marsh played Boston, Mass., recently in four distinct roles, while "Fields of Honor," her newest published picture, was being shown at the Boston Theater. "The Cinderella Man" was the bill at the Fenway, the Globe was showing "Intolerance," the great Griffith spectacle, and Miss Marsh herself was at Marblehead, in the Boston district, being photographed for still another Goldwyn, "The Beloved Traitor."

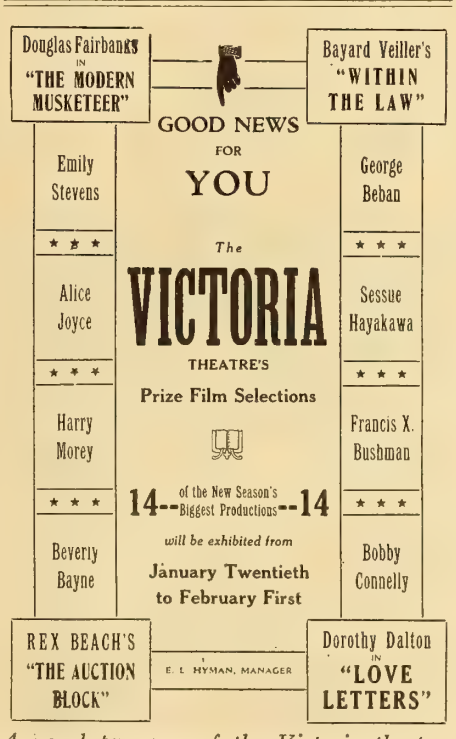
Crane Wilbur has just gone into business for himself. He has taken over the Macdonough Theater in Oakland, California, remodeled it, and has re-named it the Wilbur Playhouse. He will present high class stage successes there. He has formed a company known as the Crane Wilbur Enterprises, and intends to take over several theaters on the Pacific Coast, and work up a chain of houses.

For her appearance in the opera "Monna Vanna" at the Lexington Theater, New York, Mary Garden has sent ten tickets to the Goldwyn studio. Accompanying the tickets is a list of as many names. They represent the studio workers heard by Miss Garden to say that they had never seen her in opera. This charming courtesy proves further that the new screen star never forgets, even as she did not forget to present her host of Goldwyn friends with a parting gift when she left the studio.

Mae Marsh's doll, dressed by her in the character she plays in "The Cinderella Man" did much toward swelling the receipts of Hero Land, New York's great war bazaar. The report states that the doll netted $231.50.

Texas Guinan, former Winter Garden favorite who is now playing with the Triangle forces, was among the screen celebrities at the "ringside" at the recent Red Cross Rodeo held in Washington Park, Los Angeles. Miss Guinan had as her guests Alma Rubens, Lottie Pickford and Mrs. Al. Roscoe.

Max Linder, the French comedian who terminated his contract with Essanay last July on acount of ill health, has cabled to friends in this country that he has now fully recovered, and that he expects to visit this country again in April.



Wanda Petit recently celebrated her first anniversary as a film actress. In the one year she has been with William Fox she advanced rapidly from small parts. Some of the William Fox pictures in which Miss Petit has been cast are "The Derelict," "The Broadway Sport," "This Is the Life," "The Heart of a Lion," and "Cupid's Round Up."

Theda Bara will leave New York sometime during the first week of February for Hollywood, Cal., where she will begin work on a new super-production which the Fox management considers affords her greater opportunities for display of dramatic talent than she has had in any of her previous dramas, including "Cleopatra" and "The Rose of Blood."

Georgia Swanson has the featured part in "Smoke," a picturization of Norman Sherbrook's magazine story of the same name made by Charles Mortimer Peck. Director Jack Dillon conscripted this well-known comediene, from the Triangle-Keystone forces. Edward Piel makes his initial appearance under the Triangle banner as Miss Swanson's leading man. "Smoke" is a society romance showing the experiences of a young girl among the ultra smart set of a large city. Her way is beset with pitfalls and temptations but feminine instincts finally lead to the right man.

The successful scenario writer has finally won his way to fame. He is going to show the public how to win honors and emolument in the motion picture world throughout the medium of the Triangle-Keystone comedy, "A Playwright's Wrong" in which Billy Franey and Maude Wayne are being featured under the direction of Herman Raymaker.

Herman Raymaker, Triangle-Keystone director, is one of the many at the Culver City studio who is expecting to leave on a moment's notice for American Lake and the "olive drab." Raymaker has received his classification card from his exemption board and his mark is A-1. Dick Donaldson, assistant to Director Jack Conway, is another who has received a similar classification.

A novel program of the Victoria theater, Buffalo, of which Edward L. Hyman is manager.

The Los Angeles Athletic Club was the scene of an enjoyable dinner party the other night when Sydney E. Abel, special representative for the Select Pictures Corporation, entertained as his guest of honor Constance Talmadge, Select's brilliant young comedienne. Covers were laid for Miss Talmadge, Mrs. Talmadge, Kathleen Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Douglas, A. Jessen, B. E. Loper. Select's Los Angeles Manager and Mr. Abel.

The recent addition of Edmund Lawrence to the staff of directors of the Fox Corporation brings the total number now in the employ of William Fox to nineteen. Two others, Edward J. Le Saint and Oscar A. C. Lund, have recently joined the Fox forces. Mr. Lawrence is directing Virginia Pearson in a new war play, Mr. Le Saint is working on the Pacific Coast and Mr. Lund at present is in New Orleans taking scenes for Peggy Hyland's first Fox picture. The others include J. Gordon Edwards, now in California; R. A. Walsh, Frank Lloyd, who has just completed a picture dealing with the divorce problem; Carl Harbaugh, Richard Stanton, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, Harry Millarde, Kenean Buel, Bertram Bracken and Henry Lehrman. Five directors are working under Mr. Lehrman's supervision on Sunshine Comedies.

E. K. Lincoln is in Hollywood, Cal., where he will be featured in a timely seven reel feature under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne. This film production will introduce Mr. Cabanne as author and producer as well as director. Since appearing as star in the Mutual-Jimmy Dale serial, "The Grey Seal," Mr. Lincoln has been starred in "The Freedom of the World," and played opposite Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor."

Jack Pickford is back from the icy regions of the far east and will soon be at hard work again under William D. Taylor, who directed all of Jack's recent successes. The feature in hand is Alice Hegan Rice's book "Sandy," a capital medium for the ever young and irrepressible Jack Pickford.

Production work on "The Blue Bird," the Maurice Maeterlinck masterpiece, which has been going on for several months at the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Ft. Lee, N. J., was brought to a close last week when director Maurice Tourneur filmed the final scenes. The angels have folded their wings and departed, the cat and the dog have discarded their makeup and are human beings again, and the scores of beautiful girls who appeared in the production in symbolical costumes—many of them necessarily diaphanous—will long remember the Fort Lee studio when zero weather held forth during the coal shortage.

Latest News of Chicago

HARRY WEISS, of the First Exhibitors' Circuit, is on a trip through Illinois and Indiana.

Ascher Bros. and Lubliner and Trinz, it is announced, have contracted for all the Pathe plays.

W. H. Brickhouse, formerly of Standard Pictures, has joined Pathe and will travel the Indiana territory.

Milton Simon has started to work for the First Exhibitors' as a salesman. Mr. Simon is a pioneer in the sales field.

S. R. Kent, general sales manager of the General Film Company, visited the Chicago office last week en route to New York from the coast.

Cresson E. Smith, manager of the Metro office, who had planned to go to Fox in the same capacity, has reconsidered and will remain with Metro.

Harry Willard has been transferred from the Syracuse office of Fox to the Chicago office. The exact nature of his duties has not yet been determined.

W. H. Jenner, manager of the Kleine Exchange, reports that the Band Box, a loop picture house, has booked "I, Mary MacLane," the new Essanay film, for an indefinite run.

R. C. Seery, manager of the First Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, reports that the circuit has taken over all of the Frank Keenan and Norma Talmadge reissues. Other releases in prospect are "The Fall of the Romanoffs" and "The Birth of a Nation."

Kleine reports that out-of-town exhibitors are evincing much interest in "I, Mary MacLane." Among those who called at the local offices last week and booked the feature were Ellis Bostwick, manager of the Merrill Theater, Milwaukee, and Nate Erber, owner of the Lincoln Square Theater at Decatur, Ill., and the Palace at Danville.

Watterson R. Rothacker has been re-elected president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co.; David Beaton, Jr., has been elected vice-president; H. J. Aldous has been re-elected secretary and treasurer; J. G. Mammaser has been elected assistant treasurer, and J. G. Hahn has been re-elected assistant secretary.

Chicago exhibitors were made to feel "at home" in every sense of the word when they visited the Pathe offices on the regular exhibition day last week. A lunch of ham sandwiches, pie and coffee was served. About sixty partook of the "feed." The news spread through the loop rapidly and other distributors are talking of having "lunch exhibitions" also.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors who called at the Famous Players-Paramount office last week were M. F. Baker, owner of the Grand Opera House at Keokuk, Ia., and J. D. Fulrath, owner of the Fulrath Opera House at Savanna, Ill. Both said business was good and getting better each day, reflecting an improvement in conditions generally.

Ralph Kettering, publicity representative of Jones, Iinick and Schaefer, announces in behalf of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Ascher Bros., and the Central Film Co., jointly owned by members of the two firms, that there is no foundation whatever for the report that Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has purchased an interest in any one of the three enterprises.

Hazel Daly, Selig star, appeared in person at the Merrill Theater in Milwaukee on Sunday and Monday, and talked to her many admirers who had gathered to see her with Tom Moore in "Brown of Harvard." While in Milwaukee Miss Daly acted as judge in a contest, picking a young man and a girl from hundreds who were claimants to the best camera faces. The young man and the girl will come to Chicago and appear in a Selig production soon.

The independent exchange of Griever and Herz reports that it has perfected arrangements with the Exhibitors' Operating Corporation so as to release an Exhibitors' film once a month. The first is Selig's "The City of Purple Dreams," which opened at the Ziegfield February 3. "Revelations," a Wonder film, and "Real Life in China" are other releases. The latter will be distributed as an eight-reel feature or in single reels. Griever and Herz are planning to open offices in Indianapolis and Milwaukee.

Bewitching Norma Talmadge as she appears in the Select Pictures Star series.

George (Daddy) Hines, owner of the Auditorium Theater, South Bend, Ind., was a visitor at the Kleine offices last week. He reported that he had been hard hit by the action of the Indiana fuel administration in closing theaters as well as factories for the five-day period. Previously he had been compelled to close on Saturday and Sunday because of storm conditions. But neither coalless days or storm ones have discouraged Mr. Hines. He is a firm believer that the industry faces unparalleled prosperity.

Julius Bernheim, formerly manager of the Universal Film Exchange of Minneapolis, was a visitor in Chicago all last week. While in the city Mr. Bernheim was in conference with Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, who also was a visitor in the city.

Maurice Fleckles, known to almost everyone in the film business throughout the United States, was a visitor at the Universal Film Exchange last week. Mr. Fleckles was on his way to the coast.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, spent several days last week in the Chicago Universal exchange, where he was in conference with his various managers. This is the first time Mr. Laemmle has been in Chicago since the consolidation of the Jewel, Bluebird and Universal Exchanges, and it is the first time that Mr. Laemmle ever came to town and only had one exchange to visit. In the past he has had to visit the various exchanges all over the loop, and now he can confer with his managers and visitors in his new private office reserved for him at the exchange in the Consumers building.

G. L. Stiles of the Milwaukee Universal office was in this city on Universal business last week.

"The Price of a Good Time," the latest Jewel feature, produced by Lois Weber, had a week's run at the Pastime Theater on Madison street.

Eli Van Ronkel of the Jewel office was absent from his office all last week on account of illness.

Feature Programs

Artcraft

Stella Maris—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 20.—Mary Pickford plays a dual role in the screen version of the W. J. Locke novel, which was adapted by Frances Marian and directed by Marshall Neilan. An excellent production, contrasting the lives of Stella Maris, a crippled girl, daughter of wealth, who knew life only as a thing of beauty and love, and Unity Blake, an orphan, unloved by anyone. Stella gains her health but learns of the sadness and ugliness of life, and Unity, in the end, sacrifices herself that Stella Maris may be happy. Reviewed in this issue.

Bluebird

The Wife He Bought—(FIVE REELS)—FEBRUARY 4.—Carmel Myers and Kenneth Harlan play the leading roles. The hero marries the daughter of his enemy, believing that he can make both pay for the wrong the enemy has done to his father. But the wife insteading of hating, loves her husband, who later grows to love her. Reviewed in this issue.

Goldwyn

Dodging a Million—(SIX REELS)—JANUARY 28.—Stars Mabel Normand. Tom Moore plays opposite. Arabella Flynn (Mabel Normand), who dresses the models in a fashionable modiste shop, borrows some expensive garments and goes to the smartest restaurant in town. She meets Jack Forsythe, son of the millionaire corset king. She is discovered by the boss and the chief modiste, who also are out for the evening. She flees in a taxi, for which she pays with the last money in her purse, to her furnished room; but when she arrives at the house the landlady won't let her in because she is suspicious of her fine colthes. But at this juncture an expressman drives up with three trunks and a letter containing a check for $800 for Arabella. It seems that Arabella has inherited the fortune of a wealthy aunt in Guatamala. The trunks are to be opened one after the other in a certain order on successive days. Arabella goes to a fashionable hotel. Then she meets a mysterious Spaniard. He is present when she opens the trunks. The first contains beautiful clothes, the second a dazzling array of jewels, the third has nothing but some bottles; and in them is what the aunt says is a mysterious poison which she may need if she does not find the love of a true man. But Arabella's fortune also brings her trouble and at last she takes the poison. Then everything comes out right, and Arabella is cured of the poison.

Out West—(TWO REELS)—JANUARY 20.—Starring Fatty Arbuckle. A western comedy, a burlesque on the usual western melodrama. Reviewed in this issue.

He Got His—(ONE REEL)—KLEVER KOMEDY—JANUARY 28.—Featuring Victor Moore. Vic is a broker. He invests some money for a doctor's wife. He meets the doctor and interests him in an investment. On his way to Vic's office he is delayed, and Vic goes to the hospital to find him. Vic is mistaken for an expected patient and rushed to the operating table. He manages to escape and jumps out the window on to a passing wagon. The attendants start after him in an ambulance. Vic jumps from the wagon into a passing auto filled with women. The women scream and the merry movie chase is on. Vic jumps out of the auto and runs down the street, chased by a half dozen cops. He gets over a fence and climbs up a fire escape, and gets into the first open window. The open window turns out to be in Dr. Carver's apartment, and Vic is just in time to meet the Doc. The Doc gets his gun working and another chase starts, which ends up in Vic being captured by the hospital attendants, and rushed back to the hospital. Dr. Carver gets back there just as Vic is again strapped to the operating table, and looking down as the patient discovers Vic, and smilingly figures out Vic's finish.

The Widow's Might—(FIVE REELS)—JANUARY 28).—Features Julian Eltinge as Tavish. An old Spanish land grant, held by Hammer, is used as a means of forcing Tavish and his pals from their cattle lands. Dick Tavish goes to the city to see Hammer. While there he meets Irene Stuart, whose picture he is secretly in love with. Unable to gain any concessions from Hammer, Tavish plans to rob the safe. Hammer returns and Dick, in order to save himself, enters the room of Mrs. Pomfret, aunt of Irene. Tavish uses some of her dresses and forces her to introduce him as a Princess. A baby is brought to the door of Irene and she takes it to the Princess. Tavish is forced to take care of the child. He is then forced to masquerade as a woman. He occupies Hammer's attentions and at the same time bribes the valet to bring him all of Hammer's correspondence. Owing to the child, scandal is started and Dick is forced to leave the hotel. He then unmasks and accuses Hammer of fraud. With Irene he goes back to the cattle ranch.

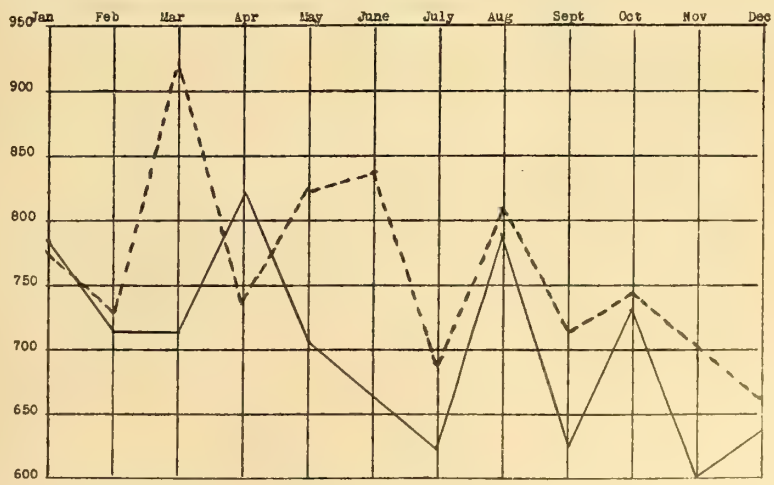
Her Friend Brown—(ONE REEL)—STRAND—FEBRUARY 5.—Starring Billie Rhodes. Billie's husband meets a former sweetheart, known as "Brownie," tells her he is still fancy free and makes a date to take her to dinner. He tells Billie he has an appointment with a "Mr. Brown," and she decides to go see mother. Mother happens to be out, and Billie goes to the cafe to see hubby and his friend. Friend husband has not yet arrived, but Billie meets a "Mr. Brown," whom she believes is the one Jack has an appointment with. "Mr. Brown," an elderly Lothario, gets very fresh with Billie, and hubby arrives on the scene to start a free-for-all fight. He lands in jail. Next morning, in police court, the Judge turns out to be the "Mr. Brown," and lets hubby off with a light sentence of constancy for the remainder of his life to friend wife.



Manager Foils Storm

Enterprise on the part of Manager Luneman of the Majestic theater at Madison, Wis., is all that saved the Madison public from going showless one day during a recent blizzard.

Since express companies in Chicago absolutely refused to accept films of any form or description, even the alluring Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages," which had been advertised extensively and which was due in Madison the day before, was doomed to stay sealed in the Chicago express office.

But where there's a telegram there's hope, thought Mr. Luneman, and telegraph he did as soon as it became evident that his audience might be disappointed. Arrangements were made for a special messenger to get the film in Chicago and bring it on the first train leaving for Madison.

The messenger and film arrived after an all night session in the Northwestern station at Chicago and the special feature for which the Madison public was anxiously waiting was shown on schedule.

Complete Record of Current Films

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

New Exhibitors' Circuit

Formation of what will be known as the Tri-State Exhibitors' circuit is announced by exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania. The new organization will work in conjunction with other circuits of Eastern Ohio and West Virginia.

This circuit is not affiliated with any organization; therefore, all bonafide exhibitors can become members. Much enthusiasm is being displayed and it is thought that much and permanent good can and will be accomplished.

A. J. Barthell of Pittsburgh, former president of the Exhibitors' League of Western Pennsylvania, is busily engaged arranging details and will present his final report at a meeting soon. Exhibitors who are interested can apply for membership to Mr. Barthell.

Fox Film to Draw Women

With what is declared to be an exceptionally strong cast, including Bertha Mann, Rhea Mitchell, Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby, Marc Robbins, Willard Louis and Edward M. Wallace, Director Frank Lloyd of the William Fox staff is working at Hollywood, Cal., on the production which has for its object the disclosing of evils of the divorce system. It is tentatively scheduled for release March 10 as a Standard picture.

The production is an expression of Mr. Lloyd's own idea growing out of personal observations of injustices to women which he believes have been worked through made-for-man laws. The director is the author of the story and is said to be developing it to give strong emphasis to the feminine appeal. Indeed, it is Mr. Lloyd's suggestion that the production be titled "The Law of Man." Decision, however, has not been announced on this point.

Bertha Mann has the role of a wife, surrounded by luxury, but personally neglected by her husband. She is caught one day in what is interpreted as a compromising situation and a divorce results, the father obtaining custody of their child. The mother is dropped by society and drifts into a dissolute life, but the daughter grows to womanhood and marries a man who becomes district attorney.

To compromise the latter, an effort is made to bring mother and daughter together, and some highly dramatic scenes are said to develop from this situation, which results in the elder woman denying that she has ever even seen the younger one. However, the district attorney learns the truth and there is a second divorce trial, during which the mother saves the daughter by telling the story of her own disgrace.

Contest Winner Gets Part

The sun went down behind the New Jersey hills at the end of a perfect day last week for Miss Ivy Deibel of Cleveland, Ohio, when that young lady finished work in the scenes in which she was appearing with June Caprice, the dainty William Fox star.

Miss Deibel was the winner of a recent contest in Cleveland for the "best camera face." The judges voted that of the 1,300 contestants she had the best features for the screen. As a reward she was cast for a part in Miss Caprice's forthcoming production, "The Heart of Romance."

Miss Deibel is a vivacious brunette and is prominent in the party scene that opens the picture.

Mobile House Splits Prices

The Lyric Theater, in Mobile, Ala., is doing a good business through the dull period of cold weather. Two thousand seats are priced at 5 and 10 cents, and four performances, starting at 1, 3, 7 and 9 p. m., are being given. Fox pictures are featured, augmented by comedies. Being a coast town, many foreigners live here, and these people invariably drop in where the comedy banner is displayed.

TRIANGLE

"Thumbs Down"

Picture one of those magnificent, barbaric, gladiatorial combats of ancient Rome.

A gladiator has just downed his opponent. With foot planted on his vanquished foe he rests a moment, sword in hand, to await the Emperor's decision. Shall it be "thumbs down" for death, or "thumbs up" for victory?

The motion picture exhibitor, confronted by the dangers to his business has indicated "thumbs down" to those producers and distributors who are not giving proper consideration to his problems.

He wants a clean-cut, open and above-board proposition from the distributor or producer.

The exhibitor wants to make his profit. He wants to place his confidence with those producers who will study his problems, look at his business from the box office standpoint, co-operate with him, sympathize with his efforts to make a real and lasting success and give him every reasonable advantage that can be extended.

Triangle has indicated "thumbs down" to the policy of charging impossibly high prices on films.

"Thumbs down" was the policy on the war tax. Triangle cheerfully shouldered the burden of the tax instead of placing it on the already overburdened exhibitor.

"Thumbs down" is the Triangle policy on "just ordinary" service. Every month a special seven-reel feature of unusual merit is issued to Triangle exhibitors at no extra cost. This is a part of the regular program.

"Thumbs down" is the policy on waste, hackneyed stories, ordinary production, and anything which tends to keep the business from entering at the box office.

We are certain after a careful investigation that like thousands of other exhibitors enjoying Triangle service, you will say

"THUMBS UP" ON TRIANGLE.

Rout Gloom as Outlook Brightens

EXHIBITORS AND PRODUCERS NOT DISCOURAGED DESPITE HOLIDAYS

DESPITE the decision of the government not to abandon Heatless Mondays and despite the closing orders in Canada, the motion picture business refused last week to be stampeded into fright, though it will be admitted that gloom in huge chunks reigned for a day or two after both pieces of news were made public.

Depressed by the prospect of going through with Heatless Mondays until March 25, exhibitors, exchange men and producers took stock of the situation, but instead of being further dismayed found real hope for brighter days. As one Chicago exhibitor said:

"Things are not nearly as bad as they seem and I'm not saying this just to make some one feel good, either. I'm saying it because it's so. A reaction has set in and drooping attendance is reviving in spite of closed Tuesdays. War orders are forcing people to seek relaxation in the theaters and this is going to be truer every day as long as the war lasts."

Better Business In East

Substantiation of this viewpoint is contained in reports of actual conditions in the East to Goldwyn Pictures. Exhibitors there, according to the reports, in nearly all instances have made up most if not all of their losses from Tuesday closing through increased attendance on Sunday, Monday and Wednesday. An article dealing with these reports will be found on another page.

Canada, unlike the United States, is not in such a fortunate position, especially the province of Manitoba, where a ban on comedies is due February 28, and exhibitors have been threatened with a 20 per cent war tax.

Now, on top of this, a three-day factory order is issued which is bound to affect box office receipts and Heatless Mondays will close every house one day a week from February 18 to March 25. Rumor of factory closing order swept the dominion before it was made public. Theater men were up in arms. Delegations left for Ottawa at once, but their protests apparently were unheeded.

Viewpoint of Leaders

All exhibitors close to real conditions decline to be pessimistic, however. Their feeling will be better understood when the viewpoints of several leaders in the industry are stated.

Writing to Mr. Key of the sales department in New York, M. H. Hoffman of Foursquare Pictures in Chicago, said that signs of a resumption of business along more nearly normal lines are becoming discernible rapidly.

"That time is coming sooner than some of the pessimists think, too," he wrote, "and it is coming to stay. In the last two weeks I have talked with scores of exhibitors, as well as prominent citizens, in the cities of Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Chicago. What I have learned convinces me that the worst is past and that the situation is on the mend.

Expects Smiles Soon

"I do not wish to be misunderstood. Immediate resumption of motion picture bookings in the same volume that prevailed before the holidays will not take place. But it is beginning to start and in a few weeks I expect to see smiles on the faces of the many who have been looking as if they had lost their best friends.

"When confidence has been restored, I am certain that the storm through which the industry has been passing will leave conditions clarified and in a far better state than had it not fallen. Here is a definite instance of where a seeming hardship will prove to have been a blessing in disguise. Because a great deal of what is undesirable will be eliminated, as it should have been some time ago.

Mr. Hoffman's views in this respect are given in detail elsewhere in this issue.

Horkheimer Sees Readjustment

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, attributes the present unrest to the fact that conditions are undergoing a readjustment.

"A complete change of conditions comes into the motion picture world every three years," Mr. Horkheimer said. "This state of affairs is always brought about by the change in tastes of the public. I believe that we are just now seeing the end of one of these upheavals. Public clamor for something different from the old order often brings about the downfall of men who think they monopolize the business. The changes which come to people's tastes make it utterly impossible for producers to ram down the throats of exhibitors the kind of films the public doesn't want."

The period of readjustment promises to have an important bearing upon the future. According to Mr. Horkheimer, prospects were never brighter for the independent producer. Instead of curtailing production, the Balboa studio is increasing its output by adding several new companies. No orders have been received from the fuel administration to reduce activities, nor are any such orders expected.

Laemmle Blames Waste

Carl Laemmle, president and director general of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, takes occasion to censure the industry for waste. He declares waste alone is responsible for the present condition of affairs.

"In spite of all we read and hear about the efficiency methods adopted by the various film organizations, there isn't another industry in the world in which waste is so common, or so complacently regarded," declared Mr. Laemmle.

"The item of stars' salaries is an old, old story—but an all-important one, nevertheless. Needless extravagance in production is another. Excess advertising of weak productions is a third. Slipshod distributing methods, a fourth—but I could go on and detail an almost unending list.

Cites Example of Waste

"Let me cite you an instance of gross negligence that recently occurred in connection with a certain big feature—what I say to you was told to me by one of the men connected with the organization which produced the picture.

"The producers engaged a certain world-famous star at a staggering salary. It was agreed that the player was to commence work on a certain date. Yet, not until almost three weeks from the date agreed upon was the first set used in the production ready. In the meantime, the star's salary had to be paid. I understand that when the picture was finally completed its cost reached a six-figure total—and not a small part of it was merely represented in the money handed to the central finger.

"Here's another instance," said Mr. Laemmle: "In reading a story the other day, I came across a few paragraphs telling of the terrific expense to which one company had gone to erect a set which was subsequently destroyed to obtain certain effects. Press agent camouflage? Not at all! The writer told the truth. Perfectly good money, and lots of it, did go up in smoke—and all for a scene which really could have been dispensed with, without in the slightest way detracting from the interest of the story.

Good Pictures Often Cheap

"You probably know that the most successful productions the industry has known cost comparatively little. Take 'Traffic in Souls.' Not another of the many imitations that followed in its train ever came within hailing distance of the money it made. They cost anywhere from two to ten times as much as did our picture, too.

" 'Where Are My Children?' is another feature that made real money. Cost? Away down in the five figures. Imitations which followed it all cost at least again as much. We produced for Jewel Productions, 'The Price of a Good Time' and right now that picture is making more money than ninety-nine out of every hundred features on the market. 'Shoes,' and such serials as 'Liberty,' 'The Voice on the Wire,' and 'The Red Age' all made money without the necessity of our wasting fortunes in producing them.

"Frankly, we have stopped producing spectacles because the public would rather pay to see stories—stories dealing with the plain people in a plain, human way. We are not paying tremendous salaries to stars for the same reason. Neither 'Where Are My Children?', 'Shoes,' or 'The Price of a Good Time,' contained world-famous stars, but they did contain the all-important element—the story.

Trade Has Much to Learn

"As far as distribution is concerned, we have still much to learn from the lowliest organization in the commercial field. As far as I can see, it is the burning ambition of every fledgling film organization to immediately establish a string of exchanges reaching from New York to San Francisco, and from Chicago to Dallas. That the wise old policy of 'make haste slowly' is the proper one to follow apparently never occurs to the average film head. So offices are opened and overhead piled up with the usual result.

"Manufacturers in other fields do things better. If a branch proves unprofitable, they simply withdraw from the territory until conditions are more favorable. The Universal has no hesitancy in declaring that it has pursued this policy from time to time. Were this practice general the market for pictures in the various territories would not be glutted.

Tells Harm That is Done

"What has been the result of all this extravagance, waste and bad management? The unscrupulous chap who had been living off the fat pickings of the fake mine promoting game and the oil stock swindle drifted into the business. Thank heaven, he didn't stay long, but he remained with us long enough to do considerable harm.

"Politicians looking for bright prospects for taxation also lit upon us as fair game. The result is that we are probably the most heavily taxed of all legitimate industries.

"We've proudly proclaimed ourselves the 'Fifth Greatest Industry' so long and so loudly that we've almost come to believe it. But the truth is simply this: After we've got down to a sane and sensible method of doing business, and by this I include all ends of the industry, we'll find that we are not the fifth nor perhaps the sixth, nor seventh. What we will find, however, is that we've swapped pretension for rock solid fact—bubble inflation for genuine profit."

Humor Reigns in New Film for Miss Pickford

There is little doubt that "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," in which Mary Pickford will appear next for Artcraft, is her most humorous picture.

Clothes-Line Alley is typical of the tenement district of a great metropolis. The characters that appear, from the star down, are all indigenous to the precincts that form so large and so picturesque a portion of the city.

Mary Pickford, of course, appears as Amarilly, daughter of a tender-hearted Irish washerwoman mother with a family of children who are messengers and newsboys.

In Miss Pickford's support are the following players: William Scott, Norman Kerry, Ida Waterman, Margaret Landis, Kate Price, Thomas H. Wilson, Fred Goodwins, Herbert Standing, Wesley Barry, Frank Butterworth, Antrim Short, George Hackathorn and Gertrude Short. In addition there are numerous types of the tenement-folk, policemen, Chinese and others.

Losses of Theaterless Day Made Good

EASTERN HOUSES DO BIG BUSINESS SUNDAY, MONDAY AND WEDNESDAY

"IT'S AN ILL-WIND that blows nobody good," is an old saying, but truly applicable to Theaterless Day, according to a canvass of eastern houses by Goldwyn.

On the Saturday before the first Tuesday shut-down Goldwyn sent out several hundred telegrams to representatives, agents and employes in as many towns and cities, asking them to report accurately as to the business done in the theaters on Monday, January 21.

Get Great Crowds

Replies, coming in by mail and wire, reveal the encouraging news that the majority of the theaters in cities, both large and small, did a record-breaking business on the first of the fuelless days. Furthermore, the outlook, according to the reports, is that prosperous Mondays will continue for exhibitors throughout the period when their houses are dark on Tuesdays.

And the Goldwyn reports reveal still another cause for jubilation. Business on Sunday, January 20, and on Wednesday, January 23, before and after the first Tuesday shut-down, was greatly stimulated. Many exhibitors, now having definite information born of actual experience, do not hesitate to predict that they will do a business in six days equal to or greater than they formerly did in seven, or a business in five days equal to or greater than they formerly did in six.

This story takes on added significance in view of the decision of the government not to abandon Heatless Mondays. If exhibitors in the East can make good part if not all of their losses from Tuesday closing, then there is no logical reason why exhibitors in the West and South cannot do likewise. But regardless of where you stand, here is a real message. Read and profit.

That such a condition prevails is due in part to the fact that shrewd exhibitors in many cities sensed the possibility of focusing the public mind upon making up for a Tuesday deprivation by crowding three days' amusement into two—Monday and Wednesday. The exhibitors combined in paying for a newspaper announcement to this effect in the leading papers. There was an immediate response, as the Monday box-office figures revealed—receipts being larger than they were on last Christmas, Thanksgiving, New Year's Day and on Columbus Day in the states where this date is a public holiday.

Goldwyn makes public the results of this investigation for the benefit of exhibitors everywhere, with the added suggestion that in some communities, if there are any, where Monday attendance has not shown immediate improvement, exhibitors use their advertising media—newspapers, programs and mailing lists—as completely as possible to convert their patrons to the new order.

Chicago Censorship War Waxes Hot

Picture Interests Land Heavy Blow on Funkhouser, but Club Women Grow Vociferous and Drive Speakers Away

A VIGOROUS attack upon the present system of motion picture censorship in Chicago, under Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, and an equally vigorous defense by a group of club women reformers and friends of the Major resulted in a draw at the latest hearing before the subcommittee of the judiciary committee of the city council, which is investigating the censorship tangle here.

Attorney Michael L. Igoe, state representative, and Alderman Maypole attacked the present censorship method in no uncertain terms and drew upon themselves the wrath of a number of the club women. The verbal battle became so hot and so confused that many prominent men and women of the city, including Opie Read, president of the Press Club of Chicago, went home without getting an opportunity to be heard.

Among those who declared themselves opposed to the present system were Edward F. Dunne, former governor; George C. Sikes, publicist; Ralph C. Otis, former member of the board of education, and James G. Skinner, attorney for the Greater Chicago federation. Clarence S. Darrow, who had been called out of the city, sent a communication to the committee in which he designated the present censorship as "intolerably stupid."

The case of the Mary Pickford picture, "The Little American," was brought up and through this the hardest blow of the day was struck at the Funkhouser regime when Edward Balmer, author, showed that the original objection to the picture was not to the scene showing a disheveled woman, but to the fact that the whole production was anti-German.

Paralta-Pathe Arrangement in Operation

Bryant Washburn is the first Pathe star to start work in the Paralta studio under the contract recently arranged by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe company. His first feature in the Pacific Coast studio will be "Twenty-One," a five-reel visualization of George Randolph Chester's great novel. In it Mr. Washburn will assume a dual role, giving interpretations of diametrically opposed characters. He plays the parts of a weakling and of an athlete of great courage.

According to present plans "Twenty-One" will be released some time in the latter part of March or the early part of April.

Fox "Les Miserables" Takes

"Les Miserables," the William Farnum de luxe production, was shown at the historic Academy of Music in New York City recently, and although the seating capacity of the theater is one of the largest in the country, hundreds were turned away.

ARTCRAFT

A Modern Musketeer, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"The greatest picture Fairbanks has ever done. Is good for a repeat in any house. We ran it for eight days after it had already run two weeks in the 'Loop,' and did excellent business. We shall repeat it. If I could get pictures of this sort, I'd run them a month." —Harry C. Miller, Rose Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

A Modern Musketeer, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"This is Doug's best production and got the money, too."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Rise of Jennie Cushing, with Elsie Ferguson (Artcraft)—"Just an ordinary feature. Not worth the high rental price asked."—A. C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Reaching for the Moon, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Drew just fair business."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Reaching for the Moon, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Not as good as some of his pictures but we did a nice business on it."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Wild and Woolly, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"Filled my house on one of the worst nights this winter."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

The Silent Man, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"A very good picture which drew fairly good business and satisfied the audience very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Devil Stone, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"Good but nothing extra. My patrons expect more when Miss Farrar is starred."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Mary plays her part well but the picture did not seem to take."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Woman God Forgot, with Geraldine Farrar (Artcraft)—"Here is a big picture done in a big way. It should be classed and played as a special. To the ordinary person it will not appeal as to story but to the better class it will go great."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

BLUEBIRD

The Mysterious Mr. Tiller, with Rupert Julian (Bluebird)—"Not up to the standard. I heard no comments on this one."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Flirting With Death, with Herbert Rawlinson (Bluebird)—"Story fair. Star good. If Bluebird finds it has a good feature, it is taken from the list and you have to pay twice as much for it, which is not right."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Treason, with Allen Holubar (Bluebird)—"If you like war dramas, you will surely like this one. My patrons were well pleased. Business fair."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

A Stormy Knight, with Franklyn Farnum (Bluebird)—"A little slow but seemed to please most all of my patrons. Business good."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

My Little Boy, with Ella Hall (Bluebird)—"Fine. An exceptionally good picture. Played to good business."—A. C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Princess Virtue, with Mae Murray (Bluebird)—"Too draggy, slow action. Frenchy and over the heads of the average audience."—Carroll E. King, Johnsonia Theater, Leesburg, Ohio.

FOX

Miss U. S. A., with June Caprice (Fox)—"The people read enough about the war in the newspapers. They like to come to the show to forget it."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Scarlet Pimpernel, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A costume play that took well,—something unusual, for my patrons don't like costume plays."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Babes in the Woods, with the Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"A truly wonderful picture. A great program for the children."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

North of 53, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"A good picture. Farnum put it over."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Shadows of Her Pest (Fox-Sunshine Comedy)—"One of those spectacular, biff-bim productions. The audience laughed from start to finish. For a rough and tumble comedy, it can't be beaten."—Harry C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

The Book Agent, with George Walsh (Fox)—"A good picture. Walsh is a comer."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells, with Lloyd Hamilton (Fox)—"For a good slapstick comedy, this will keep an audience laughing throughout. Great care in handling the animals has made this a comedy much above the ordinary run. It has many special sets."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

GOLDWYN

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—"An extraordinary production. I do not think any one who sees this picture will go away displeased. The last two reels are very impressive, owing to the religious tendency. Capacity business."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Auction Block, with Rubye de Remere (Goldwyn)—"The best Goldwyn picture so far released and well worth the price paid for it. Except Polly of the Circus, it is the only one which drew us extra business."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Spreading Dawn, with Jane Cowl (Goldwyn)—"Just fair. People did not go out complimenting it, as they did Polly of the Circus and Baby Mine. It will get over and that is enough. We cannot expect a winner every week from the same producer."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

JEWEL

Sirens of the Sea, with Louise Lovely (Jewel)—"First run, one week. Good business, considering the zero weather."—David R. Blyth, Drury Lane Theater, Detroit, Mich.

Sirens of the Sea, with Louise Lovely (Jewel)—"Great. Wonderfully beautiful. Went big to a high-class audience. Classy."—Carroll E. King, Johnsonia Theater, Leesburg, Ohio.

Come Through, with Herbert Rawlinson (Jewel)—"Most remarkable melodrama on the market. Have booked a repeat."—Carroll E. King, Johnsonia Theater, Leesburg, Ohio.

KLEINE-PERFECTION

Skinner's Dress Suit, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)—"A fine production in every way, with plenty of laughs."—C. F. Hansen, Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

The Fibbers, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay)

—"A dandy light program picture that will please all classes of people."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

METRO

Under Suspicion, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"A very good picture."—Harry C. Miller, Alcazar and Boston Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

The Winding Trail, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"One week to capacity business. Better than some specials."—David R. Blyth, Drury Lane Theater, Detroit, Mich.

The Eternal Mother, with Ethel Barrymore (Metro)—"Did not please the majority. Too slow and draggy."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

The Haunted Pajamas, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"A great comedy-drama which pleased my patrons immensely."—C. F. Hansen, Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

The White Raven, with Ethel Barrymore (Metro)—"This drew the biggest house I have had since Christmas Day and is one of the best pictures I have ever shown. I have not heard of any one yet who did not like it. The music for this picture can go a long way toward putting it over. When Nan sang the 'Mad Scene' from the opera 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' I used the Victor record by Tetrezzini. There is also a chance to use the old song, 'Ben Bolt.' Any exhibitor wanting a good picture, I'd advise to book this."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

The Voice of Conscience, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"One of this pair's best."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Paradise Garden, with Harold Lockwood (Metro)—"Business good but the picture is not up to the Lockwood standard."—A. C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Bab the Fixer, with Jackie Saunders (Horkheimer-Mutual)—"Star exceptional. One of the best comedy-dramas we have had."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

Outcast, with Ann Murdock (Mutual)—"Simply wonderful—enough said to the wise ones."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

Pride and the Man, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Star good. A picture that will make them want to see more of Russell."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

Souls in Pawn, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—"Star good. Story interesting. Patrons well pleased. A drama with a slight war flavor and some spy work."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Lonesome Town, with Kolb and Dill (American-Mutual)—"Five reels of laughter. If it is comedy you want, this will make their sides hurt."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

A Game of Wits, with Gail Kane (American-Mutual)—"This picture received a number of comments and seemed to please all. Star excellent."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Snap Judgment, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"Excellent picture. Our people don't know this star's worth yet."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Who Loved Him Best? with Edna Goodrich (Mutual)—"Inferior. A few more like this and Edna Goodrich will be returning to the speaking stage."—Harry C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

PARALTA

A Man's Man, with J. Warren Kerrigan (Paralta)—"This went over very well and drew a good crowd. The star is well liked."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

PARAMOUNT

A Country Hero, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"Fatty's best yet. Doesn't slow up in the second reel as his others did. Boost it big."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Miss Clark is my biggest drawing card. She draws a crowd in any kind of weather."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Fair Barbarian, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Very good. Miss Martin is becoming very popular here."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Fair Barbarian, with Vivian Martin (Paraomunt)—"Good picture but this star does not draw."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The World For Sale (J. Stuart Blackton-Paramount)—"A real production but a little too deep for the average person."—Harry C. Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"The poorest picture Miss Martin has made. Business fair."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Hashimura Togo, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"A good picture which will be enjoyed more by those familiar with the original stories."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Lost and Won, with Marie Doro (Paramount)—"A good picture to a small crowd. Owing to the weather

I haven't been able to run a Paramount picture on the day advertised for three weeks."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

His Sweetheart, with George Beban (Paramount)—"An excellent picture, the best one this month. Everyone spoke highly of this. You laughed and cried with the star."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

On the Level, with Fannie Ward (Paramount)—"A little rough but Miss Ward never fails to register."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

The Land of Promise, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"Six reels. Rather slow in getting started. The star draws fairly well. Just an average program feature and our patrons could not see why we showed it at advanced prices."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Tom Sawyer, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A good box-office attraction. You will find this will draw your patrons out when you run it, as everyone is familiar with the Mark Twain story. It is a nice, pleasing picture and the star does well in the role of Tom."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Son of His Father, with Charles Ray (Paramount)—"A very good picture. Will please the majority. Plenty of action, good story and some comedy."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Zaza, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"Gave fair satisfaction to a fair house. Picture is too old but in fine condition."—C. F. Hansen, Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Snow White, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"This was a repeat to capacity business. Miss Clark's greatest child picture."—Carroll E. King, Johnsonia Theater, Leesburg, Ohio.

UNIVERSAL

Universal Screen Magazine (Universal)—"These make fine fillers and will make better boosters for your house."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

SELECT

The Moth, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"Star popular. A splendid picture in every way."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

The Moth, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"Just a fair picture."—A. C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Woman and Wife, with Alice Brady (Select)—"A very good picture. The star's drawing power is a little above fair. There seems no reason why we should pay more for her pictures now than before. While Miss Brady is a very clever girl, she is not popular enough to be classed among the best. This drew good business on a week's run but the cost of the picture offset this business. Five, six and seven hundred dollar pictures in my opinion are a thing of the past if an exhibitor expects to stay in business. We could formerly book this star at fifty dollars a day or three hundred on a week's run. Now it costs us from five to seven hundred a week. What's the answer?"—Harry Miller, Rose Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Ghosts of Yesterday, with Norma Talmadge (Select)—"Very good, well liked by our patrons."—W. C. Lamoreaux, Lakeside Theater, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

TRIANGLE

The Law's Outlaw, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"Our patrons did not care for this. Below Triangle average."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Stage Struck, with Dorothy Gish (Triangle)—"Film in fair condition. Photography good. But nobody was pleased."—J. Walton, Auditorium Theater, Lockwood, Mo.

The Sawdust Ring, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"A pleasing kid picture but the settings are cheap."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Between Men, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"My patrons were disappointed in this."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Hell's Hinges, with W. S. Hart (Triangle)—"An excellent picture which pleased a good crowd. I doubt if Hart ever made a better picture. Drew better than The Disciple."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Flying Colors, with William Desmond (Triangle) "A lively comedy drama that pleased the women especially. A small crowd on account of extremely cold weather."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Mountain Dew, with Margery Wilson (Triangle)—"Although it is the same old moonshine story, it pleased a good crowd. The darky got several laughs."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

The Bond of Fear, with Belle Bennett and Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"A slow western picture. The first and last reels were good but the rest dragged."—Bert Norton, Kozy Theater, Eureka, Ill.

Seeking Happiness, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Very good. Star beautiful. Made a decided hit here."—. F. Hansen, Strand Theater, Warren, Minn.

Seeking Happiness, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Story good. Star excellent. She is becoming popular and brings good business."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Girl, Glory, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Story fair. Star very good. Patrons well pleased. Heard many favorable comments."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Little Brother, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"Star very good. Patrons more than pleased. Business good in spite of strong opposition."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

Paddy O'Hara, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"Star great. Plot good. This picture received many a comment. Patrons more than pleased."—S. A. Campbell, Electric Theater, Bixby, Okla.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This is one town where Fairbanks won't draw. Who can tell me why? Each picture has pulled less than the one before. I don't consider this as good as The Lamb."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

The Pinch Hitter, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"Great. This didn't draw a very big crowd on account of cold weather but it is a picture that everyone enjoyed."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Ky.

Fighting Back, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"An average picture. It should please the majority."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Wooden Shoes, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"Different, so it will entertain."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Up or Down, with George Hernandez (Triangle)—"An ordinary picture. For lighter entertaining and some melodrama, it will get by."—Leo Peterson, Iris Theater, Belle Fourche, S. D.

Betty Takes a Hand, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)—"Miss Thomas has the greatest drawing power of any star in comedy dramas. A fine picture."—Carroll E. King, Johnsonia Theater, Leesburg, Ohio.

VITAGRAPH

I Will Repay, with Corinne Griffith (Vitagraph)—"An extra good picture. Business good."—A. C. Baldwin, Scenic Theater, Keene, N. H.

Money Magic, with Edith Story (Vitagraph)—"The poorest offering for several months. Story fair. Film in wretched condition. Parts of film and a number of subtitles entirely missing. It is no wonder distributors demand advance payments and deposits when such service is imposed upon an exhibitor."—W. A. Peterson, Scenic Theater, Mt. Vernon, S. D.

God's Country and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"A great picture. I played this at double admission prices and had no kicks at all. Good business in rain. Print in good condition."—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

WORLD

Rasputin, the Black Monk, with Montague Love (World)—"A great picture which played to great business in the worst of weather."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Divine Sacrifice, with Kitty Gordon (World)—"Miss Gordon seems to be slipping because several of her pictures have not been up to standard. She does not draw now. This picture is only fair."—Harry Miller, Boston and Alcazar Theaters, Chicago.—Downtown houses.

SERIALS AND SERIES

Vengeance and the Woman, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"The first chapter was very exciting and proved a good box office attraction."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"For a picture that does not drag and that is full of big thrills and hair-raising stunts, this serial is about the best we have shown. The children would not miss a Saturday on it. The one complaint we have is that we experienced a delay almost every Saturday at the Chicago Vitagraph office shipping room in getting our film. Many a Saturday matinee was late through this fault. One Saturday we did not receive it at all."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Neglected Wife, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—"Serial fine. Gets better with each episode."—J. Walton, Auditorium Theater, Lockwood, Mo.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

The Slave, with Billy West (Standard)—"These comedies resemble Chaplin comedies and this fellow has Charlie's tricks all polished up and pulls them off almost as well as the original star. As new Chaplin comedies are scarce, try a few of these."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Daughter of Destiny, with Mme. Petrova (Petrova)—"A wonderful picture. A timely story, well produced and a good cast. My patrons liked it."—D. H. Bestor, Court Theater, Kankakee, Ill.

The Cold Deck, with W. S. Hart (Doll-Van)—"I think this is Hart's best yet."—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Ne'er Do Well, with Kathlyn Williams (Selig)—"This is an exceptionally good feature and drew well at advanced prices and on a very cold night."—John D. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

Exposition to Be Held October 5 to 13

Through the courtesy of E. P. V. Ritter, president of the company which operates the Grand Central Palace, New York City, arrangements have been perfected to hold the National Motion Picture Exposition October 5 to 13.

The exposition, under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was originally scheduled for February 2 to 10.

It was postponed because of the confusion brought about by the temporary closing of many industries, the movement to conserve heat and light, and also in view of the fuel and transportation conditions and the many other complications resulting from the war.

When the "Legit" House Puts Up a Screen

SINCE the moving of theatrical scenery and props demands car space—to say nothing of the moving of player companies—the government has registered temporary disapproval of that traffic, favoring more the transportation of food and fuel. It is an ill wind that does not blow good to some part of the motion picture industry, and in this emergency the film men were quick to sign up the "legit" houses for short term service. As a result some houses are running pictures for the first time, and quite a few are renewing old and almost forgotten acquaintance with them.

One of the theatrical weeklies quotes a film manufacturer to the effect that "If the legitimate houses undertake to present the best class of films during this crisis there is no reason why they cannot show a handsome profit at the end of the season. The public would prefer to see films exhibited in a comfortable well-ventilated, roomy place than in a hastily improvised building in which the ventilation is bad and the space cramped."

While the inference that picture theaters are ordinarily cramped for room, badly ventilated and hastily improvised will not be relished by the film fraternity, the prediction that "legitimate" houses will make a "handsome profit" from showing pictures is interesting. If they do, it will be more than they have made out of their own business for some time. It will also be more than the average experienced picture exhibitor makes.

Handsome profits at the end of the season are, indeed, so desirable in the theatrical business nowadays that it will fail to surprise us if some of the "legit" houses keep their screens and booths after the railroads begin again to solicit theatrical traffic.

The prospect that even a small percentage of the dramatic houses might decide to swing over permanently to pictures, as a result of their enforced experiment, will not be regarded with joy by the established exhibitors. The influx of new and competent competition, while it swells the receipts and volume and general prosperity of the film industry, carries a threat that the routine of local patronage may be expensively disturbed and diverted. We have approached so near to the theater saturation point, in other words, that every new picture show threatens to draw its patrons from the older shows of the vicinity.

The swinging over of any "legitimate" or vaudeville house to pictures, however, throws another group of patrons on the market. Those who do not stick to their accustomed house after the change will shift to some other neighboring house. The number of patrons per house remains the same. The number of picture fans is actually increased, because some who thought they preferred the speaking stage are forced to accept the screen—and, of course, find they like it just as well or better. Some of them will stick to the pictures even after the stage house goes back to its business.

In the end the regular exhibitors who compete with it actually benefit when a stage house puts up a temporary screen.

The Waning of Censorship

CHICAGO newspapers, and other newspapers which find cause for editorial comment in Chicago conditions, have grasped the fact that the Windy City's censorship is beginning to wax expensive. The reason for the expense account is that film men have not lately been content to accept unprotested the confiscatory rulings of an irresponsible, and therefore arrogant and arbitrary censor. They have taken their grievances to the proper place for responsible decision—the courts. The result is that, just as an example, for two days in one court city officials whose salaries totaled nearly fifty thousand dollars were engaged in fighting a film which had been shown nearly everywhere else in the United States. Under such conditions, with the weight of circumstances against them, the Chicago censors naturally have not fared so well in the courts as they might. Their loss of prestige has only served to emphasize the general wastefullness and absurbity of the censor system.

It speaks well for the sanity of our republic that there are only a few censor spots upon its current record. They are so few and so circumscribed in their operations that our readers in the other ninety-odd per cent of the country wonder why we are so vehement in our denunciation of censorship.

It is because censorship is a principle, a dangerous, illogical, autocratic, un-American principle, that we think it worthy of all the antagonistic force that a national trade magazine can exert or influence against it.

In Chicago, where censorship, or at least its most vicious form—one man censorship—is literally on trial for its life, we have a comforting array of public spirited citizens who have no hesitancy in opposing it. Therefore we are confident that the days of Chicago's censorial autocrat are numbered. When the inevitable end comes we can hold up a finger like Monte Cristo, exclaim "One!" and go after the others.

"Sell at Home"

FOR reasons why all those who have something to sell should concentrate in their home territory, consult the Chicago Tribune. That enterprising newspaper carried a full page in display last Sunday, captioned "Sell at Home." We give the Tribune credit for the idea, which seems to be a new complement to the old slogan "Patronize home industry."

This is the first move on the part of a newspaper to take advantage of the zone postal rate which Congress has imposed upon national periodicals; a law which furthers the Sell at Home idea by dividing the country into neat and definite parcels of local sales prospects. The newspaper says "Sell at Home" because it circulates at home, and so figures it has the better of those periodicals which still regard the United States as a unit, and not as a collection of adjoining trade circles.

The newspaper bases the appeal of its new idea on the temporary condition that more distant markets are cut off by the collapse of transportation—which is a poor foundation for the establishment of new business methods; and on the permanent condition that fifteen million prosperous people, the most desirable market in the world, inhabit the five states nearest Chicago—which is a fact worthy the consideration of any business man, whether he be in Chicago, New York or Los Angeles.

A circle with a radius of four hundred miles would include all the territory named in this argument, and a whole lot more. Everybody knows that Chicago is the business center of the country; that most of the country's population and buying power is included in Chicago's service territory.

But that very fact, in all its force and significance, makes the "Sell at Home" principle impossible of concentrated application. No one city, not even Chicago, could supply all the demands of Chicago's tributary territory. The seven thousand exhibitors within easy reach of Chicago, for example, must depend to some extent upon films manufactured in California and distributed from New York. This would still be true to a certain extent even if Chicago should become the film metropolis.

Chicago is the great central market for all goods of course. But confining its purchases to goods made there, and limiting the sale of those goods to its territory, would immediately set up a local trade circle that would be destructive in principle to the commercial unity of the United States.

Lasky Predicts Expansion Out West

SAYS COAL FAMINES IN THE EAST ARE DRIVING PRODUCERS TO CALIFORNIA

GREAT expansion of motion picture interests in California is predicted by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation.

Mr. Lasky upon his arrival in Los Angeles a few days ago for a stay of two months at the Famous Players' studio there, declared that coal famines such as the East has experienced in the last two years and particularly the one from which this section is just emerging, are compelling producers to depend more on California, with the result that plans now are under consideration that will give the sunny western state a firmer grip than ever on the trade.

Cites Own Company

"The coal famine and the cold weather in the East is going to do much toward bringing more producing companies to California," Mr. Lasky said. "Take our own companies, for example. We were forced to shut down our New Jersey studios owing to a lack of coal and light and rented every available studio in New York City. But even in New York we had to work under a handicap and are planning to move some of our organizations out here.

"Nearly everywhere in the East where there is a coal famine the managers of the motion picture theaters have thrown open the doors of their houses as sleeping places for those without coal," the film magnate added. "It is a strange sight to see people laden with blankets entering the theater and there preparing to spend the night. They sleep on the floors of the boxes, between the seats and in the aisles. The theater manager keeps a man on guard to watch over them and while in many places it is necessary to shut off the heat, the theater is far more comfortable for the people than it is in their homes.

Praises Patriotism In Trade

"The generosity of the theater owners is just another illustration of how the industry is helping win the war. A big factor in the sale of Liberty bonds, the Red Cross drives and in helping recruit men for the service, the industry is eager to do more and is doing it whenever the opportunity is presented as illustrated by the public spiritedness of the owners in sheltering men, women and children from the cold.

"What with the cold weather, the coal famine, and the war, the condition of the industry throughout the country has not been of the best, but by spring we expect affairs to adjust themselves.

"We recently held a meeting of our exchange managers from all parts of the country and planned our campaign for next year. The managers all reported the outlook as very rosy, although a little in the future.

"Out national advertising campaign is proving very popular with both the exhibitors and the public, and we have outlined many new things for the advancement of the photodramatic.

"We are going to hold these conferences twice a year from now on so as to keep our productions absolutely along the lines of public taste."

Motion picture screens continue their "Help Win the War" work. Their present mission particularly is to aid in making a complete success of the campaign to conserve food. Herbert C. Hoover, national food administrator, asks that all releases for the next three weeks carry thirty-foot trailers displaying slogans as follows:

"Use only Victory Bread, so that our boys at the front may be maintained. It is a small thing they ask of you as partial recompense for the much you ask of them.

"Observe Tuesday as a meatless day, and one meatless meal every day.

"Remember, children must have whole milk. Use all of the milk; waste no part of it.

"Observe Mondays and Wednesdays as wheatless days, and one wheatless meal every day.

"Observe Tuesdays and Saturdays as porkless days, and every day a fat and sugar saving day: use fruits, vegetables and potatoes abundantly.

"Hoarding food in your household is both selfish and unnecessary: the government is protecting the food supply of the people."

Mr. Lasky turned to the stars of his company.

"Wallace Reid, who went East to do a picture, will shortly return to California to finish it, as owing to the lack of light, it is impossible to get the results we require," he said. "A little later Elsie Ferguson and Billie Burke will come West.

"We have signed John Emerson and Anita Loos to produce pictures. They will start work in May in New York with their own organization. In the meantime this clever duo is at work getting ready the stories for Fred Stone, the noted comedian, who is coming to California in May. Donald Crisp, who is now directing Wallace Reid in the east, has signed a new contract with our organization and will direct the Fred Stone productions.

"Joseph Kaufman, who has been so successful as the director of Miss Pauline Frederick, is coming out here to handle one of our Western companies."

Army to See "Unbeliever"

Marguerite Courtot has found an effective expression of her delicate nature in the creation of Virginia Harbrook in Thomas A. Edison's superfeature, "The Unbeliever." The production is based on Mary Shipman Andrews' war novelette, "The Three Things." It gives Miss Courtot an unusual opportunity as a Belgian refugee.

A brave little aristocrat, cradled in refinement, is suddenly humbled to vagabondage when the Germans outrage Belgian neutrality. She loses her people to the Mailed Fist and barely escapes sacrificing herself to Prussian lust. Yet throughout the turmoil of disaster, the suffering, the humiliation, there shines forth the ever-increasing strength of nobility of her heroic figure.

Raymond McKee plays the spirited young marine private who finally transplants the Belgian flower to the more fortunate sun of America, and Miss Courtot makes her inevitable surrender a victory of love and gratitude.

The Y. M. C. A. has arranged to show "The Unbeliever" in the training camps of America and also at the Y. M. C. A. stations in France.

"Calvary Alley" Under Way

The production of "Calvary Alley," Ann Pennington's next picture for the Paramount program, is well under way at the Famous Players-Lasky studios in New York.

The story is of the slums and contains many types. Alice Hegan Rice, the author of the book, displayed a keen knowledge of the life of the characters she portrayed and they have been faithfully brought into being.

As Nance Molloy, Miss Pennington is introduced as a typical "alley rat," just as ready to plunge into a rough and tumble fight as she is to help take care of the neighbor's baby. Her champion, Dan Lewis, is played by John Hines.

"Mum's the Word" is the title given the second Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon.

Death Takes Two Prominent Men

Leander Richardson of World Films and Joseph Kaufman, Famous Players-Lasky Director, Succumb Few Hours Apart

THE deaths of two men prominent in the film industry, Leander Richardson of the World Film Corporation, and Joseph Kaufman, Famous Players-Lasky director, occurred within a few hours of each other, both victims of pneumonia and both after an illness of little more than a week.

Mr. Richardson died Saturday morning at his home, 130 West Forty-seventh street, New York City, at the age of sixty-two years. For the last three years he had been publicity director and manager of the World Film Corporation. He had been prominently concerned with theatricals for the greater part of his career.

He was born in Cincinnati, and was the son of Albert Dean Richardson, a prominent journalist, later editor of the New York Tribune. On this paper Richardson began his journalistic career. He became a general writer and dramatic critic for several metropolitan newspapers and was later on the staff of various dramatic publications.

He is the author of many plays and novels in addition to his newspaper articles and the large amount of publicity which he wrote for the various theatrical stars and companies by whom he was employed. Arrangements for the funeral were made by William A. Brady and the World Film Corporation.

Joseph Kaufman died Friday night at the Polyclinic Hospital, New York City, after an illness of about ten days. His death was due to pneumonia, which he contracted while directing the Paramount play, "Let's Get a Divorce," starring Billie Burke. Mr. Kaufman was thirty-five years old. He was born in Russia, but came to America when young. He is survived by his widow, Ethel Clayton, star of many pictures on the World program.

Among the pictures which Mr. Kaufman directed were "The Song of Songs," starring Elsie Ferguson, released this week; "Broadway Jones," which introduced George M. Cohan to the screen; "The Amazons," with Marguerite Clark, and other features starring Clara Kimball Young and Pauline Frederick. Mr. Kaufman was a member of the Lambs' Club and was a prominent director of the Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Two Ince Films This Month

During February two Thomas H. Ince productions will be released under the Paramount trade-mark. These subjects will present as stars Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, the popular actresses whose achievements have placed them among the foremost in the eyes of the fans.

The Dorothy Dalton vehicle is "Flare-Up Sal," by J. G. Hawks. The story is described elsewhere in this issue.

Enid Bennett's new subject is "The Keys of the Righteous," a stirring play of particular dramatic depth in which the charming little star appears in a character unlike anything in which she has appeared before. Jerome Storm, whose recent work has attracted no little attention, directed Miss Bennett in this film under Mr. Ince's personal supervision.

The story of "The Keys of the Righteous" is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, the popular motion picture author, and offers one of his most notable accomplishments, it is said.

Supporting Miss Bennett is an exceptional cast including Earl Rodney, George Nichols, Joseph Swickard, Carl Forms, Gertrude Claire, Lydia Knott and Melbourne MacDowell. The film will be released February 18.

A thrilling moment in "A Woman Between Friends," a Vitagraph Blue-Ribbon feature, starring Alice Joyce and Mark MacDermott.

New York Adopts Sales Plan

The following has been received by Motography from promoters of the Manufacturer to Exhibitor Direct plan:

"At a meeting of the New York Local No. 1, of the M. P. E. L., the Manufacturer to Exhibitor Direct plan, which was approved by the Allied Exhibitors' convention in Washington in December, was presented. I. M. Chadwick, Joseph A. Golden, Harry Rapf, Louis L. Levine and Charles C. Pettijohn, presented the details for the consideration of seventy-five exhibitors who were present.

"A motion was made and unanimously carried to put the plan into immediate effect in New York City and a committee was appointed by President Manheimer to secure signatures necessary to guarantee New York City's minimum quota.

"Quotas now have been guaranteed under this plan for sixteen states and quotas are now organizing to adopt the plan for sixteen other states, New York City and Brooklyn.

"Exhibitors' booking units are springing up in all parts of the United States for the purpose of marketing film under this plan. The seven independent producers engaged in this enterprise are receiving many inquiries and great encouragement from exhibitors in every mail."

Nineteen Fox Directors Now

When Edmund Lawrence joined the staff of directors of the Fox Film corporation, it brought the total number of directors up to nineteen. Two others, Edward J. Le Saint and Oscar A. C. Lund, are recent additions. Mr. Lawrence is directing Virginia Pearson in a new war play. Mr. Le Saint is working on the Pacific coast and Mr. Lund is in New Orleans taking scenes of Peggy Hyland's first picture for Fox.

U. S. Perfects Film Organization

TWELVE NEW BUREAUS ARE FORMED TO DISTRIBUTE WAR PICTURES

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, that the division of films has established twelve new film distributing bureaus during the last thirty days, making a total of sixteen.

The new bureaus cover the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Connecticut, Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, Montana, Utah, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Missouri.

Exhibitors who have been perplexed over how to get official pictures of America's war activities will find, it is believed, all of their questions answered in the story presented herewith. Should there still be doubt, however, MOTOGRAPHY stands ready to furnish the information upon request.

New York Organization

The most important of these bureaus is the New York bureau, which was created by the New York State Council of Defense at a meeting presided over by Governor Whitman. A motion picture committee was named to consist of J. Hamblen Sears, chairman; Robert A. MacAlarney and Lewis G. Kaufman, the last named representing the Mayor's committee on national defense.

This new committee will absorb the functions of the former motion picture bureau of the mayor's committee and will expand the distribution of the government's films to embrace the entire state.

The committee has been granted headquarters in the state arsenal at Thirty-fifth street and Seventh avenue. Ample room has been furnished. So fast has the division of films of the committee on public information been working at Washington that 100,000 feet of film will be ready for release by the committee early next week. In fact, much of the film is now waiting the action of the new committee.

Lewis G. Kaufman, who will serve on the state committee through his designation by the mayor's committee, is president of the Chatham-Phoenix National Bank. J. Hamblen Sears, chairman of the bureau, is a leading business man, and Robert MacAlarney, third member of the committee, is scenario editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Bureau in Pennsylvania

In Pennsylvania the new bureau has been created with Edgar S. McKaig of the publicity bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce as chairman. This bureau was established by joint action of the Pennsylvania Committee on Public Safety and the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. A council composed of Pennsylvania's foremost film distributors and exhibitors is being organized to supervise exhibitions of the films.

In Indiana George Ade, the noted author, has organized a motion picture bureau for the state council of defense, placing Richard Lieber of Indianapolis, a practical film man, in charge of the distribution.

In Connecticut the distribution of the government's films has been put effectively under way by W. D. Ascough, manager of the Palace Theater at Hartford, who was selected by the state council of defense. Mr. Ascough and his committee now have two shows running daily, featuring the official films.

The division of films is in charge of Louis W. Mack as director and has charge of the taking and distribution of motion pictures intended to keep the country informed as to the progress of the war. Its pictures are being taken under the direction of the photographic division of the Signal Corps and are distributed through state councils of defense, patriotic societies and organization and with the full support and co-operation of the motion picture industry of the nation, which has aided the government in every possible way. Its films are being exhibited both at home and in Europe.

Niebuhr Helps Organization

The New York, Pennsylvania and other eastern bureaus were perfected largely through the efforts of W. F. Niebuhr, associate director of the government's film department, who has been working constantly with the state defense councils and war boards on distribution plans.

The western states are being whipped into shape by Charles P. Watson, who is now on the Pacific coast, organizing offices at Portland.

Niebuhr Outlines Plans

Mr. Niebuhr in an interview said:

"There has been little difficulty in establishing effective distribution from state headquarters. The leading exhibitors and distributors in the various states have shown an excellent spirit in helping the government, and in most states our distribution is now being handled by film experts who have added to their knowledge of the game a genuine spirit of patriotic enthusiasm.

"Thus, in a number of states, the state bureaus are now running from three to seven exhibitions per day each in the best theaters. In Connecticut alone the films are being shown to 10,000 and more people a day.

"The larger problem—that of co-ordinating the methods of all these state bureaus—is now being met. That is a problem which requires the counsel of the nation's greatest motion picture distributors. We have not approached them sooner because it would have been presumptuous to invoke their time and services for the government before there was any definite service under way. Manifestly, people do not like to be called upon to help and then find that there is nothing but plans and talk, or, at best, some purely routine work to be done.

Seek Help of Leaders

"There had to be a solid foundation first. There had to be plenty of material and a definite plan of action. Now that a substantial and far-reaching program has been put under way, we feel ourselves privileged to approach the leaders of the industry and ask them, in the name of the government, for their hearty co-operation.

"This means that we shall ask the foremost distributors in the country to assist the division in formulating the most effective policies of distribution and exhibition and that we shall ask the best film editors to assist in preparing the many new official features.

"Louis Mack, director of our division, who now spends all his time at Washington co-ordinating the production, has already put three large features under way, which are being produced under the direction of Edwin F. Hollywood, Thomas Ince, J. Parker Reed, Jr., and others. In the meantime the scenario staff, headed by Dr. George Pierce Baker, is at the service of all producers to help them work out scenarios of plays of a patriotic nature.

Strong Support Urged

"The start thus made in the past sixty days gives promise of putting the motion picture screen well in front as a purveyor of war intelligence. Our new department has had no quarrels of any sort with the motion picture industry or any part thereof. We are ready to lay our cards on the table before the leaders of the industry and ask their tolerant criticism and active support. That way only can the desired end be achieved."

A. A. Ashley, former New England sales manager for Paramount, has been sworn in as assistant to Mr. Mebahr. He will organize the government distribution in Michigan, Ohio and other states in the Middle West.

Two scenes from the Fox production, "The Girl With the Champagne Eyes," starring Jewel Carmen.

Fox Completes New Film for "Baby Grand" Stars

A new Standard picture in which Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox "Baby Grand" stars, are headliners, has been completed. Its release date will be announced soon.

The new picture is a comedy drama written by Kenean Buel, who also directed the picture and is said to have provided the little Lees with an excellent vehicle in which to display their talents as funmakers.

In brief the story concerns two foundlings trailing their daddy who deserted their mother and them. Despite most distressing surroundings of their early life spent in the slums of a big city, in asylums for foundlings, and as waifs in a military camp, the daddyless youngsters manage to get lots of fun out of life and the pranks for which they are responsible keep everybody around them guessing, but in good humor.

The colonel commanding the camp displays especial interest in them and is rewarded by finally discovering that they are his own grandchildren. They reward him with "oodles" of child love and also uncover a spy (their father) who is the colonel's guest.

There is a laugh in every foot of the film and it is claimed that as funmakers their work will eclipse even "Two Little Imps" and "Troublemakers" in which they scored big successes.

Walthall to Take Rest

On the completion of the Paralta play, "Hoops of Steel," now being produced under the direction of Rex Ingram, Henry Walthall, the star, will leave for a five week's vacation on his ranch near Los Angeles. On his return it is expected he will commence production on an original story to be supplied by Monte M. Katterjohn, Paralta staff author. His role is this production, it is stated, will give Walthall opportunity for a characterization such as those in which he gained his greatest success under D. W. Griffith, in the old days of the Biograph.

The Fan's Appeal

By Ruth Turner

Please, Mr. Exhibitor, show something cheerful!
After a day in the school-room or shop,
We don't want any films for the tearful;
Only good humor should rise to the top.

"Tortures of Silence" are bad for the liver;
"A Crooked Romance" is not to our taste.
We'd rather see you smash up a flivver.
Films "Under False Colors" are only a waste.
"The Candy Girl" just suited us right,
Daddy and Jane and Mother, too,
All enjoyed it the other night;
The family voted it good and true.

"The Price of Folly" to us was misspent;
We never knew of a "Hidden Hand,"
But "Picturesque Brittany" brightens up Lent,
And "Scenes in the Desert" give us sand.
"The Other Woman" brought sobs in the dark,
Nor was "The Bar Sinister" any delight,
But "The Seven Swans," with Marguerite Clark,
Gave us an evening of laughter and light.

So please, Mr. Picture Man, drive gloom away;
Give to us evenings of laughter and mirth,
Stirring scenes and good comedies with us will stay
And help dispel misery from all the earth.

Hart's Famous Hat to Be Sold for the Red Cross

William S. Hart, the noted Artcraft star, no longer has the sombrero so familiar to his admirers the country over—the hat he has worn in nearly every one of his many screen successes.

Hart, in a spirit of patriotism, has donated the hat to the Red Cross. On the crown, in the handwriting of the famous actor, is its history, together with Hart's autograph.

It is the intention of the Red Cross to have the hat autographed by every great leader in the world war, following which it will be sold to the highest bidder.

The signatures of President Wilson, Secretary of State Lansing, Secretary of War Baker, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Food Commissioner Hoover and others instrumental in conducting America's interests in the war, will be obtained at Washington. This done, the hat will be sent to London for the signatures of King George, Lloyd-George, Asquith, Lord Northcliffe and others instrumental in carrying on Great Britain's participation in the struggle.

King Albert of Belgium and his military and diplomatic staff also will be requested for their signatures. Then the hat will go to France for the autographs of President Poincare and his aides.

On the Western battle front the autographs of Generals Pershing, Haig, Byng, Joffre and others prominent in military leadership will be placed on the sombrero, following which it will be sent to Italy for the signatures of King Victor, his ministry and military commanders.

Thomas H. Ince, producer of the William S. Hart pictures, has already signed a check for one thousand dollars as a first bid for the hat.

The hat will start on its long journey in a week or so. It is not expected back for six months.

Hoffman Sees Era of Efficiency

FILMS MAY BE FEWER, BUT MORE MONEY WILL BE MADE, HE PREDICTS

A STATEMENT made in the New YORK World by Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures of New York City, that the war is affecting the quantity of made products warrants scrutiny by those in the industry who are anxious to preserve its stability.

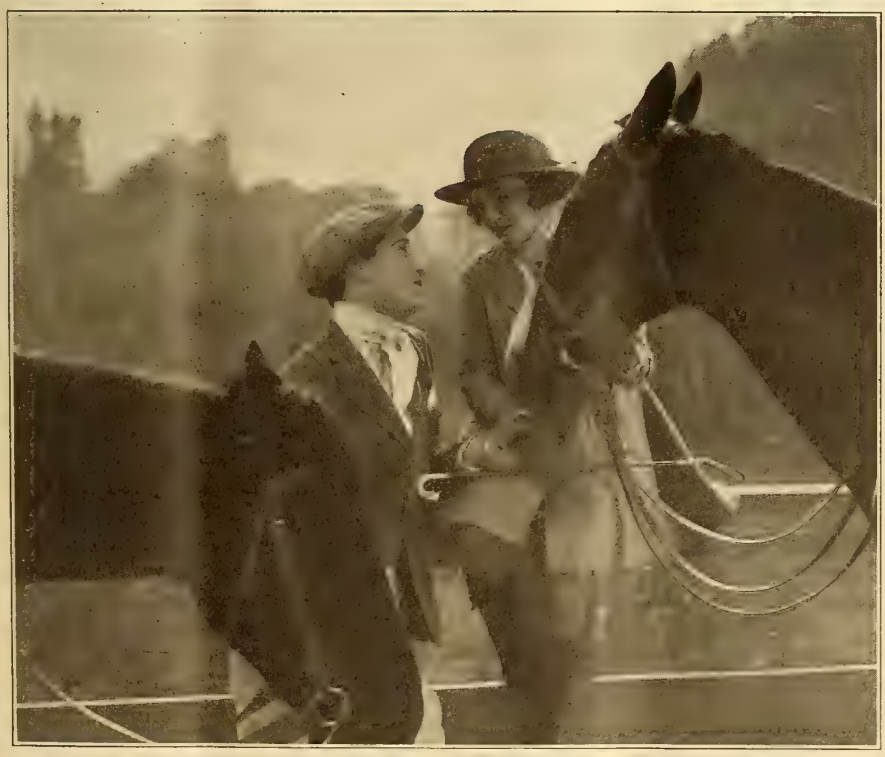
M. H. Hoffman, of Foursquare Pictures, sees in the statistics furnished by Mr. Brenton evidence of the utmost value to producers, distributors and exhibitors. Mr. Hoffman does not believe there should be any anxiety over the fact that the output decreased in 1917; on the contrary, it is his opinion that the reduced number of pictures, which will doubtless prevail in 1918, will have the effect of increasing the quality.

Cloud has Silver Lining

"What may appear at first glance to be a contraction of business with respect to all in the industry must prove, upon thoughtful examination, to be a cloud having a silver lining," he said. "I predict there will ensue a degree of watchfulness and care onthe part of both the producers and distributors which will put them in a far stronger position at the close of 1918 than they now hold.

"The constructive business men in the industry are now fully awake. They recognize the need for the elimination of waste; for tightening the loose portions of their respective machines to the end that they shall develop the utmost efficiency of which each machine is capable.

Extravagance is Boomed



"The producer of intelligence will immediately select his stories with greater caution than ever before. He next will have made the most practicable scenario possible, so there will be no last-minute changes to be made while a company is being paid for doing nothing. Then, a carefully laid out schedule of costs will be prepared and the actual work done in a manner permitting no extravagance or loss of time or materials.

"I do not say that ALL producers will follow such a course; but I do contend that those who consider the interests of the distributor and exhibitor will do so.

Efficiency is Watchiug

"The distributor also will practice efficiency through the medium of economy insofar as this is possible. Unjustifiable overhead which long ago should have been thrown out will now be squelched as quickly as possible—by the distributor who has at heart his own best interests and those of his exhibitor-customers.

"In point of fact, the painstaking producer and distributor who proceeds wisely doubtless will show a greater net profit at the end of the current year—even though he does a smaller volume of business."

Billy Rhodes in the Mutual-Strand comedy, "Three Times and Out."

New Film Pleases Katterjohn

In writing "Carmen of the Klondike," another of Monte M. Katterjohn's big Alaskan stories, the author claims he has succeeded in going himself one better, the explanation being that Katterjohn also created the tremendously successful "Flame of the Yukon."

The bogey that all writers fear—their ability to eclipse a former work—has been absolutely dispelled by Katterjohn's newest work, it is said, and Robert Brunton, Paralta's manager of production, claims "Carmen of the Klondike" as visualized by Reginald Barker will stand for many months to come as the last work in big virile picture dramas.

"When requested to try writing another story I hesitated about tackling the job," says Katterjohn, "because I wondered if the success of "The Flame," as other asserted, was one of those lucky accidents that just happen in the careers of some men. Now that I have watched 'Carmen' in the studio projecting room a dozen or more times, I wonder why I was nervous when I commenced writing the synopsis.

"My complete satisfaction with 'Carmen' as it now stands is not due to any lucky accident or to any superior supervision. Every scene, incident and title appears in the picture as I intended it. My contention for 'direct action continuity' as a new force in construction is also proved. As was the case with 'The Flame,' this new Alaskan story will make a big star bigger."

Gaumont Plans to Expand

Following announcement that the Gaumont Company's news service soon will be released under a new arrangement which will make it more valuable to exhibitors, it is reported that the company is planning to increase its general activities in the United States greatly.

Far from believing that the war will have a harmful effect upon motion pictures, the Gaumont Company is optimistic in believing that the greatest year the industry has ever known is due in 1918.

In France and England, countries which bear the brunt of the war, the Gaumont Company is not only actively engaged in producing, but is running its own exchanges and theaters.

Fight to "K. O." in "The Beloved Traitor"

Hero and Villain in Goldwyn Picture Starring Mae Marsh Wreck Studio in "Knock Down and Drag Out" Affair

A REAL "knock down and drag out" fight—the sort of a battle that makes film fans sit up and gasp, is soon to be seen in "The Beloved Traitor," Goldwyn's picturization of Frank L. Packard's novel by that name in which Mae Marsh is starred.

The fight has a logical place. It is not dragged in merely to exploit the prowess of the actors, nor to give an imaginary "punch" to the story as a whole. It means something.

The situation is an interesting one. The hero has met with his first success as a sculptor in the city and has forgotten his country sweetheart, left behind in a fishing village. He is in the toils of a society girl vampire. Undecided as to which of two men to choose, she keeps the fisherman-sculptor dangling, tormenting him with her pretended preference for the other man, a society politician.

These two come to a studio celebration to inspect a statue for which the sculptor has just won a prize. Also comes the village girl (Mae Marsh) who has heard of her sweetheart's indiscretions. She seeks to turn him from the wrong road. Seen by the ribald crowd, the girl is thought to be the sculptor's secret model for the figure of "The Beacon," which is seen to be the counterpart of the girl from the fishing village. The crowd jeers at her and jests at her pretended innocence.

Here the sculptor comes upon the scene, followed by the society girl and her other suitor. They add their scoffing remarks to the chorus, while the erstwhile fisherman protects the frightened girl and seeks to explain.

Stung by a coarse jest of the other men, he springs upon the latter and the fight ensues.

Desperately, furiously, the two powerful men struggle, the bystanders looking on in horror. Finally the climax comes when one of the combatants is knocked out. Surrounding him is the wreckage of the studio—furniture, statuary and a dozen odds and ends having been demolished.

The difficulty, and the point from the producer's standpoint in photographing this episode, was in not having been able to rehearse the scene. Only the positions of the actors could be indicated and the general significance of the conflict imparted to them.

All else was left to chance, with the possibility of having to retake the scene and, what was more, rebuild the setting. How far director and players succeeded in enacting this difficult bit of screen drama without mishap and with a maximum of grim realism may be seen in the last reel of the film.

Reid in Role of Sleuth

Wallace Reid, Paramount star, who has gone to New York from California to work on a new Paramount production, will begin activities at the Famous Players' studio shortly on a new type of story in which he will play a detective hero.

The picture has been adapted from the book, "Marcell Levignet," by Elwyn Barron, the scenario for which has been made by Margaret Turnbull. The story has a new twist to the "crook punch" melodramatic situation, and Mr. Reid will be afforded an opportunity of depicting an exceptionally interesting character and one for which he is peculiarly fitted.

Dorothy Dalton in New Departure

"Flare-Up Sal," Paramount Shortly to Be Released, Provides Her With Part of Dancer in Mining Camp

A COMPLETE DEPARTURE from her previous characterizations in Paramount pictures will be accorded Dorothy Dalton, the beautiful Thomas H. Ince star, in "Flare-Up Sal," which will shortly be released.

Miss Dalton, in the name part, is seen as the fiery adopted daughter of a mining prospector. She endeavors to save his outfit after he has lost everything in a gambling resort. She challenges the proprietor of the den to a game with herself as the stake—that is, she will, if she loses, become a dancer at the resort; but if she wins, her foster-father gets back his possessions.

She loses and enters into her new life. Her disposition makes her impervious to the blandishments of her various uncouth admirers. A new minister is held up by a mysterious figure known as the "Red Rider." The bandit locks the divine in his cabin and himself assumes the guise of the clergyman.

"Flare-up" is attracted by him as he preaches. He falls in love with her and reveals his identity. Together they leave for the cabin and are married by the captive minister, who is then permitted to go his way in peace.

A strong supporting cast has been chosen for Miss Dalton. The picture was supervised by Thomas H. Ince in person.

Tucker Designs Striking Sub-Title

Leader Requiring Fifty Feet in "Beloved Traitor" Pictures Psychologically Subtle Forces Arrayed Against Hero

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER'S flair for unusual effects finds play in a strikingly unusual sub-title he has devised for Mae Marsh's new Goldwyn picture, "The Beloved Traitor," made from the novel of that name by Frank L. Packard.

The leader, which might be described as a moving, story-telling caption, is intended to picture psychologically the subtle forces at work in undermining the life of the hero, first a young fisherman with an undeveloped talent for sculptor and then a successful artist in the city, facing all the distractions of a gay life.

As the preceding scene is irised out there appears in the upper left hand corner of the screen a sub-title reading, "Two years —and money and influence—make many changes." At the same moment a soft iris opens at the upper right hand corner, circling in on an old derby hat, which changes into a silk hat as the iris is held just large enough to encompass it. Below this another soft iris immediately opens showing the rough left hand of a fisherman holding a string of fish, which fades into a gloved hand and a fashionable cane.

Finally an iris at the bottom circles on rubber boots, which disappear and leave a silk-socked foot which slides into a pump held by a valet's hand.

Each previous object fades out slowly as the next comes in below, the last dissolving into a completely new title, reading, "Mud dolls may change to marble," in the upper right hand corner, and a mud figure typifying the sculptor's work in the crude elements of his birthplace becomes a marble head of Mae Marsh, the heroine. As the head fades out these lines are added to the title, "But even a millionaire cannot safely strip away the rough, protecting husk given by Life to lives that need it."

At the same moment there is faded into the lower right of the picture a receipt for studio rent made out to the hero's benefactor, one Bliss, then across it slantwise Bliss's check for tuition in a school of art for his protege, Judd Minot.

As the check and the rent receipt fade out there fades in a page torn from a catalogue of an art exhibition with this at the top:

MINOT, Judd
14. Nor-wester
15. Sea Urchin

This is followed by a clipped review lying across the page, headed:

ART AND ARTISTS
New Salon is Notable for Minot's Sea Figures

An unsteady hand holding a half-filled wine glass is thrust across the papers and an ugly blot of wine is spilled over Minot's name. There the leader ends.

All of this requires about fifty feet of film. To photograph it was a task of four hours for a director and his assistant, a cameraman and his assistant and four supernumerary actors.

New Billie Burke Picture

Miss Billie Burke's next Paramount picture will be a comedy satire on incompatibility, entitled "Let's Get a Divorce." Additional interest is given the photoplay by reason of the fact that the story was written by Anita Loos and John Emerson expressly for Miss Burke. Miss Loos and Mr. Emerson were interested spectators during the filming of the noted star's last picture, "Eve's Daughter," which has just been completed and which unfolded a vein of extraordinary comedy which has been used as the basis of the new story. Joseph Kaufman, who directed Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," will have charge of the production.

Praise Enid Markey's Acting

Metropolitan reviewers praise the work of Enid Markey in "Cheating the Public," the William Fox cinemelodrama which has just finished its run at the Lyric Theater in New York and now is being shown throughout the country.

The New York Tribune says "Mary Garvin, a factory girl, is wonderfully well played by Enid Markey. So realistic were her scenes when she faced death in the electric chair she made even the most hardened fans uncomfortable."

Laugh Even in the Making of Comedy

Denied Use of Train in Florida, Director Dillon of Goldwyn's "Our Little Wife," Obtains One by "Dark" Conspiracy

ALL PROPER METHODS of appeal having failed, Director Edward Dillon and the company of Goldwyn players engaged in filming exterior scenes for "Our Little Wife," Madge Kennedy's new starring vehicle, at Tampa, Florida, resorted to bold tactics in obtaining a locomotive, an observation Pullman and a flat car for incidents necessary to the completion of the picture.

Dillon applied first to the proper authorities and asked to be allowed the use of the rolling stock for half a day in the neighborhood of Tampa. From the general traffic manager down he was met with refusal. The cars might be spared in case of necessity, officials said, but a locomotive could not be taken from freight hauling under any circumstances. Besides, even were an engine available, coal could not be burned for any motion picture "frippery."

The scenario requires that Miss Kennedy and the various men portraying the roles of the husband and three disappointed lovers she takes on her honeymoon be photographed on the observation platform of a Pullman. A flat car, hitched on behind, was required for cameramen and the director. It was a vital matter to Director Dillon and he resolved to have the train regardless of how he got it.

A yardmaster with a sense of humor and an acquisitive wallet was appealed to and he promised to furnish the desired rolling stock, provided nobody higher up found out. Early next morning, therefore, just after sun-up, a strangely assorted party of men and women was to be seen walking across the maze of tracks in the Tampa yards. At its head were Miss Kennedy and the director.

"You've got just ten minutes to make this here picture," confided the yardmaster, "and you can't take the train out of my sight. So get busy."

For considerably more than ten minutes, however, while the accommodating official alternately swore and trembled in his boots, the commandeered train was run back and forth through the yards. The scenes were made and nobody in high authority, so far as could be discovered, was any the wiser.

Serial Plans of Pathe Are Announced

Pathe's serial plans for 1918 are now practically completed and by their magnitude indicate that serials will continue to be a larger feature of the Pathe program than ever before.

In accordance with these plans, J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe exchange, has engaged William Duncan, who has become known as one of the best serial directors in the field today. Mr. Duncan will start at work almost immediately upon a Western serial in which he will not only play the lead, but direct.

Announce New Mix Play

After "Cupid's Round Up," Tom Mix will appear for William Fox in another western drama called "Six Shooter Andy."

Fans Keep Mary Pickford from Working

Crowds So Great That San Francisco Filming Has to Be Abandoned and Entire Script Changed to New Location

POPULARITY indeed has its drawbacks, which fact probably is better appreciated today by Mary Pickford than any one else.

Shortly after the completion of "Stella Maris," Miss Pickford, accompanied by Director Marshall Neilan, Frances Marion and a company of fifty, left Los Angeles to film the exteriors of her new Artcraft picture in San Francisco.

When it was learned that the scenes would be taken on Telegraph Hill, crowds began to collect long before "Little Mary" arrived. Thousands gathered around the location and when the popular little star arrived she received a rousing ovation.

With the help of the police, however, Director Neilan was able to stage a number of scenes. But on reaching the grounds the following day the crowds became so great and enthusiastic that the efforts of the police were useless.

Miss Pickford's popularity in San Francisco is probably greater than in any other part of the country. Her recent public appearances there in behalf of the Liberty Loan and Red Cross have added tremendously to her great popularity and every time she visits the city to screen exteriors she is given a big force of police to keep back the mobs.

But on this last visit, despite the aid of the police, she was unable to continue her activities after the first day, although several attempts were made on the days following.

Director Neilan finally announced that it would be impossible to stage Miss Pickford's new picture in San Francisco and inasmuch as the story, written by Frances Marion, is a San Francisco subject, the entire script will have to be changed, so that some other location can be used. It is expected that the company will stage the production in the south.

Raymond Hatton Hailed as Big Star

Work in Artcraft Production, "The Whispering Chorus," Is Said to Place Him Securely in Niche of Fame

SOME ACTORS are born great, others achieve greatness, and still others have greatness thrust upon them.

Raymond Hatton, whose excellent characterizations in Paramount and Artcraft pictures have proved his talent and versatility to a remarkable degree, probably was born a great actor. It is difficult to believe that his talent could be anything less than innate; he is certainly achieving greatness and as certainly it has not been thrust upon him.

In "Joan the Woman," directed by Cecil B. DeMille and written by Jeanie MacPherson, he accomplished a memorable impersonation as King Charles; in "The Woman God Forgot," another wonderful DeMille and MacPherson creation, released by Artcraft with Geraldine Farrar in the star role, Hatton made another record as Montezuma the Magnificent.

Both of these were outstanding; they were distinctly different types. In the first, he was the weak, vaccilating, easily swayed monarch; in the second, he was every inch a king—sold to a sad fate through a woman's weakness. He received many justly merited tributes for these two personations.

But, in "The Whispering Chorus," a new Artcraft picture, being specially produced under Mr. DeMille's direction and for which the scenario was written by Miss MacPherson from Perley Poore Sheehan's novel which will run simultaneously in "All Story Weekly" with the release of the film, Raymond Hatton in the role of John Trimble will reach, it is believed, the highest point in his career thus far.

As the man who takes another identity to hide a crime and in the end ennobles himself by a self-immolation that partakes of positive grandeur of spirit Hatton has, it is declared, created a character that will not soon be forgotten in the annals of art, literature and the screen.

In make up, in his depiction of the strange personality of Trimble, in his every gesture, mannerism and expression, he is pronounced perfect. His own personality has been so completely submerged that even his best friends will scarcely recognize him, particularly after his altered appearance when he assumes the personality of the drowned man.

Under the careful and painstaking direction of Mr. DeMille the character develops and attains proportions that become dignified even in the uncouth figure and habiliments assumed by the actor. Hatton has, according to all report, lost no opportunity and profited by every suggestion from the director. It should be his greatest characterization and will place his foot on the topmost rung of the histrionic ladder.

In the cast appear others who do notable work as well—Elliott Dexter, Kathlyn Williams, Tully Marshall, Edythe Chapman, John Burton, Guy Oliver, James Neill, W. H. Brown, Noah Beery, Gustav Seyffertitz, Walter Lynch, Edna Mae Cooper, etc.

The picture is said to possess the elements that make for positive greatness;

Good Cast in "The Guilty Man"

The cast of "The Guilty Man," the Paramount special release, includes an imposing array of well known players. The photoplay is an adaptation from A. H. Woods' sensational Broadway success, written by Charles Klein and directed by Irvin V. Willat, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Gloria Hope plays the part of Claudine Flambon, an illegitimate French girl, who slays her stepfather in defending her mother from his brutality. Vivian Reed has the sympathetic role of Marie Flambon, the mother of Claudine, who marries the owner of a cafe in Paris to give her child a name.

William Garwood plays the part of Claude Lescuyer, the attorney general who prosecutes Claudine, and in a highly dramatic court room scene breaks down and confesses that he is the father of the prisoner, and that owing to his desertion of her mother he is responsible for the events that have occurred and is therefore "the guilty man." J. P. Lockney is the father of the prosecutor.

Charles French in the heavy role of Flambon, Hal Cooley as Gaston Marceau, the sweetheart of Claudine, John Steppling as Jean Michaud, the former owner of the cafe, who precipitates the tragedy by agreeing with Flambon to take Claudine as his wife in cancellation of Flambon's indebtedness to him, and Hayward Mack as Jacques Ristac, complete the cast of principal characters.

"The Guilty Man" borders on melodrama, and was adapted to the stage from the story of Francois Coppe. It is on the order of the much talked of Brieux plays, dealing with a sociological problem in a graphic manner. As a special release it has been given elaborate treatment, and sumptuous settings and large ensembles of people make it an extraordinary production.

Gloria Hope was cast for the role of Claudine by Mr. Ince owing to her exceptional beauty and her ability as an emotional actress.

Scenes from "The Guilty Man," the A. H. Woods success just released by Paramount.

it is an epic of modern life, of the deeps and shallows of human emotion, woven and interwoven in the warp and woof of mankind's struggles against temptation and the complexities of existence.

Mr. DeMille has missed no chance to bring out in the story his theories, which are theories no longer because they have been proved in his previous work—of what constitutes true greatness in motion picture art. With his indefatigable zeal, his insistence upon correctness down to the minutest detail, he has left nothing undone in "The Whispering Chorus" that would result in its perfection. He is cutting and assembling every foot of the film and superintending every bit of action. It should be his greatest achievement.

Goldwyn Scores in Pittsburgh

Goldwyn pictures have taken another stride forward in Pittsburgh with the announcement that Harry Davis has contracted to show them at his spacious Lyric Theater, said to be the most exclusive photoplay house in the city. "Dodging a Million," starring Mabel Normand, will be the opening production.

"I had intended contracting for the Goldwyn program right from the start," Mr. Davis told a Goldwyn representative, "but a surplus of productions booked ahead in 1917 set all my well laid plans awry. No enterprising exhibitor, however, can long resist a program containing such box-office and artistic successes as 'The Cinderella Man,' 'The Auction Block' and 'Thais,' not forgetting beautiful 'Polly of the Circus,' and 'Spreading Dawn.'

Another cause for Goldwyn elation is the report of big business from several Goldwyn exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory. Particularly enthusiastic is H. B. Kester of the Cameraphone, East Liberty, Pittsburgh's pretty suburb.

"'The Cinderella Man' proved a big winner despite the heavy snowfall," said Mr. Kester. "'The Auction Block' is another Goldwyn production that made me feel that a good picture will draw crowds, even in these war times. The only regret I have is that I didn't contract to show 'The Auction Block' for a week instead of three days. But I hope to repeat on it shortly. As for 'Thais,' is has more than come up to expectations, though I had always felt that Mary Garden's debut in pictures would be a big event for me."

James Vela, manager of the Liberty Theater, Wheeling, W. Va., said: "'The Cinderella Man' is a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Virginia Pearson, whose latest photoplay, "Stolen Honor," was released recently, will soon begin working on a thrilling war play for William Fox.

"Captain of His Soul" A Strong Drama

Brothers, Each Innocent of Father's Murder and Each Suspecting Other, Offer Weird Subject for Psychical Analysis

WILLIAM DESMOND has the title role in "The Captain of His Soul," on the Triangle program for the week of February 10. This play is a screen adaptation by Lillian Ducey of Eleanoret Talbot Kinkaid's magazine story, "Shackles," which had its inspiration in William Ernest Henley's poem, "Out of the Night." The central theme of the plot is a mysterious death and the belief of two brothers that the other is the perpetrator of the crime.

William Desmond and Charles Gunn in the Triangle play, "The Captain of His Soul."

This eventful, dramatic story is fundamentally a drama of the "inner man." It affords a study of fraternal contrast, for it shows the totally different struggles and impulses which actuate two brothers who have been subjected to the same vital emotional experience. The stronger becomes master of his conscience. The weaker, resisting it, finally succumbs. The play is said to have distinct psychological value, and to offer opportunity for intensely emotional acting.

The story relates how Ebenezer Boyce, president of the Boyce Automatic Pistol Works, retires from active management and turns his business over to Martin, a Wall street schemer. Martin is involved with Annette de Searcy, who importunes him constantly for money, which he refuses. His daughter, Myra, is unhappily married to Reggie Van Fleet.

Ebenezer is slain. His two sons, Horace and Henry, swear to avenge his death. Martin's dead body is discovered and a verdict of suicide is given.

With their common enemy slain, each brother thinks the other the murderer. Brotherly love keeps both from voicing their mistrust. Henry, seeking forgetfulness, travels. He comes under the influence of a hermit, yields to the message embodied in Henley's poem, and returns home, resolving to become "Captain of His Soul."

At Palm Beach the brothers meet Myra, whose husband has been killed in a train wreck, and jealousy poisons the fraternal love of the weaker. A sensational accusation in the hotel lobby and a subsequent startling and unexpected confession of the real murderer lead to a stirring climax.

William Desmond and Charles Gunn portray the two brothers. Jack Richardson, Triangle "heavy," has the role of the villainous Martin. Walt Whitman, recently seen in "The Hopper," has a characterization part as Ebenezer Boyce. Mitzi Gould is seen as Myra and Claire McDowell is Annette DeSearcy. The cast also includes Jules Friquet, Eugene Burr, Percy Challenger and Lucretia Harris. Gilbert P. Hamilton was the director.

One of the finest hotel sets ever erected at the Culver City studios was used in the filming of this picture. It covered an entire studio stage. The "green room," seen through the lobby, is considered an achievement of the Triangle interior decorators.

"Doug." to Aid Red Cross Again

Not satisfied with what he has already done for the Red Cross, Douglas Fairbanks, who has just cleared $18,000 at a Rodeo held for the benefit of that organization, has entered himself in the Red Cross tennis tournament soon to take place in Southern California. Douglas will play against some of the most noted champions, with Mary K. Brown as his partner.

Metro on Broadway

Metro's great screen spectacle of international war events, "Lest We Forget," starring Rita Jolivet, opened for a run at the Lyric Theater in New York City on January 28, marking the entry of Metro pictures into the ranks of regular Broadway attractions.

Studio Manager Joins Army

Al Kaufman, manager of the Fifty-sixth street studio, New York City, of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, has been commissioned second lieutenant in the signal corps and assigned to the motion picture division with station in Washington.

Oil Gusher Caught in "Real Folks"

Triangle Director, After Waiting Weeks, Hears Well Is Ready, Rushes Company There and Gets Scene Complete

AFTER WEEKS OF WAITING, Director Walter Edwards succeeded in filming the bringing in of an oil gusher for Mrs. Kate Corbaley's prize winning story, "Real Folks," a Triangle release for the week of February 10.

The story deals with the discovery of oil on a California farm and Edwards resolved to wait until the desired opportunity should arrive. He learned that the Murphy Oil Company was boring a well in the La Habra fields of Southern California and the company officials agreed to notify the Triangle studio when the well was ready to be brought in.

Edwards kept his cast in readiness. When at length a telegram came, "Ready For You to Shoot," the players were rushed to the well, and a scene of tense realism was caught by the camera as the oil came from the gusher.

The oil well had been sunk to a depth of 4,200 feet, representing a year and two months' work in drilling, with an outlay of $250,000. The derrick was 114 feet high, the tallest on the field. Every detail of the work before the oil shot into the air, twenty feet higher than the top of the derrick, was pictured. The workmen were photographed in the act of swabbing the well, getting the first "headers" which contained mud and water, then forcing out the gas which belched forth at a pressure of 580 pounds to the square inch, to be followed a moment later by the oil.

In this diverting comedy-drama, "Real Folks," the characters are plain people in an unnatural environment which they have created for themselves to "keep up with the Joneses." The story depicts the tribulations of the newly rich, the rebellious younger generation that refuses to be governed by conventions, and the final triumph of love over all social prejudices.

J. Barney Sherry is an old Irishman—Pat Dugan, with the true Irish wit and all the determination and obstinacy that are his birthright. Triangle fans who have seen him in his recent plays, "Fanatics" and "Evidence," will welcome Mr. Sherry in a role which offers new opportunity for difficult characterization.

Francis McDonald, last seen as a highwayman in "The Gun Woman," is Jimmie Dugan, a "chip of the old block," for whom disinheritance has no terrors.

As Mrs. Patrick Dugan, late of County Kearny, but with aspirations for entrance into Long Island society, Alberta Lee is seen in a characteristic role.

Marion Skinner portrays Mrs. Omixem, a real "lady" who fulfills democratic ideals. Fritzi Ridgeway, known as the "cowgirl star," and hitherto seen in western thrillers with Roy Stewart, appears in frills and furbelows as Joyce Clifton, a little dancing teacher with real "blue blood" in her veins. Betty Pearce is Margaret Van Arsden and George Pearce is Van Arsden.

The story relates how Patrick Dugan of California strikes oil and becomes a millionaire overnight. Cheerfully accepting the responsibilities that wealth has thrust upon him, he decides to break into society. At an exclusive eastern college, Jimmy, his son, despises his luxurious surroundings, objects to the snobbery of the idle rich, and whips two of them, also a policeman who tries to interfere. His speedy exit from college brings his parents east, where they are unable to locate him.

In the Long Island colony, where Mr. and Mrs. Dugan make their home, society proves quite impenetrable, but Mrs. Dugan finds joy in her garden, and in her acquaintance with her neighbor, Mrs. Omixem (Lady Blessington), whose godchild, Joyce Clifton, is a dancing teacher to the smart set.

Jimmy, who has gone into the nursery business with a young Italian, comes to Lady Blessington's to deliver shrubs, sees Joyce, and decides to stay and set them out. When Mrs. Dugan appears there is a happy reunion, with the result that Jimmy returns home. Pat treats his son royally, until he learns of his love for Joyce; then disinheritance impends. An elopement bridges a good many social barriers, and in the scenes that follow everybody makes amusing discoveries and the undaunted Pat claims the credit for happily solving the difficulties.

New "Analysis of Motion" Film

Pathe has released a new "analysis of motion" color picture in one reel, "The Horse in Action," filmed by the "Ultra-rapid" camera, a Pathe invention.

Ordinary motion pictures of course are taken with a camera recording sixteen pictures a second and are projected at the same speed. With the Pathe ultra rapid camera the pictures are taken at the rate of 120 to the second or even more. These pictures are projected at the ordinary rate with the consequence that animate objects in the film move so slowly that the eye can easily follow every phase of muscular action.

The effects to be noticed in the case of the horses in "The Horse in Action" are extraordinary. As the horses go over hurdles or gallop every muscular movement is clearly visible. As they jump they seem to float in the air like thistledown.

Big Drive for "The Son of Democracy"

Paramount Sets in Motion One of the Most Pretentious Publicity Campaigns Ever Made in History of the Industry

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE, the famous newspaper and magazine writer, has commenced a novelization in serial form of "The Son of Democracy," based on the Paramount series of the same name, written, directed and produced by Benjamin Chapin.

Mr. Terhune's novelization of Mr. Chapin's series of dramatic film stories of America in the making will present a fiction article of 30,000 words which will appear from day to day in the New York Evening World, commencing February 4.

This novelization will also be syndicated to other newspapers throughout the country by the New York World Syndicate, which supplies material to a list of thirty-five publications including the Boston Post, Philadelphia Inquirer, Pittsburgh Press, Buffalo Times, Chicago Journal, Minneapolis Journal, Cleveland News, San Francisco Bulletin, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Washington Post, Los Angeles Tribune, Salt Lake Telegram, Denver News, New Orleans States, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Ft. Wayne Journal and Gazette, Mobile Item, Tacoma Tribune, Baltimore News and others.

In connection with its publication of the story in serial form, the New York Evening World will conduct an extensive exploitation campaign in which thousands of dollars will be spent boosting "The Son of Democracy." One-sheet posters of the film will be used on delivery wagons, news stands, etc., announcing the story by Mr. Terhune, the publication of which will be tied up with the film, thus creating wide advance publicity for the subject.

One of the foremost contributors to newspapers and magazine throughout the country, Albert Payson Terhune is widely popular among the American public. Among his stories which have appeared in the Evening World and its syndicated papers are "Fifty Failures Who Came Back," "Americans Under Fire," "Famous Children of History," "Stories of Great Novels," "The Story of the Presidents," "Stories of the Operas," "Great Love Stories of History," "World's Greatest Events," etc.

His stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other national magazines are well remembered. In addition to this, Mr. Terhune has been active in the scenario field, some of his scipts being "Years of the Locust," produced by Famous Players, "Dollars and the Woman," "Happiness of Three Women," etc.

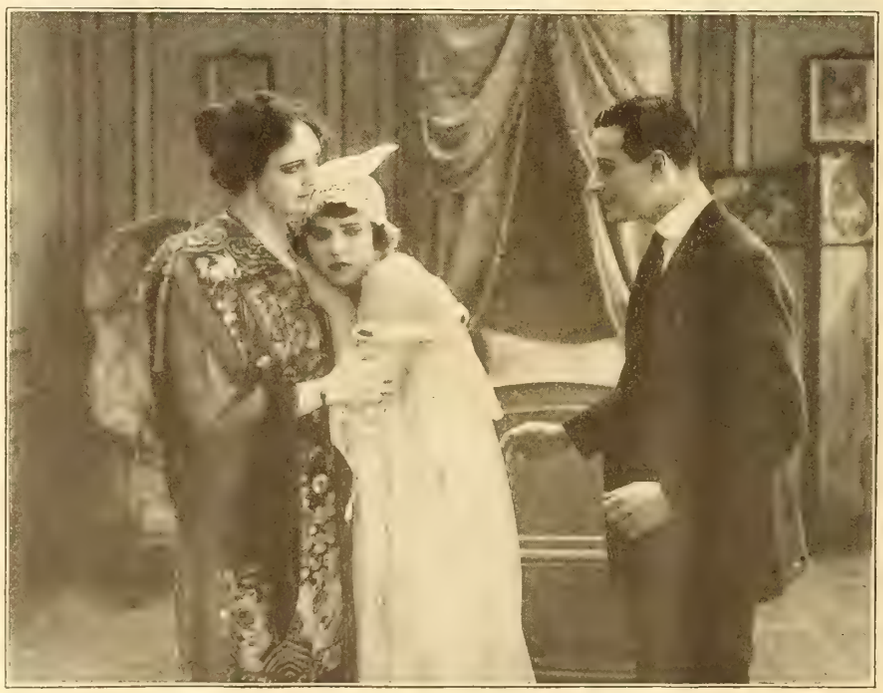
Besides the above publicity, a special advertising campaign has already been started on "The Son of Democracy." This drive is aimed particularly at the man, the woman and the child who is not a regular patron of the motion picture theater. Among twenty-two magazines in which advertising copy will appear are The Saturday Evening Post, Literary Digest, The American Boy, The Youth's Companion, The American Club Women, St. Nicholas and the best of the magazines that reach school teachers and other educators.

This advertising will be backed with a direct-by-mail campaign to several hundred thousand club women, teachers, librarians, etc., appealing to them to get behind the exhibitor showing "The Son of Democacy" and prove to him that the public does want good pictures and will make them great box office successes.

Miss Rose Tapley, special Paramount traveling representative for this series of film, has already started on a tour of the country to address schools, women's clubs, etc.

On the whole, the general exploitation drive on these pictures is perhaps one of the most pretentious ever created to pave the way for the exhibitor. The great national publicity which will be accorded this production, the first three installments of which are released in February, together with the direct appeal to prospective patrons now being conducted, is expected to make this a gigantic box office attraction.

Fairbanks to Do His Bit in a New Way



That Douglas Fairbanks is a very prominent representative of the motion picture industry is evidently the opinion of the United States government, for it has requested the acrobatic actor to prepare a propaganda film for distribution among the men of the army and navy at home and abroad.

Major William F. Snow of the Surgeon General's office, in a letter to Mr. Fairbanks, asked:

"Will you do this for the United States government as a patriotic contribution? This form of educational work constitutes an important part of the surgeon general's office and of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. Your participation, therefore, would be a valuable and far reaching service.

"What we want to put across to the men is the idea that clean living and physical fitness, are, after loyalty and obedience, the prime requisites of the soldier. This picture to be most effective, however, must be intermixed and sugar-coated with unalloyed entertainment."

Immediately upon receipt of Major Snow's letter Mr. Fairbanks wired Washington that he is prepared to undertake the suggested film and requested further details. In the meantime Mr. Fairbanks, with his director, Allan Dwan, is at work on a scenario which they will submit for the purpose.

Praise Mable Normand in New Film

Newspaper Critics of New York, Chicago and Boston Also Commend the Picture, Goldwyn's "Dodging a Million."

NEWSPAPER CRITICS throughout the country are according praise of extraordinary warmth to Mabel Normand, Goldwyn star, upon the occasion of her return to the screen after an absence of more than a year in George Loane Tucker's picturization of the Edgar Selwyn-A. M. Kennedy mystery-drama, "Dodging a Million." New York, Chicago and Boston lead in the laudatory chorus.

The New York Globe calls "Dodging a Million" "one of the most entertaining pictures ever presented" and says Miss Normand's return to the screen is "a veritable triumph." "Miss Normand at once," the critic concludes, "resumes her place in the very foremost rank of motion picture actresses."

Extracts from other reviews follow:

Harriette Underhill in The New York Tribune: Once upon a time we may have seen a picture we liked better than "Dodging a Million" but we cannot recall what it was; and once upon a time we may have seen an actress prettier and more clever than little Mabel Normand, but we cannot recall her name if so. It is to be hoped that Mabel Normand will never see fit to stay away from the screen again. She is a beautiful, charming and finished actress. The only trouble with "Dodging a Million" is that it is going to make everyone dissatisfied with just ordinarily good pictures.

New York Evening Telegram: "Dodging a Million" is an adroit combination of mystery and thrills. Mabel Normand is welcome.

New York Evening Sun: Dodging a Million" presents Mabel Normand as an actress of unsuspected emotional range. Her good looks and natural vivacity combine to make this a photoplay that promises wide popularity.

New York Herald: Why Mabel Normand's grace and beauty remained for three or four years concealed under grotesque comedy make-up is a puzzle to one who sees her in "Dodging a Million." . . . An up-to-date and extremely stylish comedy.

W. K. Hollander in The Chicago Daily News: Mabel Normand's piquancy, vivaciousness and charm remain. She is still irresistible. The detail of "Dodging a Million" is typical of Goldwyn productions, which is another way of saying "excellent."

Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune: Organists in motion picture theaters showing "Dodging a Million" are respectfully requested to play "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," as accompaniment, for it is one of those sure-thing bets that the gang will be there—that sad and lonesome gang that for two years has mooned over old photographs and tired out pen-points writing the leading question, "Can you please tell us WHEN Mabel Normand will appear in pictures again?" With George Loane Tucker directing, Mabel Normand has a vehicle that suits her down to the ground and has come back with a flourish, the same captivating lady as when she disappeared. It's a nice, snappy picture. Hurrah for Mabel!

Oma Moody Lawrence in the Chicago Evening Post: Mabel Normand's return to the screen is an item of paramount interest. "Dodging a Million" is clever and entertaining. The entire cast is well chosen and most capably directed by George Loane Tucker.

Louella Parsons in the Chicago Herald: "Dodging a Million," of George Loane Tucker's make, is as big a boost pictorially as the tag "Worth" was when applied to a Paris frock twenty-five years ago. Mabel Normand is the same vivacious favorite.

Kitty Kelly in the Chicago Examiner: Mabel Normand's return to cinemaland is irresistible. "Dodging a Million" is cleverly devised and filled with complicating incidents. It's a thing of plot intricate and intriguing, and of people, well-dressed and good looking.

The Boston Transcript: Thousands crowded the Modern Theater to applaud Mabel Normand's return to the films. She is lovelier, more vivacious and more charming than ever.

The Boston Post: The tell-tale long line at the box office attests to the popularity of Mabel Normand. Her first Goldwyn vehicle, "Dodging a Million," is a triumph for her and for George Loane Tucker, its director.

Change Fox Release Dates

Owing to the recent order of the United States fuel administrator it has been necessary to rearrange the schedule of releases of some of the 52-a-year Fox specials as follows: February 17, Gladys Brockwell in "The Moral Law;" February 24, Jewel Carmen in "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes"; March 3, Tom Mix in "Six Shooter Andy."

Film Comedy in Desert

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and his company, engaged in productions of comedies for Paramount, journeyed recently to the Mojave Desert to make exterior scenes for the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy which will follow "A Country Hero," recently released.

Brady Quits as Head of World Films

Deplores Present Condition of Industry, Ascribes It to High Salaries and Poor Business Methods, and Points Way Out.

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces his resignation as director general of the World Film Corporation, a position he has held for two years.

Mr. Brady's resignation was unexpected but was explained in the following terms:

William A. Brady, who retires as the head of World Films.

"After two years of the most intensive application to the production of a regular program of weekly releases, at the same time carrying on my many theatrical and other enterprises, I have decided, in justice to my own interests and the demands upon me at this time, to withdraw from my active responsibilities in the World Film Corporation, retaining my seat upon the directorate and my interest in the company.

"I shall, of course, expect, as well as strive, that the success of World Pictures may be continued and the company prosperous, as heretofore. Production and other plans for the future are in good shape in the World organization and in due course exhibitors may expect to hear good tidings.

"The company will make further announcement in respect to its own intentions and plans in a later statement.

"I am happy to announce that the stock of completed pictures on hand with World is not only ample in quantity, but in quality to satisfy the most exacting and to make entirely unnecessary and unjustifiable any intimation that there could be, or would be, any interruption in regular service of dependable pictures.

"Finally, I wish to express to the trade my deep appreciation of the great cordiality that has been extended to me and of the reception that has been given my productions and to say that in the future, as in the past, I shall always be keenly interested personally in watching the development and doing what I can to help in the safeguarding of the interests of the producer, manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor alike.

"What my motion picture plans for the future are has not as yet been decided. For the present I shall devote myself to the completion of my big picture, 'Stolen Orders.' "

Subsequently New York newspapers quoted Mr. Brady as saying that he resigned because the condition of the trade made it inadvisable for the World Film Corporation to continue paying him $100,000 a year as called for by contract.

Mr. Brady describing the condition of the industry as "chaotic," laid part of the blame at the feet of high-salaried executives and stars. The huge salaries not only place a great burden on the producers, he said, but they imbue legislators with the idea that the business is extremely prosperous, with the result that producers and exhibitors are overburdened with taxation.

Mr. Brady also found fault with business methods, particularly in distribution, pointing out that each producing company maintains a string of twenty to twenty-four exchanges instead of selling through a single office, Mr. Brady said this accounted for an annual loss of at least $3,500,000.

It's Maj. Herbert Brenon Now

Herbert Brenon, the motion picture producer, will sail for England within a week to assume supervision of all official British war pictures. He has been appointed a major in the signal corps of the English army. It is reported that Mr. Brenon received a similar offer from the United States Government, but declined because he is an Englishman by birth.

McGrath Edits the Screen Telegram

Former Managing Editor of MOTOGRAPHY Takes Charge of Mutual's New Twice-a-Week News Feature

THE APPOINTMENT of Blaine McGrath to the editorship of the Screen Telegram is announced by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The Screen Telegram, to be issued twice a week, supplants the Mutual Weekly.

Mr. McGrath goes to the Screen Telegram from the office of managing editor of MOTOGRAPHY. He was previously connected with the International News Service and with various Hearst news picture enterprises.

Mr. McGrath began his newspaper career on the Indianapolis Star, going thence successively to the Indianapolis Sun, the Milwaukee Journal, the United Press in New York, the St. Louis Times and the International News Service, later becoming a member of the staffs of various Chicago and New York newspapers.

In the moving picture field he edited the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, the Hearst-Vitagraph news reel and the Hearst International News Pictorial until it was merged with the Pathe News.

The staff of the Screen Telegram is now practically complete. Camera men and correspondents have been placed in all of the more important news centers in North America and abroad.

The offices of the Screen Telegram in Chicago are located at 6235 Broadway. The location of the New York offices will be temporarily at the Mutual's exchange at 1600 Broadway. Arrangements have been completed for the printing of the Screen Telegram in both New York and Chicago to assure swift and adequate distribution of the two reels a week.

Contracts have been closed by Mutual's sales department with leading and representative theaters in a large number of the important centers, including Sid Grauman's new $1,000,000 house in Los Angeles.

Miss Clark Starts Work on "Prunella"

Diminutive Famous Players-Lasky Star Has Part in Quaint European Picture Well Fitted to Her Capabilities

MARGARITE CLARK has begun work on her next photoplay, "Prunella," for the Paramount program. Her role in this play is in striking contrast to that of her last picture, "The Seven Swans," and a comparison demonstrates the great versatility of the diminutive star.

Prunella's mother ran away with a French landscape gardener and a year later left Prunella, a new born babe, on the door step of the home of her maiden sisters, Prim, Prude and Privacy, and disappeared, to die alone. The three old maids guarded Prunella very carefully and she grew to young womanhood entirely innocent of worldly things.

One day mummers—strolling players—came to town, and Prunella accidentally met Pierrot, one of their number. He made passionate love to her, and bewildered and delighted, she was easily persuaded to elope.

They were married and for two happy years they wandered together from place to place, seeing the world, the people and the gay towns. Then married life palled upon Pierrot and he ran away. Soon he discovered he could not live without Prunella, but when he returned seeking forgiveness he found she had disappeared, leaving everything he had given her, including her jewels, dresses and trinkets.

In the garden was a small stone on which was written: "Here lies Pierrette," his pet name for her. Not knowing if she lived, he wandered back to the town in which he met her. Aunts Prim and Prude had died and poverty had overtaken Privacy, so she readily sold the home to Pierrot when he offered to buy it.

To help him forget, Pierrot invites a number of merry acquaintances to his house. That night, broken-hearted, Prunella comes back to the old home. Overcome with grief, she sinks, half-fainting to the ground, and there Pierrot finds her.

In the weird moonlight she seems at first an apparition, but he weeps for joy when he discovers she is alive and still loves him and Prunella has no difficulty in exacting his promise to abjure his gay life and devote himself to her happiness.

A tense moment in "Rough and Ready," a William Farnum picture now being filmed for Fox in the Adirondacks.

Like "My Own United States"

Seldom has there been aroused a more generally complimentary endorsement than that which has been accorded the latest Frohman Amusement Corporation's super-attraction "My Own United States," since its private showing in New York at the Rivoli Theater, a compliment which has been extended along to acting and technical staffs and executives alike.

More than three thousand members of the theatrical professions, together with a distinctly representative gathering of army and navy and public officials, viewed the screening at the Rivoli and without a dissenting voice have acclaimed "My Own United States" as a war drama that sets a standard for America.

It is expected that "My Own United States" will be shown at an early date to the President and his cabinet, together with all other department heads and secretaries.

Despite an unusual influx of applications for booking of this drama, the Frohman officers have not as yet decided upon the method of release, whether the production will be marketed as a state rights attraction, booked direct to the larger theaters, or shown as a road attraction.

Ray Starts Sixth Paramount

Activities on Charles Ray's sixth Paramount picture, which will follow "His Own Home Town" and "Let's Go," have just been commenced. The new picture is as yet unnamed, but it is announced that Doris Lee, who supported Mr. Ray so ably in "His Mother's Boy," is again playing opposite him in this production. The cast includes Melbourne MacDowell, Billy Elmer and other well known Ince players. Victor Schertzinger is directing the film under Mr. Ince's personal supervision.

Elsie Ferguson Rises to New Heights

Interprets Tremendously Emotional Part in "The Song of Songs," Which Is Said to Dim Past Performances.

THE APPEARANCE of Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," her latest picture for Artcraft, which has just been completed, demonstrates that this famous star does not intend to rest upon the laurels she has won upon the stage and make her appeal to the picture public through her pulchritude.

In this photoplay she interprets a tremendously emotional part as Lily Kardos, whose tempestuous career leads to highly dramatic situations.

Miss Ferguson's greatest success on the stage was in "The Outcast," where she had a role similar to the one in "The Song of Songs," which is a sociological drama based on the play by Edward Sheldon. The production has been staged in the usual sumptuous manner by Artcraft and presents a notable cast.

Supporting Miss Ferguson is Cecil Fletcher as Stephen Bennett, the high-minded lover. Crauford Kent is Dick Laird, the cold-blooded and wealthy man-about-town who causes Lily to lose home and husband, and Frank Losee plays the part of former Senator Calkins, who finally marries the girl and drives her away in fierce anger when he finds her in a compromising position, though she is innocent of wrongdoing. Phineas Bennett, the crafty uncle of Stephen, who cunningly traps Lily into a betrayal of her past life, is played by Robert Cummings.

Joseph Kaufman, who has made some notable productions for the Famous Players-Lasky Company, directed the photoplay. His latest pitcure, released on the Paramount program, was "The Land of Promise," with Billie Burke as the star.

In addition to playing an emotional part in which she is said to excel anything heretofore done by her on stage or screen, feminine admirers of Miss Ferguson will see her attired in a score or more of magnificent gowns. Miss Ferguson has the reputation of being one of the best dressed women in New York, and in "The Song of Songs" opportunity is afforded her to display her wardrobe as the wife of the rich senator, moving in the fast set of the great metropolis.

Timely Film for Miss Glaum

Details regarding the first production in which Louise Glaum will be presented as a Paralta star, which have just been given out at the studio in Los Angeles, indicate that the production will be a particularly timely one.

The story has been prepared especially for Miss Glaum by Monte M. Katterjohn and, according to the announcement, concerns the "insidious kultur as forced upon a liberty loving people by the Wolf Nation of the World."

The working title of the production is "Intelligence," and the leading role is said to give Miss Glaum opportunity for many intensely emotional scenes.

To facilitate production without making a corresponding sacrifice in quality, two directors—Wallace Worsley and Elliott Howe—will work simultaneously, one of them producing the scenes in which Miss Glaum appears and the other attending to the various exteriors in which no action is provided for the star.

Construction of the sets was begun by Production Manager Robert Brunton last week and the members of the supporting cast are now being selected.

This is Miss Glaum's first production since the Triangle subject, "Idolators," which was also written by Katterjohn, and which probably marked the star's final appearance in a strictly vampire role.

"Naughty, Naughty!" Progresses

Enid Bennett's newest vehicle, "Naughty, Naughty," produced by Thomas H. Ince, directed by Jerome Storm and scheduled for release after "The Keys of the Righteous," her first Paramount offering, is rapidly progressing and will be finished in the near future.

Marjorie Bennett, the charming younger sister of the star, last week made her debut as one of the supporting players to her sister. Earl Rodney again plays apposite the star. Others in the cast include Gloria Hope and Andrew Arbuckle.

The picture is by C. Gardner Sullivan and is pure and delectable comedy, with an acceptable amount of old-fashioned common sense thrown in for good measure and balance. The town of Lilyville, Kansas, is the locale. The manners, affections, narrowness, as well as the good and sterling qualities of the villagers are reflected in the story, which will be a departure from the preceding picture.

New Mack Sennett Feb. 24

The Paramount Mack Sennett Comedy, "It Pays to Exercise," will be released February 24, following "Watch Your Neighbor." It is a typical Mack Sennett comedy, with an all-star cast, including Chester Conklin, Alice Maison, Harry Booker, Eva Thatcher and Slim Summerville.

Two strong scenes from "Blue Blazes Rawden," an Artcraft picture with William S. Hart.

Big Blue Ribbon Program Announced

Sixteen Five-Reelers and Two Patriotic Features Outlined —Work Will Carry Company Well Into the Summer

AMBITIOUS program of production which will carry the Blue Ribbon features well into the summer is made public this week by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company. His statement not only shows a great many plays actually in the making, but many others in preparation for the company's extensive list of stars.

Sixteen new five-reel subjects are outlined in President Smith's announcement, and these, with "Over the Top," in which Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey and Lois Meredith are to appear, and the big patriotic feature which is being made in conjunction with the state of New York, gives Vitagraph sufficient material to fill its program until the first week in August. A summary of the Vitagraph future product shows that the company not only is prepared for almost six months in advance, but also that its projected features are of extraordinary high merit from a literary standpoint.

Director William P. S. Earle, under whose artistic guidance little Gladys Leslie has worked ever since she joined the Vitagraph family, will start production next week on "The Reflection of Scarlet," an original story by Edward P. Smaney, who is now actively engaged in the photographic department at Washington on special work for the government.

Miss Leslie is to be starred in this feature, which will be produced in five reels, and upon its conclusion will begin work immediately on "Ann Acushla," of which Paul West, a leading screen story writer, is the author. "Ann Acushla" is described as a charming story of Irish-American life and should afford an even greater opportunity for Miss Leslie to portray the role of a colleen than was given her in "His Own People," in which she made her Vitagraph debut with Harry Morey.

Alice Joyce, who is nearing the end of her work in "The Son of the Soul," under the direction of Tom Terriss, is scheduled to begin work in "My Man," an adaptation of the play by Edith Ellis. Her role in this, it is said, will give Miss Joyce one of the finest opportunities she has had since her portrayal of Mary Turner in "Within the Law."

Other plays which are in preparation for Miss Joyce are "The Business of Life," from the successful novel of the same name by Robert W. Chambers, and "To the Highest Bidder," a novel by Florence Morse Kingsley. Miss Kingsley, it will be recalled, was co-author with Mary E. Wilkins Freeman on "An Alabaster Box," which provided one of the best starring vehicles Miss Joyce ever had. In addition to these productions, it is said that announcement soon will be made of other plays which Vitagraph has in hand for this popular star.

George Barr McCutcheon and Harold MacGrath supply the vehicles in which Earle Williams will be featured with Grace Darmond, following the completion of "An American Live Wire," on which they are at work now in California. "An American Live Wire" is an adaptation from "The Lotus and the Bottle," an O. Henry story.

Rex Beach, whose book, "Heart of the Sunset," has just been picturized for distribution by Goldwyn as a Rex Beach Special.

"The Man from Brodneys," from the novel of the same name by McCutcheon, probably will be the next story in which Mr. Williams will work, this to be followed by "The Girl in His House," from the pen of Harold MacGrath. Another feature in prospect for Mr. Williams and Miss Darmond is entitled "Out of the Dark," written by Roma Raymond and Jane Dixon. All of these, it is announced, will be produced at the Vitagraph western studio under the direction of Tom Mills, who also is directing "An American Live Wire."

Corinne Griffith, Webster Campbell and Marc MacDermott, working under the direction of John Robertson, are nearing completion of the patriotic picture which is being made by Vitagraph in co-operation with the New York State Defense Council. This is the feature in which Governor Charles S. Whitman plays a prominent role and it promises to be one of the most sensational pictures of the year. The story was prepared by Robert W. Chambers from actual spy records in the New York state archives and he, with suggestions from President Smith, has provided a story replete with thrilling incidents.

Upon completion of this picture, Director Robertson will resume production of "The Green God," featuring Miss Griffith and Webster Campbell, work upon which was interrupted in order to start the New York state feature. "The Green God" is based on the novel of Frederick Arnold Kummer and is said to provide Miss Griffith with an excellent chance to display her beauty and talents.

Following "The Green God," Miss Griffith will be put in the leading role of "The Clutch of Circumstances," from the novel by Leighton Graves Osmun. Mr. Robertson also will direct her in this feature.

Harry Morey, with Florence Deshon, is scheduled to begin work on "The Cambric Mask," one of the most successful of Robert M. Chambers' novels, immediately upon completion of "The Desired Woman," which he is now making under direction of Paul Scardon. Another story which is ready for Mr. Morey and Miss Deshon is "The Man from Where," an original story by Frederic R. Buckley, staff writer in the Vitagraph scenario department.

William Duncan, the stalwart hero of "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," the two big western serials which have won fame for him and Vitagraph, has been selected to play the leading role in the screen adaptation of "Baree, the Son of Kazan," the powerful novel of the north by James Oliver Curwood.

This should prove one of the strongest screen plays ever made and easily takes rank with the other big woods picture by Curwood, "God's Country and the Woman," in which Duncan and Nell Shipman were featured. Work on the "Kazan" feature, which will have a great many snow scenes in it, is scheduled to start within a very short time, the Vitagraph announcement states.

Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are to be featured in "A Texan Romance," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and "The Pariah," by Lowell Otis Reese. The former is said to be an unusually strong story, containing many thrilling moments such as the author gave to "The Fighting Trail," which he wrote in collaboration with J. Stuart Blackton, and "Vengeance—and the Woman," of which he was co-author with Albert E. Smith.

"The Pariah" is an adaptation from the story of the same name, which created great interest when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post last August. Both these stories are said to be ideally adapted to the talents of Miss Shipman and Mr. Whitman, who are now at work under direction of William Wolbert on "The Home Trail," scheduled for release late in March. The stars will be directed by Mr. Wolbert in both of the new features.

Badger Directs Miss Normand in Second Goldwyn

Clarence G. Badger, newspaper man, magazine writer and director of many motion picture successes, has been brought from the Pacific Coast by Goldwyn to direct merry Mabel Normand in her second Goldwyn production. The new play, as yet unnamed, gives Miss Normand a role totally different from any she has ever essayed. She will be a newspaper "copy girl."

Next Mozukin Film Feb. 17

Ivan Mozukin, the great Russian star, will make his next appearance in the Pathe release of February 17. A feature entitled, "The Inner Voice," affords him a role which calls for his characterization of a man at three distinct periods of his life: youth, middle age and old age. The picture deals with the "voice of conscience" and shows how a man who has apparently succeeded in life is brought to the knowledge of his complete failure through the instrument of something inside him which shows him that unscrupulous action and inconsideration for others do not pay.

Virginia Faces State Censorship

Bill Introduced in Legislature for Board to Pass on Films — Has Strong Support in House

THERE WILL BE ROUGH SEAS ahead for every branch of the motion picture industry in Virginia, if a bill just introduced in the General Assembly is enacted into a law. The measure is one of those designed to "purify" and "elevate" the standard of the photoplay.

The bill was offered by Representative J. P. Jones, a new member from Richmond. It was framed to meet the views of the women of a social uplift organization, and they have succeeded in rallying to its support the officers of several similiar associations.

None of the other four members of the Richmond delegation has committed himself to support of the bill, but there is no doubt that the crusaders will be able to muster a formidable following in the House of Delegates, which cast an overwhelming vote at this term for ratification of the Federal prohibition amendment.

The course of the bill in the Senate is not so certain, able members of the upper branch having immediately expressed disapproval.

The Jones bill provides for a censorship board of not less than three members, who shall examine and pass upon every film play sent into the state. The salaries of these censors are not fixed in the bill as it now stands, the measure merely stipulating "adequate compensation." This means salaries of $2,500 or $3,000 a year.

They will be vested with absolute authority to bar out or expurgate all films. The bill has been referred to the house committee on public welfare, which will grant a hearing to all interested before action is taken.

A tense moment in "The Turn of a Card," featuring J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson, now being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Exhibitors Commend Goldwyn Films

"Thais," "Cinderella Man," "Baby Mine," "Auction Block" and "For the Freedom of the World" Big Hits

GOLDWYN presents the following reports on its films from exhibitors:

Grecian Theater, El Paso—Did capacity business with "Thais." The production is a credit to the industry.

Alamo Theater, Louisville—Mary Garden in "Thais" broke all existing attendance records at this theater and at advanced prices. Through the medium of Mary Garden's popularity we were able to secure a great deal of advance publicity in our local newspapers, which of course had a great tendency to create a great deal of curiosity and interest on the part of the film fans and many who were not film fans who were anxious to get a glimpse of the famous prima donna.

Rex Theater, Brenham, Tex.—Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" established a new attendance record for my theater. If more pictures like this were made the motion picture industry would be placed on a higher plane.

Gifts Theater, Cincinnati—Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married," and "The Auction Block" have been especially big profit-makers for us and Mary Garden in "Thais" has broken every record of this house.

Princess Theater, Deming, N. M.—If you send me more special productions like "For the Freedom of the World" you fellows deserve all the good things in the world. It is a wonder for pulling in the crowds.

Cozy Theater, Topeka, Kan. — Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" played to capacity in zero weather at advanced price of twenty-five cents admission. Give us more like this. Price no object. It is my best attraction in a year.

Star Theater, Modesto, Cal.—"The Auction Block" went over better for me than I ever anticipated and this means more than shows on the surface for I have played all of the other Rex Beach pictures—"The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well" and "The Barrier." I wish to say that any exhibitor who cannot "clean-up" on "The Auction Block" had better quit the business and give a live one a chance. I will arrange a repeat date on this right away. I have a warm spot in my heart for Goldwyn Pictures, because I can usually count the profits in advance.

Rialto Theater, Lincoln, Neb.—We played to capacity business and made a fine profit on Mary Garden in "Thais." "For the Freedom of the World" played to the biggest business and pleased my audiences more than any of the war pictures we have had—and we have played them all. In a 1200-seat house in a city of 50,000 with ten vaudeville and picture shows in competition we turned them away at all ten performances of "For the Freedom of the World."

Strand Theater, Seattle—We did a tremendous business with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man." A sure-fire money maker for any exhibitor. Mae Marsh is one of the few really popular stars in pictures. "The Auction Block" went so well that we had to give a performance in the morning to take care of the crowds that the picture turned away at the regular performances.

Majestic Theater, Portland, Ore.—We are pleased to report that we have done an enormous business with Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man." The Rex Beach production, "The Auction Block," is an assured profit-maker for an exhibitor.

Laughlin Theater, Long Beach, Cal.—Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" took Long Beach by storm. The best Goldwyn production. My house played to capacity.

Rialto Theater, Los Angeles—Mary Garden in "Thais" has kept us crowded to the limit of our capacity for two weeks. It is a sensational success from both the exhibitor's and the public's standpoint.

Tivoli Theater, San Francisco — The test of a picture with us is the profit we make when we show it. Judged by this standard first, Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" and Mary Garden in "Thais" are wonderfully successful. The first of these is the most perfect picture technically and in continuity we have ever seen. It is the hit of the year on the Pacific coast, where Goldwyn has achieved quicker and greater popularity than any company ever had before.

Strand Theater, Atlanta, Ga.—"Thais" is a tremendous success in our house, and we understand that it has cleaned up in all other Southern towns that have just played it.

Colonial Theater, Lansing, Mich. —I played "The Auction Block" to capacity business for three days. The third day was larger than the first.

Casino Theater, Halifax, N. S.—After seeing "Baby Mine" in our screening room I telegraphed and increased the booking from one day to two days. It was a big success and assures the future of Madge Kennedy in Halifax.

Rialto Theater, Lincoln, Neb.—During a blizzard and 12 below zero temperature we played "The Auction Block" to a turnaway. Every exhibitor will do a record-breaking business with this production.

Empire Theater, Sterling, Kan.—Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn" played to a packed house and made money for me.

Columbia Theater, Junction City, Kan. —"The Cinderella Man" pleased all of my patrons and made money for me. It will make hundreds of new friends for me.

Morris Theater, Mankato, Kan. — We doubt if it is possible ever to get another picture that will break the record for patronage established by your special production, "For the Freedom of the World."

George Walsh in the Fox film, "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal."

Strand Theater, Arkansas City, Kan.—"For the Freedom of the World" drew the biggest business of any picture played during my two years of management of this theater.

Lyric Theater, Wymore, Neb.—I have just made the biggest clean-up ever scored by this house with Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus."

Star Theater, Nevada, Mo.—"Polly of the Circus" has just made us more money than any other picture ever played in this theater.

Lyric Theater, Norfolk, Neb.—Broke all house records with "Polly of the Circus." Crowds in line out into the middle of the street for our nine-thirty evening show. A big money-maker for this house.

Strand Theater, Hays, Kan.—The biggest business since the Fourth of July has just been scored for us by your "Polly of the Circus."

Princess Theater, Neodesha, Kan.—The weather here is a fright and the thermometer is way below zero. In spite of this, Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine" has played to the biggest business any picture has brought us in months. This girl is a comer.

Essanay is now producing a series of one-reel comedies featuring the celebrated "Ziegfeld Follies" comedian, Don Barclay. Mr. Barclay, who in his stage career has evolved numerous original characterizations, promises something entirely new for film fans.

Miss Frederick Finishes "La Tosca"

Popularity of Opera and Drawing Power of Famous Players-Lasky Star Expected to Make Film a Success.

THE LAST SCENES OF "LA TOSCA" were taken in the Fifty-Sixth street studios of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation last week and the big settings have been dismantled. This spectacular starring vehicle for Pauline Frederick was finished in good time, no serious circumstances having caused a delay, the exteriors being taken in southern Florida during favorable weather. It is one of the most pretentious photoplays ever produced for Paramount release. The release date has not yet been set.

The title role has provided Miss Frederick with a strenuous and emotional part in which it is claimed that she appears to better advantage than in any of her previous pictures. In fact, the Famous Players Lasky Corporation is so pleased over the results that arrangements have been made to follow this picture with another extraordinary subject with Miss Frederick as the star, to be directed by Edward Jose, the producer of "La Tosca."

"La Tosca," with its intimate scenes of the Vatican and other big edifices and battlements of Rome necessitated the construction of many large and artistic settings and the company traveled thousands of miles to obtain appropriate exterior locations.

The popularity of "La Tosca" as an opera and the publicity given to the pope over his endeavors to bring about peace, together with the well known drawing power of Miss Frederick are expected to make this production eminently successful.

"Within the Cup" Is Ready

Bessie Barriscale's new Paralta-Barriscale play, "Within the Cup," is now complete. It was screened at the Paralta studios last week to the great delight of Miss Barriscale and all who saw it. Its light, scenic effects and elaborate setting show up in remarkable style. The strength of the story, the artistic finish of its portrayal by the actors, Miss Barriscale's own superb acting, and a fine, sustained dramatic interest held throughout will make it appeal to all who see it.

That is not all, however. Raymond B. West, the director, has everywhere included the effects and touches that go to make an unusual picture. The great scene of the bal masque, while vital in the story as well, does more—it is at once a vivid coloring and a subtle delineation of the minds and characters of the eccentric Bohemians that compose it. The crowd there, with their infinite variety of costumes, gives an impression of immensity, as does the great ball room itself and the other massive sets included. In costume and setting alike, as well as the actual work of the actors, character is portrayed.

The film will be released by the W. W. Hoskinson Corporation about the middle of February.

Marguerite Courtot in Edison's super-war picture, "The Unbeliever."

Metro Engages Art Director

Metro pictures henceforth will lead in artistic and correct stage settings if the plans and ideals of Maxwell Karger, supervisor and general manager of the Metro studio, New York City, are realized. Mr. Karger has engaged as art supervisor O'Kane Conwell, a pupil of Mac Monnies, and in her early girlhood also a pupil of James McNeil Whistler. Mr. Conwell will co-operate with E. J. Shulter, technical director, and Ray Smallwood, chief of the camera and photographic departments, under Mr. Karger's supervision.

Sunshine Comedies Please

"Sunshine Comedies," which Henry Lehrman has made for William Fox, are reported to be going big all over the country. A small fortune is said to have been spent in the production of each of these funmakers.

Reviews of Current Film Releases

WRITTEN BY MOTOGRAPHY'S TRAINED MOTION PICTURE REVIEWERS

"Jilted Janet"

Margarita Fischer in American-Mutual Comedy Drama of February 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE girl in this story borrowed the house next door, unknown to its owner, to entertain her former sweetheart and his bride. She did this because this man had jilted her on account of her poverty and she wished him to think she had become rich. Of course, the complications which arise are many. Elizabeth Mahoney is the author of the story, which is a fitting vehicle for Miss Fischer, and Lloyd Ingraham directed it.

Janet learns who the butler is.

The production is up to the standard of the Margarita Fischer series. The star plays in her usual style. Jack Mower appears opposite. David Howard, as her brother, Golda Madden and Edward Peil have important roles. John Gough, Jean Robbins and Fred Smith contribute excellent character bits. The story has some unusual twists and will satisfy the average audience, especially in neighborhood houses.

The Story: Janet Barnes, who is not wealthy, has been jilted by Ernest Morgan, who is mercenary, in favor of Suzette Sparks who has money. In a spirit of pique and mischief, Janet sends a picture postal card to Morgan of a magnificent mansion near her home, belonging to Jules Graham, and asks him how he likes her new home.

Mercedes and Leon, the care-takers of Graham's house, are old friends of Janet's but she does not know Graham, who is away from home. Morgan writes in reply that he and his wife will visit her on their honeymoon, and Janet is thrown into consternation. She persuades the care-takers to lend her the house for a few days in order to deceive Morgan. When the newly married couple arrive she entertains them in regal style, and leads Morgan on to resume his advances to her in order to show up his true nature to his wife. In the meantime, Graham arrives unexpectedly, and learning from Leon the true state of affairs, without revealing his identity to Janet, falls in with her plan and acts as her butler.

Morgan becomes persistent in his love-making, which results in Janet showing him in a ridiculous light by pushing him into an artificial lake, from which he emerges a sorry figure. Janet's action is prompted by her desire to get rid of the couple before Graham arrives, whom she has learned is liable to come back at any moment. She succeeds in getting rid of the newlyweds, but is dumbfounded when she learns that her alleged butler is the real owner of the mansion. Graham has enjoyed the camouflage as much as she has, however, and as punishment sentences her to life imprisonment as mistress of his home and heart.

"Dodging a Million"

Goldwyn Pictures, Starring Mabel Normand. Released January 27. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

MABEL NORMAND is back again and has not lost any of the charm that made her a universal favorite in the pioneer days of filmdom. Those of her admirers who rejoiced in her antics as a roustabout comedienne may be disappointed in her reappearance in that her present vehicle is utterly devoid of the old rough and tumble comedy. The story is classed as mystery-drama and fully lives up to its classification. It is a story of a dresser in a fashionable modiste's shop who is suddenly thrown upon a world of wealth and luxury but is being constantly followed by a mysterious representative of her benefactress. The mysterious one is always turning up at most inopportune moments for the heroine and eventually reports are circulated to the effect that the heroine and her veritable shadow have been working a confidence game. But in the end matters are straightened out and the mysterious one is finally convinced that the heroine is worthy of the bequest left her and completes his mission.

Mabel Normand still retains all of her old-time vivacity and charm and her portrayal of Arabella Flynn is one of the best things she has ever done, considering that heretofore she has been a disciple of the slap-stick brand of comedy. Tom Moore is her affable lover and carries his part with conviction while J. Herbert Frank is the mysterious Don Rodrigues, a very delightful nemesis, if he can be called such. The master hand and mind of George Loane Tucker has evolved a very entertaining and attractive film version of the story written by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy.

The Story: Arabella Flynn is a poor but hard-working dresser in the fashionable Raquin modiste shop and receives a check as part settlement of a bequest left her by an aunt who had lived in South America for years. The check is for the modest sum of $800, but to Arabella this seems a fortune and she proceeds to make the most of it. Reporters learn of the new heiress and when she registers at the St. Rex she is beseiged by a corps of these news mongers with the result that every fashionable dealer in the necessities of life is anxious to cater to her needs. Arabella meets Jack Forsythe, son of a corset king and incidently the laugh of the city, and carries on a very serious affair with him. Don Rodriguez, a mysterious Spainard, is always in evidence, much to the discomfiture of both Arabella and Jack, who soon becomes jealous of the other's attentions.

The clerk in the lawyer's office learns that there has been an error in giving the check to Arabella and at the hotel there is a riot when it is revealed that the supposed heiress is but an imposter. She is beseiged by her creditors and the mysterious Don, who had been following her through all her adventures, is implicated and things look pretty black for Arabella. To make matters worse Jack is convinced that the stranger is more in her life than she had admitted and he prepares to leave town.

But then the lawyer's clerk again turns up and reveals that the check is perfectly correct, except that it should have been made out for a thousand times more than it had been. Jack is called back and Arabella learns that Rodriguez had been commissioned by her aunt to make sure that she is worthy of the fortune left her. The horde of creditors are again the courteous trades-people they had been, Arabella and Jack continue in their love and Don Rodriguez considers his mission fulfilled and leaves for parts unknown.

"Madame Jealousy"

Paramount Picture, Starring Pauline Frederick. Released February 3. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

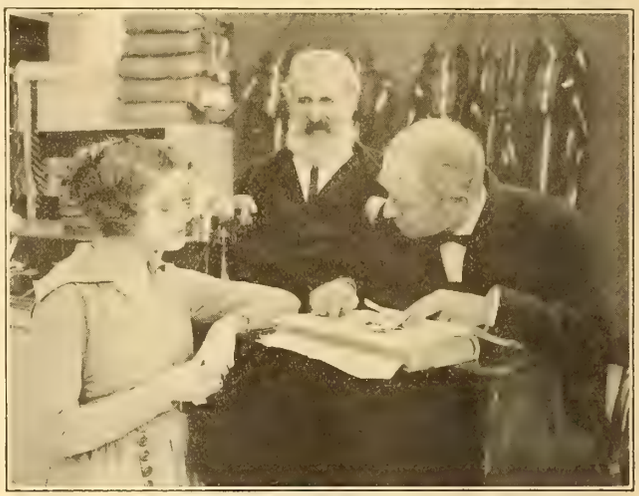
PARAMOUNT has turned to allegory as a fitting vehicle for the supreme siren, Pauline Frederick, and the public will soon see a screen version of the story written by George V. Hobart, who also wrote the far famed stage success "Experience." Madame Jealousy, as it is titled, is a story symbolizing the struggle between passions; spurred on by the insidious Jealousy, Charm and Valor are separated and find companions in Sorrow and Recklessness, but are finally reunited when the new-born Happiness comes to rid the hearts of each of Jealousy.

Miss Frederick again is given opportunity to display her unusual dramatic capabilities and accomplishes another remarkable success. A thoroughly competent supporting cast headed by Thomas Meighan as Valor, Frank Losee as Finance and Elsie McCloud as Charm are convincing in their portrayals and withal the picture is intensely interesting. Those who have seen both "Experience" and "Everywife" will surely want to see this picture for it is but a reincarnation of those stage successes. The scope of the camera is unlimited and many scenes that could not be shown on the stage are accessible to the screen.

Excellent photography has considerable to do with this picture. Many of the numerous camera effects have been executed with precision and bespeaks of the capability of Ned VanBuren, the photographer. Robert Vignola directed and has turned out a very satisfactory and entertaining drama.

The Story: Valor and Charm have been recently married and the fathers of each, Finance and Commerce, rejoice in the connection of the two families. But in her magnificent boudoir Madame Jealousy broods and muses and the words of love spoken by Charm and Valor are as wormwood to her soul. Her handmaiden Mischief is dispatched to Valor's home and whispering words of unfaithfulness to both Charm and Valor returns to Jealousy and reports success.

Charm leaves Valor to return to her father, Commerce, while Valor repeats the quarrel to his father, Finance. Jealousy then takes command and working her way into the minds of both parents causes great destruction. Banks undergo riots; workers in factories go out on strike and Finance and Commerce face ruin. Sorrow becomes the companion of Charm while Valor takes up with Recklessness. In a drunken brawl Valor strikes his father; at the same time Charm falls ill. But then the new-born, Happiness, comes into the lives of all and Jealousy finds no room for herself. So Charm and Valor are brought together and their companions, Sorrow and Recklessness are forgotten. Finance and Commerce see the errors of their ways and all ends happily.



Jealousy broods while Charm and Valor love.

"A Petticoat Pilot"

Paramount-Lasky Picture, Starring Vivian Martin. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

LOVERS of Vivian Martin have a treat in store for them in the most recent picture with that star cast as a little fishermaid. Miss Martin in this picture gives complete and convicting evidence of her exceptional versatility as a screen artist.

A new member in the old company.

Within the space of the usual five reels the star undergoes a change from a girl still in knee length skirts and pig-tail hair to a fashionable and self confident young miss who takes upon her young shoulders a fast failing business and brings it back to life.

Adapted from the story "Mary 'Gusta," by J. C. Lincoln, it is in all a very entertaining vehicle for the star carrying as it does a theme of human appeal throughout. Mary 'Gusta's efforts to educate herself under the supposition that her dead father had left sufficient funds for that purpose and then to discover that her guardians had been weakening their business so as to provide for her, provides many perplexing situations that finally culminate in a manner that should please any very exacting audience.

Theodore Roberts and James Neill head the supporting cast and do their utmost to keep that minute human appeal foremost throughout.

The Story: Mary 'Gusta's father dies and leaves the child in the care of Shad Gould and Zoeth Hamilton, retired sea captains, who have been friends for years. These venerable personages are rather skeptical as to their capability as child raisers, but soon find that the girl is better able to take care of herself and, indeed, of them, too. As the years pass the girl takes active charge of the business established by the old men and realizing that she is no longer a child they take steps to have her sent to a finishing school.

Now quite a young lady Mary meets Crawford Smith, a Harvard student, and a warm friendship emanates from their constant meetings. Mary is invited by a prominent society matron on a tour to Japan and writes to her guardians for their consent and also for an increased allowance, she being under the impression that her tuition was being paid for by a legacy left her by her father. On the eve of departure for Japan Mary learns that her fortune is but a myth and that the business which she had once managed is about to fail. She then realizes her position and returns to her old home. Again she takes hold of the business and soon has it on its feet once more.

Crawford Smith turns up with a letter for Captain Hamilton from an old enemy, Edgar Fuller, who had years before run away with Hamilton's bride. Fuller had lived as Smith and Crawford was his son. Mary sees in Crawford a life-long enemy of her guardians but they cast aside all hatred for the boy and welcome him with open arms and the happiness of Mary 'Gusta is complete.

brothers, each thinking the other the guilty one, are the main characters of the story. And while fear grasps the heart of the weaker one, the other becomes the captain of his soul and in the end both are exonerated.

William Desmond and Charles Gunn are the two brothers, Horace and Henry Boyce; William Desmond, as the older and stronger, Horace, gives a very convincing portrayal, while Charles Gunn, as the weaker, Henry, does very effective work, especially in the scenes where he raves in delirium and fear. Walt Whitman, Jack Richardson and Claire McDowell have other important parts and are entirely acceptable.

Of the interiors the big hotel scene is about the best in some time. The camera work in its entirety is good and worthy of mention. G. P. Hamilton directed.

The Story: Ebenezer Boyce is the owner of the Boyce Automatic Pistol Works and is induced by his sons, Horace and Henry, to give up active management of the business. Martin, representative of eastern profiteers, works his way into the confidence of the company and is made manager. In time, results favorable to the company are not in evidence and old Boyce discovers that Martin had been selling out to the eastern bankers. The exposure kills him and his sons vow to kill Martin for the fraud. Next morning Martin is found dead and each brother suspects the other of the crime and both leave town.

Horace decides to return and face the music but Henry, dissipated and weak, collapses. Horace receives word of his brother's illness and arriving at the hotel in which his brother is confined, meets Myra, daughter of Martin, but unknown to Horace or Henry. Time and careful attention brings Henry back to his normal self and then begins a courtship of Myra by both brothers. Her husband, a scheming scoundrel, having deserted her and having been killed in a railroad wreck, Myra encourages the advances of Horace, but is indifferent toward Henry. In a moment of jealous rage Henry accuses his brother of killing Martin and Myra, astounded with the news, collapses. Mrs. de Searcy, a guest at the hotel and a woman of known blase character, is visably affected by the sudden revelation and calling a conference of the brothers and the girl reveals herself as the murderer of Martin who had deserted her just before his death. Henry sees the errors he has made and leaves Horace and Myra alone in their love.

"Broken Ties"

World Pictures, Starring Montague Love and June Elvidge. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

WORLD Pictures continue in their policy of presenting intense drama and have in this a picture of decided interest. Embodying the passions of love, hatred, jealousy and interspersed with a murder plot unrevealed until the last scene it is surely a picture fulfilling the fondest wishes of the lovers of extreme drama.

Montague Love and June Elvidge are admirable in their roles. Mr. Love especially proves himself a screen artist of no mean ability and ably assisted by Miss Elvidge, adds to his already increasing popularity. Others in the cast include Arthur Ashley, who also directed, Pina Nesbit and Alec Francis, all of whom fulfill their parts acceptably.

The story: Jeffery La Force dies and leaves his daughter in the care of Henry Hasbrook, who has learned of the birth and parentage of the girl. The girl has, however, overheard her dying father's revelation and is astounded to learn that her mother had been a native of the South Sea Islands and that she herself has negro blood in her veins. Time passes and Curtis, nephew and heir of Hasbrook, becomes infatuated with the girl. Fearing lest his nephew marry the girl, Hasbrook exacts a promise from Curtis not to see her again. Curtis meets Fleming, a prominent lawyer, and is invited to his home. There he meets Fleming's wife. Neglected because of her husband's extreme devotion to his work, Mrs. Fleming takes up with Curtis and when she takes some money belonging to a client of her husband, Curtis replenishes the shortage from his own pocket.

Mrs. Fleming accepts an invitation and ostensibly on her way to Curtis' apartment she meets him and they go to a roadhouse.

Fleming's mother has heard the conversation between her daughter-in-law and the other man and to protect the family name she gets to the Curtis apartment and there finds Hasbrook dead. Her hands become stained with blood and she wipes them on her coat. In the meantime Curtis and Mrs. Fleming are at the roadhouse and drinking heavily. He insults her and she strikes his hand with a bottle and escapes.

Next morning comes the report of the murder and Fleming reads that Curtis has been arrested, having shown up at the club with his hands stained with blood. Mother and wife attempt to hide their fears and when Fleming discovers that his wife is the woman implicated, she exposes his mother whom she had discovered attempting to burn the blood stained coat. All are brought to the office of the district attorney and Fleming is about to bring in the name of his wife, but is prevented by Curtis who takes all blame. This statement is refuted by his former fiance from whom he had been estranged because of his uncle's objections. The girl reveals herself as the murderer and with the same knife she killed Hasbrook, she kills herself, vindicating Curtis and reuniting Fleming and his wife.

Confronted with evidence of her duplicity.

Vitagraph Serial, Episode No. 8, The Mountain of Devastation, Starring William Duncan and Carol Holloway. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

THIS is by far one of the most exciting episodes of the serial. Some new stunts are tried and nearly end disastrously for Blake and his wife. Picture if you can a huge rock that is tumbled over the side of a precipice and smashes to bits a very comfortable and pretentious looking bungalow. This is how it happens.

In the last episode Blake has been caught in a wolf trap set by the outlaws and is set upon by a horde of wolves but is rescued by the sheriff and taken to a cabin among the rocks wherein lives an eastern doctor vacationing in the West. Blake is left in the doctor's care and the sheriff goes after the outlaws. Next day Blake is able to get about and sees the outlaws surrounding the cabin. His wife escapes from the outlaws and once again together they proceed to hold the outlaws at bay. The doctor is out on a hunting trip and sees on a cliff in the rear of his cabin two men working with a giant jack screw to push a huge rock down on the cabin. Shots warn Blake and his wife and they escape none too soon for the mass of rock come tumbling over on top of the house crushing it to smithereens. Blake and his wife are being chased by the outlaws who see the miscarrying of their evil plans and arranging a pulley carriage on a cable stretched across a deep gorge, the two ride this hurriedly constructed vehicle and when half way across the cable is cut by the outlaws and this time both Blake and his wife are precipitated to the unknown depths below.

"The Hired Man"

CHARLES RAY again portrays a country boy, but this time he stays in the country. A story genuinely differing from what he has had to work on in the past is furnished and proves excellent material for the star.

As Ezry Hollins, a country youth, who has been struggling for years to save enough money so that he could better his meagre education, Ray gives an entirely human touch to his work. The pungent odor of the "down east" farm literally emanates from each scene. There is an old-time barn dance with the farmers slyly imbibing probably too much of the fresh country cider and the young folks galavanting around the floor while the staid and quiet country wives babble among themselves. This gives quite a bit of the real back home on the farm atmosphere and is a sight that brings memories of the days gone by.

Good photography, excellent direction and capable work by the cast makes this one of the most interesting of the Ray subjects. Doris Lee again is presented in support of the star and her countenance is a very pleasing addition to the ranks of film beauties.

The hired man and the boss' daughter.

The Story: Ezry Hollins has long cherished a secret desire to educate himself and for many years has labored as a hired man on Farmer Endicott's farm. His good nature and ever ready helpfulness makes him a favorite among the men and this is recognized by Ruth, the farmer's daughter. She learns of Ezry's ambitions and, herself a college girl, she helps him and he passes the examinations for college. In the meantime Ruth's brother, Walter, has fallen into bad company and heavily in debt, embezzles some of the bank's money. Ezry steps in to say goodby and Walter pleading with him for assistance induces Ezry to turn over his savings to him. His great ambitions wrecked, Ezry returns to the farm to the amazement of every one and refuses to explain his change of mind.

Ruth, however, still believes in him and one night seeing a light in his window goes to his room. Endicott discovers the two and fires Ezry. Not willing to wait until morning to leave Ezry bids Ruth goodby and starts out that night. But fate takes a hand.

Walter returns home drunk and carelessly drops a match. A fire immediately envelopes the entire house in flames. Ezry, not far away, sees the smoke and returns. Endicott, his wife and Ruth are safe but Walter cannot be found, Ezry unmindful of the danger rushes upstairs through the flames and finds Walter unconscious and brings him out safely. Walter explains his part in the changing of Ezry's fortunes and Farmer Endicott realizes that his hired man had sacrificed himself for the family.

"'Flare-Up' Sal"

Paramount Picture, Starring Dorothy Dalton. Released January 27. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THOMAS INCE has taken the gold rush of the early fifties as the basis of his most recent picture, with Dorothy Dalton as the star, and has produced another very entertaining story. The plot of the story is not a complicated one but is nevertheless a pleasing subject; pictures have been produced based on a similar outline and have proved satisfactory. The main character is Sal, an adopted child of one of the many prospectors who were carried away with hopes of an immediate accumulation of wealth. There enters into the plot a daring hold-up man of that period who is being constantly hunted because of his lawlessness and his empty existence brings about a strange turn of affairs. The mere thought of a road agent attempting an impersonation of a parson and then carrying the bluff so far as to attempt to rejuvenate Sal is, to say the least, ludicrous. But it finally works out complacently and Sal leaves with her daring admirer.

Dorothy Dalton has a role somewhat different from her most recent characters and fills the part very satisfactorily. Thurston Hall makes a very manly hold-up man and is equally as good in the garb of the preacher. William Conklin and J. P. Lockney complete the cast of principals and do very effective work.

The Story: Sal earns the soubriquet of Flare-up when she is accosted by Dandy Dave, owner of the dance hall and saloon to which she goes in search of her guardian. He loses his outfit at cards and Sal to win it back for him plays with Dave with herself as the prize. She loses and becomes the chief attraction of the hall, her impromptu dancing having elicited much applause.

The coach comes in with news of the hold-up by the Red Rider, an unknown character, who had been terrorizing the neighborhood for some time. Next day the new parson comes to town and meets Sal and incurs the enmity of Dave. Sal is attracted by his manliness and attends one of the prayer meetings but scurrilous remarks by members of the congregation bring about an avowal to run the minister out of town. Dandy Dave and his cohorts from the saloon get Sal out of the parish house and plan the ruin of the "sky-pilot." He is lured to Sal's room but there suspicion lurks in her mind that he is not an "honest to God preacher." He evasively replies when she puts the question to him and she undergoes a change of heart; she tells him that members of the parish have been informed by Dave that their parson is with the notorious Sal and assists him to escape. When Dave breaks in with the parishioners the parson is nowhere to be found and Dave is furious. That night the daring Red Rider holds up the saloon and Sal recognizes him as the preacher. When one of the men takes a shot at him Sal pulls a gun and kills the fellow and shoots out the lights. The Red Rider and Sal together, he reveals his identity and they go to his cabin where they are married by the real minister whom the Red Rider had kidnapped.

"Real Folks"

Triangle Play, Starring Barney Sherry. Released February 10. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein.

RECENTLY the Triangle Company announced that they would conduct a campaign for stories to be used for screen purposes. "Real Folks" is the result and the story in screen form is with few exceptions one of the most interesting Triangle releases within the past month. Probably time-worn in theme yet very cleverly picturized "Real Folks" is a study of human nature in its extremes, wealth and poverty. A western farmer becomes a millionaire literally over night and his efforts to bring his wife and son up to the standard set by wealth and society produce many humorous situations that are very true to life.

Interspersed is a love plot that in a way promises to upset the plans of the ambitious father but in the end he sees his error and is reconciled to his fate. Barney Sherry has been entrusted with one of the best character roles he has had in some time. As Pat Dugan, the lowly farmer, who strikes sudden riches, he gives an entirely human interpretation and is ably assisted in his work by Francis McDonald, as his erring son, and Alberta Lee, as his dutiful spouse.

The Story: Pat Dugan discovers oil on his farm and acquires sudden riches. He aspires to lofty positions in the social world and sends his son to an eastern college. His contented wife is free from aspirations and regrets that money has at last affected the man who for so many years was contented with little luxury.

Jimmy, the son, has a very eventful first day at college; he gets into a fight with three wealthy but snobby students and whips them; then takes on the college policeman and beats him up. The first day at college also becomes the last and Jimmy goes into the flower and plant nursery business. His father learns of his being expelled from college and hurries East but Jimmy has dropped from sight. Pat Dugan takes a palatial home on Long Island and waits for his son to turn up; Jimmy comes around the next day togged out in laborers clothes and is welcomed home and meets Joyce Clifton, who is living with her benefactress in the home next to his parents. A strong friendship soon becomes mutual love and despite the fact that Joyce is but a dancing teacher Jimmy proposes. His father is furious, having planned a marriage with the daughter of a business associate and still harbors social aspirations. But Jimmy leaves home, meets Joyce in the city and they are married.

His wealth not having gotten him anywhere Pat Dugan gives up and is ready to return to his life as a real person. Jimmy and his bride are welcomed home and the Dugan family are real folks again.

"The Other Man"

Vitagraph-Blue Ribbon Feature, Starring Harry Morey. Released February 4. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

A RATHER complicated affair is this latest Vitagraph feature with Harry Morey, the leading player. In all it is a case of hidden identity and finally works out to a pleasing conclusion. Relying upon the fact that the love of a woman brings out the best in the man, Director Paul Scardon has turned out a rather interesting study of human nature. A wife's unfaithfulness is the direct cause of the man's fall, but the unselfish and patient love of a good woman brings about the rejuvination and the story cleverly portrays the results forthcoming from the double deception that is carried out to the very end.

Harry Morey is first a prosperous and prominent surgeon and then declines to a position as personal bodyguard to a political boss in the underworld of a big city; later to rise to his former position in the medical and social worlds. He is ably assisted by Grace Darmond and Florence Deshon, the former as his benefactress and the latter as his unfaithful wife.

The story: John Stedman leaves his wife and home when he discovers her in the apartment of his supposed friend and after a year of dissipation is but a wreck of his former self. He still harbors his genius for medicine and ingratiates himself in the good graces of a ward boss who fears assassination at the hands of the rival party gangmen. Stedman carries the alias of Martin West and under that incognito meets Dorothy Harmon, a society favorite, who had made a bet that she could live in the slums for a month with only five dollars in her pocket. West, as he has become known, takes the girl to his boarding house and there the girl gets work as a waitress.

Time passes rapidly and a strong friendship springs up between the girl and the man. She learns of his aspirations and as she has won her bet she decides to have her winnings turned over to West to help him re-establish his practice. As she has also hidden her real identity under an alias, West is none the wiser and leaves the city. The girl returns to her home and pangs of lonesomeness strike her heart.

Months pass and while at the seashore her aunt is stricken and the eminent surgeon Doctor Stedman is sent for. His face now covered by a full beard the girl does not recognize him and to try her love for the man known as West, Dr. Stedman lays court to her. To add complications to the plot the former Mrs. Stedman happens in on the scene, but she is unable to keep him with her. Dorothy announces that she loves West and leaves a note stating that she is going to look for him. Stedman gets to the old boarding house first, and shorn of his beard, is ready to take Dorothy in his arms. A hurried marriage is arranged, real identities are revealed and all ends happily.

Foil Plot to Steal Chaplin Plans

An attempt to steal the plot and plans for several of the scenes of Charlie Chaplin's initial First National Exhibitors' Circuit production was foiled last week when the comedian detected a man and a woman engaged in spy work at the new Chaplin plant in Hollywood.

Eight sketches of the completed "sets" and a book containing stenographic notes explanatory of portions of the story were rescued. The spies had even taken the trouble to make notations of the various characters surrounding Chaplin and had also carefully recorded descriptions of the various costumes used.

Due to the uncovering of the plot a new rule has been established at the Chaplin plant, prohibiting the admittance of any outsiders during the hours in which the star is engaged before the camera.

Solution of Projection Problems

HOW TO OBTAIN THE BEST RESULTS DESCRIBED IN DETAIL

Motography Gets Projection Expert

J. Wesley Smith of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company to Answer All Questions Regarding Machines and Their Operation

MOTOGRAPHY has obtained the services of J. Wesley Smith of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., of Chicago, for the answering of all questions in regard to projection. Mr. Smith is a recognized authority.

Exhibitors and all others in the trade are invited to avail themselves of the aid MOTOGRAPHY offers. Questions will be answered as quickly as possible and always with the thought of economy in mind.

Appended are the first questions brought to Mr. Smith's attention and the answers:

Q.—We contemplate opening a picture show here to run two nights a week, and have in view a second hand Motiograph Model 1 A. As we have no current in our town, we have also in view a dynamo and engine combined. The dynamo is stamped 60 v.—67 amp.—1,100 R. M. P. The resistance unit with the machine is a rheostat, which is supplied by the manufacturers with the machine. Will this dynamo, under perfect conditions, furnish sufficient "juice" to handle the arc properly? What sized carbons would you advise with an outfit of this sort, cored or solid? Will we have to use 60 v. lamps for illuminating the auditorium or will 110 v. do? How do we have to pay our seat revenue? We will charge 15 cents admission and show two or three times a week. I hope our questions are not too ridiculous, as we are novices at this business. Will you be so kind as to enlighten us on this subject?

A.—The dynamo, under perfect working conditions, provided the throw is not too long or the picture too large, will operate both the lights and arc. However, the rheostat is probably a field one and will not do for the arc. You will have to have a 60-volt rheostat in series with the arc in order to run the lights. I would advise that you use a half-inch solid carbon on bottom and five-eighths inch cored carbon on top. The war tax is two cents on each fifteen-cent ticket sold. If you will give me a little more information regarding the throw, size of picture, etc., I will be able to answer you more fully.

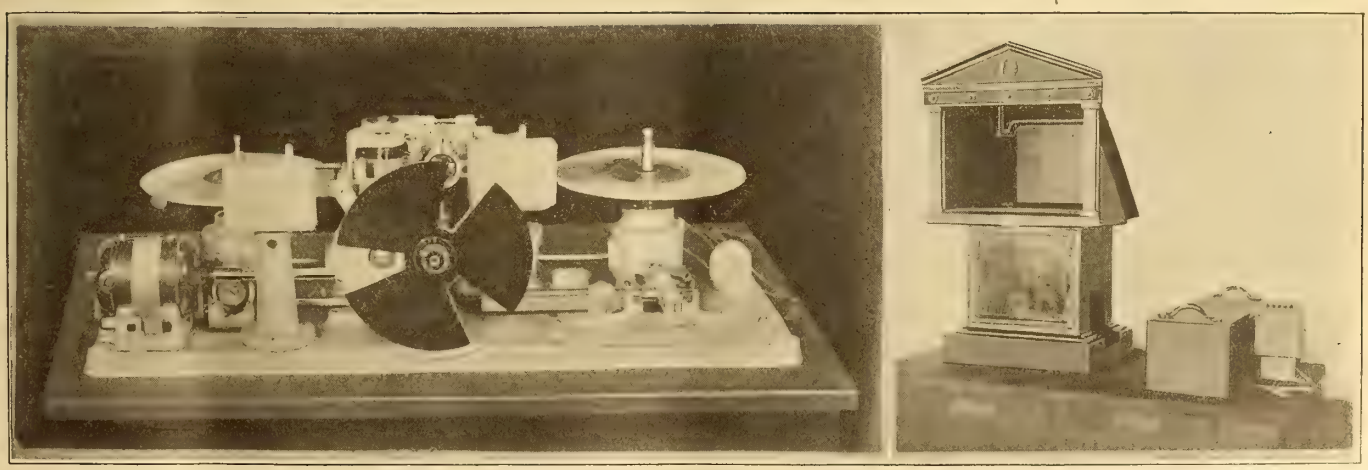
Q.—We have a strike on at the powerhouse, which probably will be settled in a short time, but we have to pay ten cents per KW., which is too high. Can a projection machine be successfully run with a small gasoline-driven generator? Please give me all the information you can and suggest the best type of outfit suitable for this purpose.

A.—A projection machine can be successfully run with a gasoline-driven generator. The outfit will have to be of the best to assure a steady light at the arc. J. H. Hallberg, New York City, the United Theater Equipment Co., New York City, or the Dayton Electric Laboratories Co., Dayton, Ohio, will be able to supply your needs.

Q.—Lately we have been having trouble with unsteady pictures; that is, the pictures move up and down on the screen. Can you tell me what the trouble is?

A.—If the movement is regular, the trouble will be found in the intermittent and is probably due to (1) intermittent sprocket shaft sprung, (2) sprocket loose on shaft, (3) sprocket not true, (4) dirty sprocket. However, the motion may be in the camera or the printing machine, but the chances are it is in the projector.

Q.—It seems impossible to get the entire picture in focus at the same time. If the center of the picture is sharp, the edges are inclined to be fuzzy, and vice versa. Will you please tell me where the trouble is.



A.—This is not an uncommon thing and may be caused by (1) lens combination loose, (2) oil on lense, (3) tension on gate too loose and allows the film to curl, (4) green film, that is, film which has been printed and developed but a very short time before you received it and has not had sufficient time to flatten. You will probably find your trouble is with a dirty or loose lens or with the tension on the gate.

Bring Out New Machine

Its operation is entirely automatic. After the reel is run through it is quickly rewound and then displayed again, so that after the machine is arranged and started it will continue to operate indefinitely with no further attention.

The outfit consists of two separate parts, the machine and a miniature theater in which the pictures are displayed

"Split Reel" Notes For Theater Men

SNAPPY ITEMS OF INTEREST TO OWNERS AND MANAGERS

EVIDENCE is accumulating that the theatrical world had firm faith in the future. In the last week many new companies have been launched. In New York state nine new companies were chartered with an aggregate capital of $147,750. All of the companies will do business in New York City. The companies, with their capital, their objects and their officials, are as follows:

Associated Novelists' Distributing Corporation. To produce, exchange and operate motion picture films, machines and devices used in the business. Capital $100,000. Directors, Charles A. Weeks, James A. Abbott and James R. Garrett.

Garden Film Corporation. To operate theaters for theatrical and motion picture purposes, also to deal in apparatus and equipment for motion picture business. Capital, $1,500.

Two new companies have been formed in Cincinnati. One is the Cincinnati-Columbus Amusement Company and the other is the Inter-City First National Exhibitors' Company. Both are capitalized for $10,000 and I. Libson, one of Cincinnati's most prominent exhibitors, has a large interest in each company. The Inter-City First National Exhibitors' Company is to handle the franchises of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, which controls Charlie Chaplin, Petrova, Brenon and other big features in Cincinnati, Hamilton, Dayton and Columbus.

Exhibitors at Knoxville, Tenn., are anxiously awaiting a decision in the circuit court there that may determine definitely whether or not they can keep open on Sundays. Several exhibitors were arrested when they kept open, but they were released by Judge Lanier, who held they had a legal right to do so, under a ruling by City Attorney Livingston, providing they gave their profits to charity. The city appealed the cases and Mayor Litty said the forthcoming decision would be final so far as the city was concerned.

A serious panic was narrowly averted at the Strand Theater in Washington, D. C., by the presence of mind of Bob Burchard, assistant operator. When a roll of film ignited, Burchard, who was in the operating room alone, closed the fireproof door and extinguished the blaze by himself. The audience was unaware of anything unusual until an explanation was made from the stage.

Special slides have been sent to every moving picture theater in Canada from the office of the food controller at Ottawa. The slides bear messages relative to the necessity of conservation and for increase in the production of foodstuffs. It is officially estimated that they will be seen by no less than 1,750,000 people in one week. There are only 7,000,000 people in Canada. Thus one-fourth of the population go to the movies every week.

The Garden Theater, a new house in Charleston, S. C., was opened to the public a week ago with Emily Stevens in "The Slacker." The lobby was filled with flowers from friends of the owners, the Pastime Theater company. The theater is considered one of the most beautiful in the south. Charles E. Forbes is the manager. Albert Sottile is president of the Pastime company.

Delaware has issued a charter to Lincoln Pictures Classic, Inc., which has been organized to manufacture films. The capital stock is $1,000,000. The incorporators are C. L. Bimlinger, M. M. Clancy, both of Wilmington, Del., and Clement M. Egner, Elkton, Md.

W. K. Atkinson has taken charge of the Valway and Strand theaters at Valdosta, Ga., succeeding R. W. Tyson. Mr. Atkinson came from Thomasville, where he was part owner and manager of two houses. Mr. Tyson has gone to Atlanta to enter the exchange business.

Change Release Dates

Because of the factory closing order of the fuel administration, Pathe announces a change in release dates for the one reel Harold Lloyd comedies.

Beginning with February 17 the Lloyd comedies will be released weekly, the first to be "Hit Him Again," followed on February 24 with "Beat It" and on March 3 with "A Gasoline Wedding."

Pathe announces a change in the release dates of the new Toto comedies. "The Junk Man" is postponed from February 10 to February 17. From February 17 on one of these two-reel comedies will be released each week. "Fare Please" will be released on March 17 and "A One Night Stand" on April 14.

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE DEVELOPMENTS IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Big War Secret Revealed by Film

IN THE SIXTH EPISODE of "The Eagle's Eye," the new Wharton secret service serial, Chief Flynn makes a most important revelation—how Dr. Heinrich Albert, the fiscal attache of the Imperial German Embassy at Washington, "lost" his famous brown portfolio containing the secrets of alien propaganda in this country.

How Dr. Albert lost his portfolio and into whose hands it originally fell have long been a mystery and a source of great interest to every chancellory in Europe, so important were the revelations that followed, both to the American and Allied governments.

The real story is that Dr. Albert lost his portfolio on a Sixth avenue elevated train.

Just a few days ago Leopold Wharton, assisted by D. H. Turner, photographed every incident connected with its loss.

The management of the elevated system gave Mr. Wharton a train of five cars, running it as he requested from Rector to One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street. During the run several stops were made. This is said to be the first instance of an elevated train being used to make a picture.

Dr. Albert came to this country as an Imperial German promoter of propaganda. Very soon after the beginning of the war he made his presence apparent. His hand was seen in a mysterious campaign to create public opinion against England and France, and adverse to America entering into the war, no matter what provocation the Imperial German Government might offer.

Provided with an unlimited amount of money, he established news bureaus, employed special writers and subsidized many publications, which became very energetic disseminators of pro-German publicity.

Wherever he went he always carried a brown portfolio under his arm. There were many secret service agents, both American and foreign, who were curious to know what that brown portfolio contained and constant watch was kept on him in the hope that an opportunity might occur to gain possession of it.

On the afternoon of July 24, 1915, the chance happened and Dr. Albert lost his brown portfolio on the Sixth avenue train.

The first intimation that anyone had that it had given up its secrets, outside a small official circle, came through the publication of a part of the papers in the New York dailies.

The day following the loss of the portfolio Dr. Albert offered a reward of $25 for its return. He, or his government, would gladly have paid $100,000, but he evidently thought it might have fallen into the hands of someone who did not appreciate its importance, or else that a large reward would incite too much interest.

The effect of acquiring Dr. Albert's papers was a revelation that created a sensation throughout the world and showed in a most startling way one angle of the insidious working of the Imperial German Government's war machine in this country.

Up to within a short time ago it was believed that Dr. Albert's papers were acquired by an English secret service agent who had been shadowing him. The fact is that the English secret service intelligence bureau in this country knew nothing about the incident till a part of the documents were published in New York.

The sixth episode of "The Eagle's Eye," which deals with Dr. Albert, will be called "The Brown Portfolio," and will be one of the most interesting and sensational of the twenty in which this production will be presented.

"Blood of His Fathers" Sold

Through David Russell, sales representative of David Horsley, a sale was made for the United States rights to the Crane Wilbur subject, "Blood of His Fathers," to the Sterling Pictures Corporation.

This is an unusual six-reel subject that gives Mr. Wilbur a good opportunity to display his versatility. In the opening reel he gives a realistic portrayal of a Civil War incident that revolves around a Southern mansion during a raid by guerrillas. The balance of the story is brought up to date and dwells upon a heritage of hate and passion that the Civil War incident brought to generations that followed.

A ruthless raider of the war period, now an old man bent and decrepit, is compelled to see in his progeny the results of the extremes that his wild nature brought about. Action, quick-moving incidents and thrilling heart-interest that holds and sways, characterizes the story from start to finish.

The Sterling Pictures Corporation announces that it will be sold to the independent exchanges of the United States "along the usual lines of the Sterling System" and that already responses have been made that indicate quick sales.

Sales by W. H. Productions

The W. H. Productions Company announces the following sales:

The rights to William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," six reels, to McMahon & Jackson, Cincinnati, for Kentucky.

The rights to William S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher," five reels, to McMahon & Jackson, Cincinnati, for Kentucky.

The rights to William S. Hart in "The Hell Hound of Alaska" five reels, to McMahon & Jackson, Cincinnati, for Kentucky.

The rights to twenty-eight W. H. Productions Company two-reel Keystone Comedies, to the Greater Features Company, Seattle, for Washington, Idaho, Montana and Oregon.

The rights of the same comedies to McMahon & Jackson, Cincinnati, for Ohio and Kentucky.

Finds Coast Business Good

William Steiner, head of the Jester Comedy Company, who is now on the Pacific Coast giving screenings of the first two Jester comedies, "The Recruits" and "His Golden Romance," sends in encouraging reports of conditions up and down the Pacific.

He writes that "the cry of inactivity on the part of the film producers has evidently been started by a few of the new comers in the field who are having a hard time of it."

All the regulars are busy as bees, he says, and hard at work on some wonderful productions for spring release.

The exhibitors in this territory are in a flourishing state, Mr. Steiner asserts, and are using the best that the market affords.

Mr. Steiner has been successful on his tour. He has signed up for nearly all the territory from New York State to the Coast, and is now planning an invasion of the South.

New Form of "Close-Up"

The Whartons displayed a new feature in photography at the recent trade showing of "The Eagle's Eye" at the Strand Theater, New York City, in what they described as "the triple iris"—three diaphragms opening at once and disclosing three characters and then fading and showing a scene in which these characters appear in action.

Now The Whartons announce a new form of "close-up" which will be made a feature of the photography of a later episode in "The Eagle's Eye." It is said that this new form of "close-up" will revolutionize the manner of making and give them more power in expression, more dramatic strength and more purpose.

The innovation was originated by "Ted" Wharton, who is closely guarding his method. He believes it a new idea of great value and until it has actually been presented in "The Eagle's Eye," only the head of the Wharton photographic department and himself will know how the effect is attained. Mr. Wharton also has another new effect which will be shown in one of the final episodes.

"Public Defender" Sales

Renowned Pictures Corporation announces the following sales on Harry Raver's production of Mayer Goldman's book, "The Public Defender":

Thomas Dixon, Jr., noted author, who has just signed with the Mastercraft Photoplays for the reproduction of all his future works.

New York State—Walter E. Greene for Modern Feature Film Company.

New England—Hiram Abrams, for Boston Photoplay Company.

California, Arizona and Nevada—Turner and Dahnken, franchise holders in the First National Exhibitors' circuit.

Illinois and Indiana—Doll-Van Company.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota—Thomas Hamlin.

Canada—Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, Montreal.

Stellar roles in this production are taken by Robert Edeson, Frank Keenan and Alma Hanlon.

Open Branch Office

The Specialty Film Company of San Antonio, which has obtained the rights to the two W. H. Productions Company superfeature productions, "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," and twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett Comedies for Texas and Arkansas, has established a branch office at Dallas to exploit these productions.

W. G. Underwood will be in charge of the exchange. He says he sees vast possibilities and earning powers in the Hart Features. Though the pictures have not been released, the company now has more than $10,000 worth of bona fide contracts.

New Jester Sales

The following new sales on Jester Comedies have been reported:

For Northern Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Alaska—A. Rosenthal, Seattle.

For Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah and Southern Idaho—Swanson-Nolan Supply Co., Denver.

For California—The Western F. F. Co., San Francisco.

Only southern territory is open now.

Shipman Announces Sales

Ernest Shipman of New York announces the following sales on "Shorty Hamilton": New York City and state, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Oklahoma and other southern territory.

Mr. Shipman has just returned to his offices after being ill for two weeks at his home.

Re-enters Exchange Business

Ben Title, proprietor of the T. N. F. Theater, Flatbush, Brooklyn, and formerly of the Imperial Film Exchange, has gone back into the exchange business. He has opened offices at 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City, and will handle Jester comedies for the state of New York.

Refuse to Pay Tuesday Film Rentals

Exhibitors Take Ground They Are Not Responsible for Closing, Therefore Should Not Have to Stand Loss

A COMBINATION CONVENTION and banquet of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Exhibitors' Leagues took place at Boston the other day, with a large number of members participating in the elections and discussions.

Michael J. Lyndon of Dorchester, Mass., was elected to the presidency of the New England exhibitors, the vote being made unanimous.

Much discussion of war problems took place, but at the end of the meeting united support of the President and of the administration's war policies and measures was pledged.

At the same time the plan of direct dealing between exhibitors and producers, first put forward at Washington by a group of independent manufacturers, was gone into at length, and a committee of three was appointed to look further into the matter.

With regard to the question of payment of film rentals on Garfield Tuesdays, it was decided that the exhibitors should refuse to pay, basing their position on the ground that the theater owner had no voice in the Tuesday closing, and was therefore not responsible.

A canvass of the distributing offices in Boston brings to light the fact that most of them are disposed to deal fairly with the exhibitor. Little trouble over the payments is expected.

The meeting also upheld the right of the individual members to deal with their employes as best suited them in the matter of the closed Tuesdays.

The banquet which followed the meeting was largely attended. The new president, Mr. Lyndon, made a patriotic speech, and also pledged himself to organize a 100 per cent association, if the proper help is furnished him. Mr. Lyndon was followed by Rose E. Tapley, special Paramount representative, who was the guest of honor.

Other speakers were: Alfred S. Black, president of the Maine branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America; Joseph Mack, former leader of the Massachusetts organization, and now manager of the Rialto Theater, Brockton. Mass.; Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, Marion Brazier Howard of the Boston Film Club; George F. Washburn, Frank J. Howard, Harry Asher, manager of Paramount in New England; Samuel Grant, Nathan Gordon and Mrs. M. J. Lyndon.

Keep Open Tuesdays

The Tennessee fuel administration has given a ruling that permits theaters to remain open Tuesdays if they use wood for fuel. It is reported that practically every house is doing this and as a result business conditions are all that could be wished for.

Exit Luminous Paint—Enter Carbide!

New York House Gets Around Lightless Nights by Finding Something Not Under the Ban

FROM the inky blackness of what was formerly New York's famous White Way before the days of fuel administrators and coal shortages, there emerged last Sunday night a ray of light.

It cut through the famed thoroughfare over the surface cars and the heads of the women conductors and concentrated the illumination of 30,000 candles on the sign of the Broadway Theater on the opposite side of the street, lighting up with sufficient brilliancy to be seen for many blocks the sign of the famous old theater and giving it the distinction of having the only illuminated sign of Broadway without violating the orders of the fuel administrator to conserve gas and electricity.

A Carbide White Way now becomes a possibility and acetylene gas makes a bid to guide the city theatergoer to his destination or the late and happy diner to his subway or his taxi.

The Broadway Theater, of which Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is lessee, utilized three acetylene Milburn lights of 10,000 candle power each to illuminate its front and the signs that were previously using electricity. The Milburn lights were thrown upon the signs like three searchlights.

Monday the lights were dark on police advice that they violated the law. Tuesday they were dark by law. Wednesday the police decided that acetylene and carbide had not been prohibited.

So "Harry Carey in 'The Phantom Riders'" is now blazing brightly at the Broadway and will continue to do so indefinitely—at an expense of thirty cents an hour.

Seek to Open Sundays

A delegation of exhibitors called on Mayor James Watt of Albany, N. Y., a few days ago, and requested permission to give shows on Sundays.

Mayor Watt pointed out that under the law as interpreted by one division of the Appellate Division, Sunday shows are not allowed and that he has no power to permit them, regardless of his personal views.

February 28 has been set for arguments to be heard by the Court of Appeals in a test case on the legality of Sunday performances.

Fills House by Use of "Telegrams"

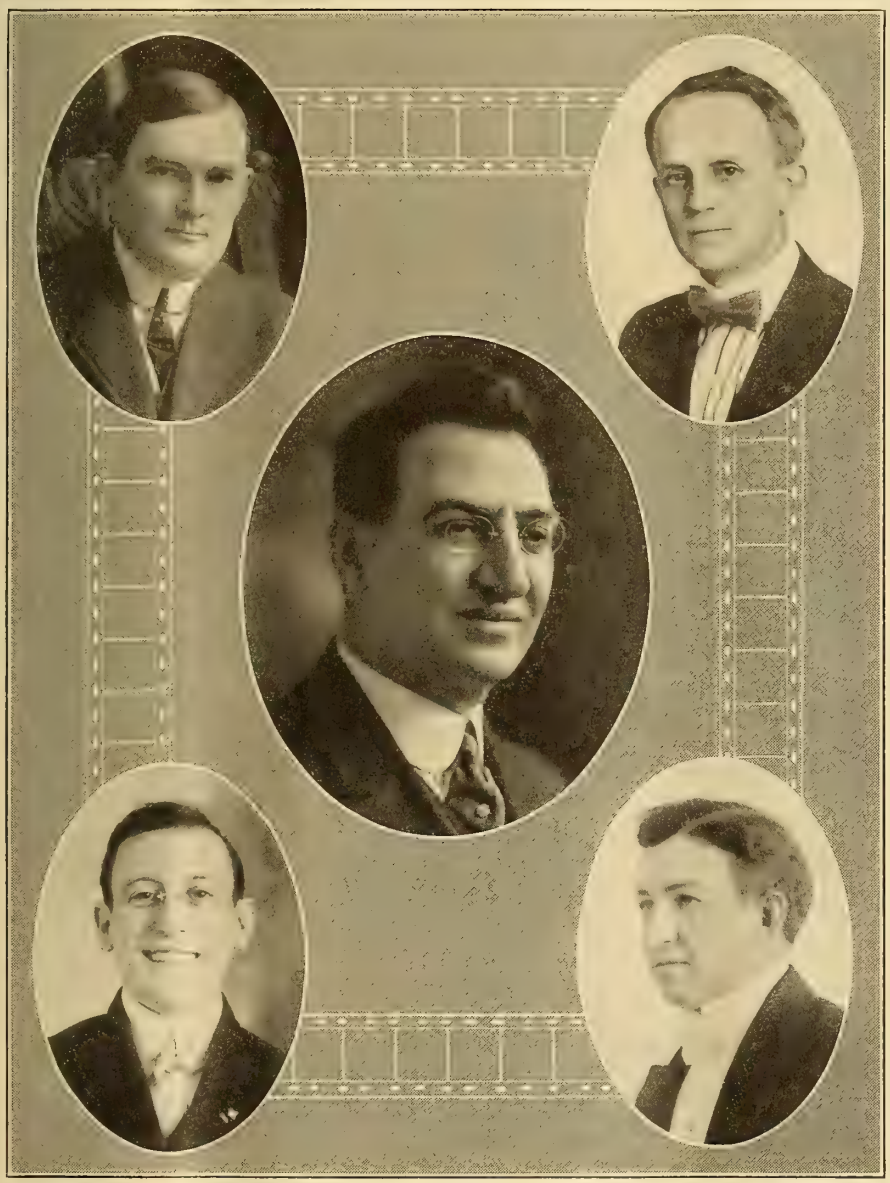
Manager King of Bijou in Brunswick, Ga., Uses Novel Publicity Scheme for "Baby Mine"

"BABY MINE" registered a decided hit last week at the Bijou Theater, Brunswick, Ga.; and for three good reasons: First, because it is "Baby Mine;" second, because of the charm of Madge Kennedy, and third—what proved to be an even more important factor—an enterprising showman's ingenious way of getting the prepossessing Goldwyn star in direct and swift touch with Brunswick's motion picture devotees via "wire."

Manager H. M. King, Jr., whose penchant for original publicity stunts has time and again enlivened motion picture circles in his city, had intended to send to all Brunswick playgoers telegrams signed Madge Kennedy asking them to come and see her at the Bijou. But a conscientious Western Union official frustrated this plan. Nothing daunted, Mr. King got out his own "telegrams."

Here's the telegram. It stirred all Brunswick and kept the Bijou thronged during the entire engagement:

SOUTHEASTERN TELEGRAM
BRUNSWICK, JANUARY 17



DON'T FAIL TO SEE ME AT MY BEST TODAY AT BIJOU IN BABY MINE. MOST AMUSING COMEDY DRAMA EVER ARRANGED FOR THE SCREEN.
MADGE KENNEDY

On the morning before the opening, Mr. King assembled forty boys at the theater and after instructing them in detail sent them to distribute the "telegrams." Before nightfall the Bijou manager had 3,000 signed receipts.

"It got by without being detected until read in almost every instance," said Mr. King. "It was therefore a direct appeal and the result was most gratifying."

Ever on the alert, Mr. King is now paving the way for the engagement of "Thais," starring Mary Garden, by distributing little envelopes containing Mary Garden sachet at the theater and from several of Brunswick's big stores.

"Intelligent advertising is the life of this business," declares Mr. King.

Crandall Gets New House

In addition to the Metropolitan Theater at Washington, D. C., Harry M. Crandall, B. and R. W. Bulkley and A. E. Beitzell have bought outright the new Knickerbocker at Eighteenth street and Columbia road, Tucker K. Sands, Fred S. Swindell and A. Muehleisen relinquishing their interests. The Knickerbocker will be conducted as one of the Crandall chain.

"The addition of the Knickerbocker and Metropolitan theaters augments and properly cements the Crandall circuit," said Mr. Crandall, "and gives me one of the strongest chains of motion picture houses in the country. Each and every one of these theaters is a represenative house and is absolutely owned by myself and my associates. The Crandall Theater Company is not a mere booking organization; it absolutely controls every house booked by it.

"The Metropolitan, the Knickerbocker and Crandall's give me three fine first class first run theaters, enabling me to stage and play any motion picture production, no matter how mammoth it might be, and in the various neighborhoods of the city I control the largest and finest theaters in the Savoy, the Avenue Grand, the Apollo and the American."

In addition to his duties as managing director and president of Crandall's circuit, Mr. Crandall finds time to take an active interest in film affairs generally. He is president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, director of the American Exhibitors' Association of New York, district chairman of the National War Co-operation Commission recently established by President Wilson, president of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Washington, and is interested in the recently formed Allied Exhibitors' Circuit.

The Song of Songs—(Five Reels)—February 11.—Starring Elsie Ferguson as Lily Kardee in a picture version of Edward Sheldon's famous play which was founded on a story by Herman Suderman. Lily's story is that of a girl who goes through life groping for love and happiness, finding love too late. Lily is an American girl born of a Greek father who is a dreamer and musician. She begins life on New York's East Side and there meets a wealthy young man who falls in love with her, in spite of her lack of education. But he will not admit this love to himself and drops out of Lily's life. She is left to earn her own living by her mother's death and begins as a shop girl in an Atlantic City Bazaar. There an old sensualist sees her, becomes infatuated with her and at last, in order to capture her, marries her. For a time she thinks she has found "The Song of Songs," which is love, but is soon disillusioned and when her early admirer comes in search of her and her husband's suspicions against her are aroused falsely, she is turned out by her husband. She takes refuge with this early admirer, who is genuinely in love with her. But as yet Lily has not found Love. It comes later with her acquaintance with a poet who asks her to marry him. She reveals her past to him, but he still wants her for his wife and at last she consents. But this chance for happiness is wrecked by an uncle of the poet, who reveals Lily's weaknesses to herself as they are and begs her for the sake of the man she loves, not to marry him. So she renounces her "Song of Songs," only to find that her early admirer needs her and her love and that by marrying him she can give him the happiness which came too late for her. By this act she gains a measure of happiness herself.

Goldwyn

Dodging a Million—(Six Reels)—January 27.—Starring Mabel Normand. Reviewed in this issue.

Our Little Wife—(Six Reels)—February 2.—Starring Madge Kennedy as Dodo Warren. Dodo, bride of a few minutes, is worried to think that in marrying Herb Warren she has sorely disappointed three other men who loved her. Before the wedding guests have dispersed, Dodo dazes her husband with the announcement that she will take all three defeated candidates for her hand on her honeymoon. So off they go—Dodo, a husband and three admirers. Herb, in an effort to have Dodo all for himself, sends a telegram to himself calling for his immediate return to the city. And of course the three other men would have to go, too. But Dodo learns the telegram is spurious, and when Herb returns to get her he finds her being cared for by Dr. Elliott as his sudden leave-taking had made Dodo hysterical. A scene follows, during which Dodo promises never to look at any other man. She keeps her promise long enough for Bobo to become engaged to Angie Martin and for Dr. Elliott to wed Farnie Weston. Angered by her husband's neglect on their first wedding anniversary, Dodo grows rebellious. She telephones Dr. Elliott and her message makes his bride jealous. Meanwhole Angie has called on Dodo. She, too, has been neglected and is going to Tommy's fancy dress party with another man, whose apartment is directly under Tommy's. When Angie goes, Dodo phones Bobo to come and take her to the party to prevent Angie from being compromised. Here trouble begins to fly thick and fast for Dodo. One incident finds her dangling from a fire escape to prevent her jealous husband from finding her in another man's room. After numerous other thrilling scenes Dodo and Herb patch up the quarrel, she vowing never to flirt again.

Real Folks—(Five Reels)—February 10.—Barney Sherry has the role of a newly rich old man who tries to have his family become society people. Their natural instincts, which are toward genuine and worth-while things, dominate, and in the end the father is glad. Reviewed in this issue.

The Captain of His Soul—(Five Reels)—February 10.—William Desmond and Charles Gunn play the leading roles. They are two brothers and each believes the other guilty of a murder. An unusually tense drama. Reviewed in this issue.

Universal Specials

Painted Lips—(Five Reels)—February 4.—Starring Louise Lovely. Lou McTavish had been brought up as strictly as it was possible for a sailor man to bring up his daughter, and when he was temporarily disabled Lou was taken in by Rosie, a woman of the underworld, a type that Lou had never seen and did not suspect. Rosie dolled Lou up in the fussiest kind of soubrette clothes, painted her lips and curled her hair and took her to the Straw Cellar, a notorious hangout. She had not been there more than fifteen minutes before the place was raided and poor little Lou found herself in a limousine with a strange man but one who looked perfectly honest and respectable though intensely cynical. The man was Jim Douglass, and he had a determined purpose in kidnapping Lou from the police. Never suspecting for a moment, in spite of her protests, that she was anything that her dress and war paint did not proclaim, he had laid a deep and crafty plan to palm off on Andrew Slater, a disreputable character who had entry to the best society, this girl of the underworld. Lou was duly trained and primed for her part, thinking all the time that Douglass intended to marry her, and Douglass himself was intensely surprised when he saw what a truly beautiful woman she was under advantageous circumstances. It was only half heartedly that he introduced Slater, who fell into the trap much more rapidly than Douglass liked, and proposed in all good faith. But when Lou discovered how Douglass intended to cheat Slater and what his real opinion of her had been, it changed the entire aspect of the situation, and she went to Slater's room to voluntarily offer herself. But when Slater discovered that he would not have to marry Lou, he called up Douglass and told him that he intended to send Lou back to him the kind of woman that Jim thought her to be. Jim, overcome with remorse and realizing at last his love for Lou, rushed to the apartment house, but when he broke open the door he discovered the body of Slater lying on the floor. Lou's own father, who had been searching for her for the last six months, had had revenge upon Slater himself.

Vitagraph

The Other Man—(Five Reels)—February 4.—Blue Ribbon feature, starring Harry Morey as a brilliant doctor who sinks to a life of dissipation after the shock of learning that his wife is unfaithful. Later he is redeemed by the love of a woman more worth while. Florence Desnon and Grace Darmond play important roles. Reviewed in this issue.

Broken Ties—(Five Reels)—February 11.—With Montague Love and June Elvidge. Reviewed in this issue.

Universal Program

The Donkey Did It—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—Comedy. Last Chance Valley fairly wallowed in wickedness. To it came Professor Polonius Pinhead upon the back of his donkey and boon companion, King Solomon, and there he found two shrinking flowers of the valley. One's name was Violet and the other was Molly, whose expansion was in direct contrast to Violet's shrinking. She weighed 350 and could juggle a bean-shooter as well as any gun-toter. And, of course, there was a bad man. His name was Howling Hank, and he was a union villain licensed by the Moving Picture Theater Villains' Association, to wear the official black mustache and carry forty-seven shots in his six-shooter. Now, Howling Hank was determined that Violet should work in his dance-hall, and Molly was just as determined that Violet should not. Into this life and death struggle King Solomon, the donkey, kicked Professor Pinhead, and this elongated individual eventually obtained Dutch courage enough to route the villain, to save Violet, and to marry Molly.

Birds of Crag and Cavern—(SPLIT REEL)—Nature study. One of the largest bird colonies in the world is to be found on the sea rocks off the coast of Oregon. The difficulty of approaching the Coast has prevented molestation of the birds, and they have no fear whatever of man. For that reason Mr. Finley was enabled to get wonderful views of the murres or guillemats, of the cormorants, and of the sea gulls.

Gems of the Adriatic—(SPLIT REEL)—Scenic. The Adriatic is one of the most ancient bodies of water. It has a history dating far beyond the Roman Era. The leading seaport of Dalmatia is Spalato, the country residence of the Roman Emperor Diacletian. Salona is another ancient and modern city. The pillars of ancient public buildings are extremely picturesque in panorama.

The Great Sea Scandal—(ONE REEL)—NESTOR—Comedy. Chester Smelt was taking his daughter to Mocha-and-Java. Smelt had an unfailing eye for beauty, and Senorita Friola was a beautiful woman and was taking the same trip. His advances to her and the efforts of his daughter's rejected fiance to elope with her caused poor Chester all manner of difficulty and threatened his life innumerable times. His last escapade landed him in Friola's stateroom and in Friola's bed and nothing but his ready tongue saved Chester Smelt from becoming Friola's sardine. He produced a letter which he had just written, stating: "Bearer is Secret Service man for those United States, looking for a woman spy." This statement satisfied every one and the Great Sea Scandal was over.

Universal Screen Magazine—ISSUE NO. 57—The care and training of blind children is the first subject in this Screen Magazine. The editor then takes us for a trip to Mexico, down the Atlantic Coast. In the country below the Rio Grande we find a lazy, carefree people, the women making shoes, sombreros, shawls, baskets, tortillas, bringing up myriads of stark naked children all packed in adobe houses like crowds in the subway. Some one has suggested that the Niagara River be further harnessed as a coal economy measure. The Screen Magazine shows the wonderful beauties which would be largely eliminated by transferring their beauty into 61,500,000 tons of coal for a year. But the most startling shot in the Weekly is the one showing the method of cutting big ships in two, so that they can pass through the Welland Canal and be joined again for use in the Atlantic. The magazine ends with a Miracle in Mud by Willie Hopkins, entitled "Sad but True."

The Bull's Eye—SERIAL—EPISODE ONE, "FIRST BLOOD."—Eddy Polo plays Ed Cody, cowboy. He goes east to bring back Cora Clayton (Vivian Reed), his employer's daughter. He tells her of his fight with Sweeney Bodin, one of the cowboys with a cruel disposition. As the train nears their home station it is held up by twenty masked riders. They capture and bind Ed.

Three Times and Out—(ONE REEL)—STRAND—FEBRUARY 12.—Comedy starring Billie Rhodes. Billie and her sweetheart go horseback riding and when they dismount the horses run away. Her lover dashes after them and Billie accepts the invitation of another young man to flivver home. The flivver blows a cylinder and Billie's sweetheart refuses to help her out of her predicament. At a dance that evening she gets even by cutting dances with him and arranging with three different rivals to take her home. The rivals accidentally compare notes, each gets another girl and to rub it in Billie's "steady" walks off with another girl. Billie starts for home alone, is accosted by a stewed pedestrian and rescued by a working man. The sweetheart, repentant, returns to meet her and is spurned. He attempts to enforce reconciliation and gets a wallop from her overalled escort. Billie repents and the quarrel is patched up.

General Program

A Tough Knight—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 2.—Comedy. The artist's model receives a letter from Trixie, his sweetheart, telling him to meet her on the corner at five o'clock. But the artist snatches the note away and rushes to keep the appointment himself. The model changes his attire and arrives just in time to see the girl and the artist disappearing into the former's house. He hides as the artist goes out for a bucket of beer and then slips into the house. When the artist returns and sees his model with the girl, in a rage he throws the beer into his rival's face. The father of the girl becomes angered at the loss of the beer and throws out both suitors. The climax of their troubles comes at the masquerade ball when the model, attired as a knight of old, chases the artist out by means of his sharp-pointed javelin, and at last he is with his sweetheart.

Our Little Nell—(ONE REEL)—ESSANAY—FEBRUARY 9.—Comedy. Our Little Nell, as fair a two hundred pound lass of the West as ever was wooed by a cow-puncher, tells Jim, her heroic sweetheart, that she cannot wed him until he is rich as well as proud. Upon receipt of the grievous note Jim hies himself to the dance hall where Desperate Desmond is robbing the room full of patrons. A thrilling chase ensues, during most of which time our heroic Jim is pursued by a swarthy bandit. In and out through the rooms the two go and Jim finally traps him in a big wooden cabinet. The sheriff enters and binds the villain. Jim is handed the reward for the bandit's capture and is now permitted to marry Our Little Nell.

Famous Players-Lasky Bill

Seven big attractions are being released this month by the famous Players-Lasky corporation, exclusive of the short reel films which comprise four from the western studios, one from the eastern studio and two from the Thomas H. Ince organization.

The initial releases are Dorothy Dalton in "Flare-up Sal," Pauline Frederick in "Madame Jealousy" and Vivian Martin in "A Petticoat Pilot." All were released February 4.

"The Thing We Love," with Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams, was released February 11. Enid Bennett in "The Keys of the Righteous" and Sessue Hayakawa in "Hidden Pearls" will be released February 18.

The last offering of the month is the new George Beban vehicle, "One More American." This picture is taken from William C. DeMille's well known stage piece and is now being produced by him from the scenario by Olgo Printzlau. Scheduled for release February 25, the film is expected to be finished well in advance of this date.

Paramount short reel releases for February include two Klever Komedies, four Bray Pictographs, four Burton Holmes Travelogues, two Mack Sennett comedies, the final installment of the serial, "Who Is Number One?" and the three initial installments of Benjamin Chapin's "The Son of Democracy."

Richard A. Rowland was unanimously re-elected president of the Metro Pictures Corporation at the annual meeting of the directors, following a two days' session of the stockholders of the corporation, at their offices in the Long Acre building in New York City. James B. Clark of Pittsburgh was elected first vice-president; E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Texas, second vice-president; J. W. Engel, treasurer; Charles K. Storm, assistant treasurer, and J. Robert Rubin, secretary and general counsel.

The directorate elected includes four new names, Charles K. Stern, who has been cashier and auditor for Metro since its organization, David Stoneman of Boston, E. H. Hulsey of Dallas, Texas, and H. J. Cohen of New York.

Complete Record of Current Films

ASSEMBLED FOR USE OF THEATER MANAGERS—CORRECTED EACH WEEK

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

"The Wooing of Princess Pat"

The Story of a Capricious Girl Transformed into a Woman by the Miracle of Love

by WILLIAM ADDISON LATHROP
Directed by WILLIAM P·S·EARLE

In this most appealing love story of a firey but lovable little aristocrat who rebels at signing a contract to marry a man she has never seen, Gladys Leslie, known everywhere as "the girl with the million dollar smile," is given an ideal vehicle for the display of that distinctive charm that has made her a nation-wide favorite.

And in the opposite role is J. Frank Glendon, whose work as the star of many of the widely-advertised O. Henry features has gained him a large and constantly growing following.

Charles Kent, "dean of the screen," William Dunn, Templar Saxe, Bigelow Cooper, Carlton King and other widely known players appear in the supporting cast.

TRIANGLE

Here's the Proof

You have read our recent advertisements describing the new Triangle policy towards exhibitors. We have told you of the box office value of Triangle pictures, of the fair and square business methods of Triangle, and of the fact that Triangle prices enable any exhibitor to make money.

Here is a letter from Mr. H. R. Mason, who operates the Acme, Crystal and Rex Theaters at Goldsboro, N. C., which will give you the experience of an exhibitor who is using Triangle service.

"Regarding using Triangle Service, will say that ever since the majority of the manufacturers adopted the plan of shifting the Film Footage Tax to the exhibitors, we have been using from one to three Triangle dramas and comedies every week. It gives me much pleasure to say that both the dramas and the comedies have been entirely satisfactory to me and my patrons, and business, I am glad to say, has not fallen off and, if anything, has increased. On the days that we run pictures only we get just as good if not better results from Triangle Service as the Taxed Service, and what's most interesting to us is that we are getting the service for almost half of what we have paid for the Taxed Service.

I am indeed glad that you together with a few of the other recognized manufacturers decided to align yourselves on the side of the exhibitor.

I sincerely trust that exhibitors all over the country will rally around the TRIANGLE banner and accord you the support you so much deserve, and in doing so they will not only help themselves by getting a consistent and well balanced service at a price they can afford to pay, and no WAR TAX.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) H. R. MASON.

Do not Mr. Mason's statements inspire you? Are you satisfied with the service that you are now securing for your theater? Let us suggest that you get in touch with the Triangle Exchange nearest to you so as to know exactly what Triangle has to offer you.

Universal Negotiates Big Deal

PROJECT AIMS AT THE ELIMINATION OF MANY EXCHANGES

JOE BRANDT, general sales manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, sprung a sensation in Chicago last week with the announcement that the Universal is about ready to complete a deal involving $1,000,000 or more that will narrow competition in the state rights field by the elimination of many exchanges.

"This proposition is one of the biggest in film history," said Mr. Brandt, "but I cannot disclose any more facts until the deal is completed."

Has Bearing on Stars

From other sources, however, it was learned that the project has a bearing on the fight of Universal's president, Carl Laemmle, on high-salaried stars.

In this connection a recent interview with Mr. Laemmle is recalled in which he said that "paying outrageous salaries to stars is the evil that first pushed film rentals sky-ward—and the short-sighted men who are responsible for this great folly are now beginning to realize that their get-rich-quick plan is a deadly boomerang."

"It has knocked many an exhibitor out of his profits," Mr. Laemmle went on. "And now on top of this expense, all other costs are leaping upward every day. So you will either have to cut out the overpaid star or get more money. Better still, do both."

Await Details with Interest

Now that this statement takes on new significance, the industry and particularly the exhibitors will await full details of Universal's new project with great interest.

While many producers and exhibitors do not agree with Mr. Laemmle on the question of high-salaried stars, believing the stars to be entitled to all they can get when their pictures earn money proportionately, exhibitors if not the producers and distributors, will be pleased to see any deal negotiated which has for its purpose the reduction of rentals, unless merit has to suffer, in which case the attitude of the exhibitors is left to conjecture.

Brandt Talks of Business

Mr. Brandt, the author of the startling announcement, while reticent on the deal, has quite a good deal to say about the condition of the industry.

He was on his way back to New York after a trip covering all the Universal exchanges in the middle west when he visited Chicago and said he felt that he was in close touch with the trade and qualified to speak.

"I met quite a few exhibitors," said Mr. Brandt, "and all were optimistic, expecting business to return to normal with the advent of warmer weather. Many of the exhibitors claimed they had not suffered from Tuesday closing, declaring they had done more business since the fuel administrator's order was issued than they did before."

Other Statements Optimistic

Other statements also reflect optimism, although their authors say there is no denying the fact that the business is in a bad way at the present time.

After two months on the Pacific Coast and in various distributing centers west of the Mississippi, Sidney R. Kent, sales manager of General Film Company, declared all that was needed now is good weather. He said the situation is largely psychological.

"After attending conventions of General Film Company branch managers in New York, Chicago and San Francisco," said Mr. Kent, "I spent some time investigating conditions on the Pacific Coast. In the Northwest activity is increasing. In San Francisco conditions are good. In Los Angeles they are extremely good. In Denver they are satisfactory. In Kansas City they are unsettled, but with a strengthening tone. In St. Louis they are improving.

Revulsion Against High Prices

"One outstanding symptom among exhibitors is a revulsion against outrageously priced, over-rated films. There is no controverting the fact that many of them have been badly stung, and while they are kicking hard against the offending companies, they are adjusting themselves gradually to take real high-grade product from concerns that give honest value. It presages an important readjustment in program all over the country.

"Altogether General Film has little complaint to make, and that only applies to spots. Conditions at large are not as bad as painted. The slump comes from a condition of mind mostly. Clever business men among exhibitors have continued making money as formerly, and this refers to those who have continued showing good stuff and selecting it with discrimination. All we need is decent weather to break the spirit of depression. War taxes and other complications can't stop the revival when it starts.

"The winter has been so severe from the Sierras to the Atlantic seaboard that it has retarded attendance, making the timidity of exhibitors all the more acute. From now on the weather and the show business both must improve."

Frank G. Hill, president and general manager of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, says he is beginning to get many good reports.

William Waldron, manager of the U. S. theater, Hoboken, one of the leading picture houses in New Jersey, wrote: "We exhibitors in New Jersey have no cause to complain regarding business this winter, as it has been uniformly good. However, I firmly believe that with the advent of milder weather, conditions will become even better. I believe that the vast amount of money now being spent by the government in getting ready for war is just beginning to circulate freely in trade. While there has been no tendency on the part of New Jersey theatergoers to hoard, nevertheless we are all human and it has behooved us to be cautious."

Business in Canada Good

E. Auger, eastern division manager of Vitagraph, returned from a tour of the Eastern Canadian provinces and reported to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, that conditions in the dominion were most encouraging.

"Despite one of the severest winters the country ever has known," said Mr. Irwin, "Mr. Auger found that the theaters in Toronto, Montreal, Quebec, St. John and other large places are doing better now than for a long time past. Vitagraph, in fact, is handling a larger amount of business in this territory than at any time in its history and this we take as a fair example of general conditions across our northern border."

An interesting part of the information brought to Mr. Irwin by his eastern manager was in relation to stricken Halifax. Although the city which was almost blown to bits a few weeks ago, has only begun to rebuild, motion picture houses are open and are doing a good business.

Louise Glaum Starts Work on First Play for Paralta

Louise Glaum, who is widely known as "The Lady of the Peacocks," started work this week on a production in which she will make her debut as a Paralta star. Paralta has recognized in Miss Glaum a talent for dramatic and emotional acting which has, to a great extent, been confined to a small scope because of her continued appearance as a screen vampire.

The executives of Paralta Plays, Inc., have decided to take Miss Glaum out of the vampire character and to give her an opportunity to gain fame in a new field.

Her first picture, "The Snapdragon," is a straight drama full of strong action and gripping situations which has nothing of the seductress in it. Miss Glaum is quite pleased with the change.

Prior to going on the screen, Miss Glaum did no vampire work whatever and even played ingenue when in stock companies, before she attained her height of popularity as a stage actress. Those who have followed the inarticulate drama since its inception will remember that Miss Glaum's first pictures were not of the vampire type and that she showed to great advantage in straight leads.

"The Snapdragon" was written especially for her by Monte M. Katterjohn and it is a drama of international intrigue with many sympathetic touches.

Two more productions to follow the first have already been arranged for by the Paralta scenario department. Thomas J. Geraghty has just finished the screen version of her second and Julian Louis Lamothe is writing the third. Both are of the melodramatic nature with excellent situations and elaborate settings.

Change in "Son of Democracy" Releases

An announcement from Al Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, calls attention to a change in the release schedule of Paramount's Benjamin Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy."

The second episode will be "A Call to Arms," in place of "My Father." The second release will be presented to the public commencing February 18. The third offering will be "My Father," on February 25. "My Mother" was the first release.

The first three releases are now finished and have already been shipped to the various exchanges throughout the country. Bookings on this production are said to be large and endorsements already received from many celebrities in and out of the motion picture industry, indicate that the hearty support of the entire amusement public as well as educational institutions may be counted on.

Ten Paraltas Ready for Release

That Paralta has a firm foothold upon the motion picture industry with a series of unusual feature pictures is shown by the fact that it has already completed and has ready for release ten productions starring the foremost dramatic artists of the screen. All of the pictures are seven reels in length and have been staged at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles under the supervision of Robert Brunton.

Henry B. Walthall, whose first Paralta play, "His Robe of Honor," attracted such wide attention as one of the best portrayals of the screen, has finished two more pictures, "Humdrum Brown" and "With Hoops of Steel." Each of these productions presents him in widely differentiating characters, a fact which will interest his many admirers who realize and appreciate his remarkable versatility.

Bessie Barriscale has five completed pictures ready for the exhibitors. They are, "Madam Who," a thrilling mystery story, "Within the Cup," an unusual emotional drama dealing with the life of the artists in the Paris Latin Quarter and in Bohemian Washington Square, New York City; "Rose o' Paradise," an adaptation of Grace Miller White's popular American novel; "Blindfolded," a story of the underworld, and another production yet unnamed, which has just been completed under the direction of Raymond B. West.

J. Warren Kerrigan has two pictures, a melodrama and a comedy-drama which are now booking. The first is "A Man's Man," which is a screen version of Peter B. Kyne's novel of the same title. This picture played at Clune's auditorium in Los Angeles and so great was the business that it broke all records of attendance of all pictures, including "The Birth of a Nation."

The comedy-drama is "The Turn of a Card," written by Frederick Chapin and directed by Oscar Apfel. Mr. Kerrigan is about to start on his third Paralta Play, a romantic comedy-drama which combines plot intrigue with light humorous touches.

Advertising Is Key to Success

MONEY-MAKING HOUSES ALWAYS THE ONES THAT PLUNGE ON PUBLICITY

BORN SUCCESSES are very rare these days. Men proceed toward commercial achievement along the path of certain recognized principles. One of these principles which is recognized by all successful motion picture exhibitors as a fundamental is the necessity of proper advertising and publicity.

It is extraordinary to what a degree this well recognized fundamental of success is neglected by many exhibitors. For instance, it is assumed that Exhibitor A has just as attractive a theater as Exhibitor B doing such excellent business near him. A has been established for some time. His service in every way compares favorably with that of his competitor B. A might be showing pictures of a quality even superior to that of B.

Advertising Spells Success

Why is it then that the business of Exhibitor A is greater in volume, steadier in patronage and more profitable than B? Evidently there must be an answer to the riddle. It has been supplied by many exhibitors who are consistently successful. The answer is wise, judicious, carefully-maintained publicity.

It must be remembered that the motion picture business is a branch of the show business. The success of the show business has to a great extent been made by proper publicity. Every one knows that the public is keenly alert for amusement. Entertainment is recognized as a universal necessity. But nevertheless people have a lot to think of these days. If the exhibitor wants patrons to think of him and his theater he must concentrate their attention on his theater.

Public Is Fickle

Then, again, the public wishes to be told who has what and where it will be shown. The public is fickle to a great extent. The motion picture business has developed into a sort of shopping venture. The possibilities of amusement in one picture are weighed against those in another. How powerfully does the exhibitor make his appeal to the public for his theater? That is a decisive factor very often at the box office.

Here is where the right kind of advertising brings the crowd to the theater. A good press story often stimulates the curiosity of the public, arouses interest and discussion, paints visions of more than ordinary entertainment before amusement hungry eyes. A snappy display advertisement gets attention and rivets interest on a particular picture to be shown at a particular theater.

Lobby Displays Big Factor

Then there is the lobby. Is the lobby utilized in an advertising way to arouse the interest of the passerby? The neglected lobby display is a weakness in many an exhibitor's battle line. If the lobby were of little advertising value why would such giant organizations as the Shuberts, Klaw and Erlanger, Keith, Albee and others, devote such study and so much time and money to the use of the lobbies in their theaters?

Whether a town is great or small the lobby should be utilized to the utmost. Shoppers will frequently stop to idle a few moments over the photographs or display cards and be drawn by the suggestion of drama or comedy to spend an hour or two in the theater.

Triangle Suggests Ideas

Triangle, in its magazine issued each month, seeks to suggest practical attention compelling lobby display ideas for the various pictures on the proram. Take for example Triangle's suggestion on the Japanese American photoplay, "Her American Husband." It ran in this wise:

"Lobby—Paper lanterns should be hung in the lobby and lighted in the evening. Ushers may wear Japanese costumes. Balloon kites of fantastic Japanese design (butterflies, dragons, etc.) and paper parasols might be suspended from the ceiling and Japanese pictures hung on the side walls. A canvas painted to represent the entrance to a Tokio house would make an attractive front. Any school geography will suggest simple designs for the execution of these ideas.

Expense Is Small

The expense for all or a portion of this sort of decoration is decidedly small. And yet one cannot help but conclude that the theater daintily trimmed to suggest the orient by any or all of these methods would be very likely to exercise a powerful influence over possible patrons, suggesting the romance, magic and lure of the orient. The exhibitor who responds to such suggestions finds that business brightens up to a remarkably surprising degree.

Catch lines are also very effective to pique the curiosity of the public. Triangle constantly suggests vigorous, terse, curiosity-arousing catchlines that can be cheaply lettered on cards and mounted in frames.

Then there are the one, three and six sheets. Are they put up with sufficient care and early enough, or are they neglected? Are enough of them used? Despite the fact that they are economical there are a surprising number of exhibitors who economize on this most important advertising element.

Good Films First Essential

It must be remembered that the foundation of successful advertising is a product of superior merit whether the article exploited is silverware, shoes, service or pictures.

Pictures, like any other commodity must measure up to the printed claims made for them. The public may bite on poor films for a while, but not forever.

Personality Big Asset

Above all, it should be born in mind that personality is a great advertising asset. The exhibitor should advertise his optimism to his patrons. There are many conditions today that tempt the exhibitor into gloomy moments. He should brush this pessimism aside. He should indicate that he is successful, that he is an experienced showman, that he likes his business and is proud of it.

Success begets success. This spirit of optimism means dollars and cents at the box office, and if it has been permitted to slip away for a while because of some sly, small voice that has whispered gloom, the exhibitor should just face about and smile.

ARTCRAFT

Stella Maris, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Mary Pickford's best picture. The dual role puzzled many of our patrons and they could hardly be convinced that the star played both parts. I hope we may have more pictures as good as this."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Wolves of the Rail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"The best picture Hart has made. Drew fairly good business and pleased everyone."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater, Chicago.—Downtown house.

Wolves of the Rail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"The best Artcraft play in which Hart has appeared."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

Wolves of the Rail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"Hart in a new role. Our music got all the railroad and other effects and was a big hit. The last reel can be played up to be one of the most exciting ever run."—R. J. Rolfe, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Wolves of the Rail, with W. S. Hart (Artcraft)—"The star is new here but is drawing well. A very good picture."—J. R. Baxter, Lyceum Theater, Spring City, Utah.

A Modern Musketeer, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"The best Fairbanks picture we have run. Capacity business in bad weather."—J. R. Baxter, Jr., Lyceum Theater, Spring City, Utah.

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"Not as good as some of Little Mary's previous pictures but all in all, fair."—Miss C. Benesch, Bell Theater, Chicago.

The Little Princess, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"We ran this on Christmas day and cleaned up. A splendid picture, but not as good as Rebecca."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"I consider this the best Miss Pickford has ever made. Not a single adverse criticism. Everyone pleased. Business top-notch."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

A Romance of the Redwoods, with Mary Pickford (Artcraft)—"The star is losing popularity here. We have run every Pickford picture since The Bishop's Carriage."—J. R. Baxter, Jr., Lyceum Theater, Spring City, Utah.

BLUEBIRD

The Man Trap, with Herbert Rawlinson (Bluebird)—"A good enough picture for any audience. Plenty of pep and action."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

BUTTERFLY

The Silent Lady, with Zoe Rae (Butterfly)—"Very good, though it hasn't much drawing power."—Miss C. Benesch, Bell Theater, Chicago.

The Man From Montana, with Neal Hart (Butterfly)—"A clean picture. The star is a good drawing card in this neighborhood."—Miss Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

FOX

This Is the Life, with George Walsh (Fox)—"Another dandy Walsh picture which drew us an extra good crowd. I'd like to have this kind every night for a while."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

A Milk-fed Vamp (Fox Comedy)—"A comedy riot. Everybody seemed to be laughing. Not a story but a mess of funny happenings."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Painted Madonna, with Sonia Markova (Fox)—"The star didn't take very well but as a whole this is a good picture."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Treasure Island, with Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"A good picture. Played to good business. We received this on short notice and so did not secure full benefit."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

The Conqueror, with William Farnum (Fox)—"A first class production, to fair business. The posters on this production kept quite a few away as they thought it was a costume play."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Yankee Way, with George Walsh (Fox)—"This star is getting more popular every time we play him. Picture very good. Business good."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Conscience, with Gladys Brockwell (Fox)—"A good picture and well produced. Star not well known here."—H. C. Johnson, Crystal Theater, Stamford, Texas.

Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp, with Fox Kiddies (Fox)—"Eight long reels of footage without any drawing power. Many of my patrons walked out. Kid pictures do not appeal to them. It is too bad to spend so much money on a picture that does not draw. Five reels would have been better than eight."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

Cheating the Public, with Enid Markey (Fox)—"A good picture but it did not draw, with good publicity back of it. Melodrama of this kind it is a mistake for us to run."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

The Spy, with Dustin Farnum (Fox)—"Played to big business at increased admissions and pleased the patrons."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

GENERAL

O. Henry Pictures (General)—"Two-reelers. My patrons asked me to book these, having read the author's works. I am glad I booked them."—L. Locklud, Plaza Theater, South Bend, Indiana.

Falcon Features (General)—"These four-reelers are very good and make a nice program, with a comedy."—L. Locklud, Plaza Theater, South Bend, Indiana.

Comedies (General)—"Best comedies of any I ever ran."—J. Meehan, Orpheum Theater, Muncie, Ind.

Judge Brown Stories (General)—"Two-reelers. Very pleasing comedy-dramas."—J. Meehan, Orpheum Theater, Muncie, Ind.

GOLDWYN

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Very enjoyable."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

Nearly Married, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"Six reels. Comedy drama. This star will become more popular in a few more pictures. This is not quite as good as Baby Mine, but it is O. K. at regular admission prices."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Wonderful. With the fine acting of Tom Moore and George Fawcett, combined with the best of direction, photography, etc., this picture can't be beat."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"One of the most pleasing pictures we have shown. Not a fairy story, as the title may suggest. Good supporting cast, including Tom Moore and George Fawcett."—

The Cinderella Man, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A very good, clean picture. Good acting. Pleased everyone."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"Why not give us more like this? It is a picture above the average as far as can be. Photography, acting, settings, cast, all good. Business big."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

Polly of the Circus, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"One of the best productions of its kind ever produced, in my estimation."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

Fields of Honor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A very pleasing picture. Audience was well satisfied."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—High class neighborhood.

Fields of Honor, with Mae Marsh (Goldwyn)—"A good picture, good story, good acting, good star, good business."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

Thais, with Mary Garden (Goldwyn)—"A splendid production and a good money maker. Direction, acting and story fine."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

Baby Mine, with Madge Kennedy (Goldwyn)—"This would make a dead one smile. Business good and patrons pleased. Cut that last title or you'll have many a kick."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

JEWEL

The Man Without a Country, with Florence LaBadie (Jewell)—"This is a good one reel picture made into five reels. It's absolutely no good."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

The Price of a Good Time, with Mildred Harris (Jewell)—"A picture not worth more than fifteen dollars. The public falls for it and it's some money getter, but a poor picture."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

KLEINE

T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman, and Gallagher (Edison-Conquest)—"This is a cracking good, clean program and should be good for any family night."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Man Who Was Afraid, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-Perfection)—"Good picture. Star good. Patrons well pleased."—S. K. Leen, Ruby Theater, Jamestown, N. D.

METRO

The Slacker, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—"An excellent production, human and patriotic. Not a spectacular feature, but it hits home. Turned away business the first night and turned away more the second night, with W. S. Hart for opposition. We expect to repeat this."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

Daybreak, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—"Six reels. The star should be kept away from close-ups. She is not as popular with our fans as we would like her to be. Rich settings. An average program picture with nothing to boost in it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Voice of Conscience, with Bushman and Bayne (Metro)—"Very good. Stars are well liked by all."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

Outwitted, with Emily Stevens (Metro)—"A business getter. Patrons here like the star fine."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

Sidney Drew Comedies (Metro)—"Clever stories, well appreciated by our audience. Clean sense of humor in all."—Miss C. Benesch, Bell Theater, Chicago.

MUTUAL

Snap Judgment, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"A very good western picture that pleased all who saw it. Russell is always good but he does not seem to draw us any extra business."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Mate of the Sally Ann, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Another good Minter picture that helped to swell our box-office receipts. It will please all."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Mate of the Sally Ann, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"A very nice subject, a family program picture."—A. R. Anderson, Orpheum Theater, Twin Falls, Idaho.

The Mate of the Sally Ann, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Here is the best production the star has ever made. Good business."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

The Calendar Girl, with Juliette Day (American-Mutual)—"A cute picture. Not much drawing power."—C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

Her Country's Call, with Mary Miles Minter—(American-Mutual)—"As usual, this little star drew us a good patronage and sent them away pleased with the picture."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

Strand Comedies, with Billie Rhodes (Mutual)—"Some girl and some comedies. All to the good."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

New York Luck, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"A good entertainer. Everybody enjoyed it."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

Sunny Jane, with Jackie Saunders (Horkheimer-Mutual)—"I always have a good house when I show Jackie Saunders."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

High Play, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"All my patrons like Russell and of course he draws a good house."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

Sands of Sacrifice, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"This is a good picture, as have been all of the Russell and most other Mutual pictures that we have had."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

Sands of Sacrifice, with William Russell (American-Mutual)—"A fine picture. Most of the Mutual pictures are good."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

Miss Jackie of the Army, with Margarita Fischer (American-Mutual)—"Not as good as most of Miss Fischer's productions. Patrons dissatisfied."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

PARAMOUNT

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Second of the series and another big hit with my patrons."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A sure good one. Everybody was well pleased. Lots of compliments."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Drew a big crowd and pleased them, which is enough."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Bab's Burglar, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"The Bab stories go strong here. Everyone liked this. Receipts splendid."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Bab's Diary, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Miss Clark can't be beat. Our patrons are asking for more of the Bab series. Business big."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Seven Swans, with Marguerite Clarke (Paramount)—"Deliver us from these fairy stories. We don't get any business except the kids. Why don't they put this clever girl in real stories?"—John B. Ashton, Columbia Theater, Provo, Utah.

The Seven Swans, with Marguerite Clarke (Paramount)—"The common remark I heard the Sunday we ran this was 'It is all right but it is a children's show.' I agree with my patrons. When we show at advanced prices, we ought to show a picture that pleases the grown-ups. This one does not."—Charles H. Rayn, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Sunset Trail, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"A picture that everyone liked and Miss Martin is getting us more business than some of the higher priced Paramount stars."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Love Letters, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"The star is very popular here. This picture is really good."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Love Letters, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Nice settings. Star is popular. Story only fair. We have had better pictures with this star. The title is catchy and attracts the feminine patrons."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

Bab's Matinee Idol, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"Not as good as the other Clark pictures."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

The Price Mark, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"Well produced, well liked."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

The Price Mark, with Dorothy Dalton (Paramount)—"A picture that I cannot say I was proud of showing. Photography is good and the stars play their parts well, but the story is a little too suggestive."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

Molly Entangled, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"Very slow in getting started but ended well. A different play from the others we've had."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Land of Promise, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A very good picture which drew excellent business and satisfied the audience very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Tom Sawyer, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"Drew an extra large crowd as the book is so popular."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

Tom Sawyer, with Jack Pickford (Paramount)—"A very pleasing picture. Played to very good business. All the children in the neighborhood came to see it."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Cook of Canyon Camp, with George Beban (Paramount)—"The best story of a laugh-producing nature I ever saw. It is surely some comedy, yet a splendid story, well acted. Clear pictures. Scenery exceptionally fine. Will get over with any crowd."—J. F. Hickenbottam, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

The Valley of the Moon, with Myrtle Stedman (Bosworth-Paramount)—"A good enough picture, but it does not compare with Burning Daylight."—J. F. Hickenbottam, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Helene of the North, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A good picture, but it didn't draw the house Mice and Men did. Should please any crowd."—J. F. Hickenbottam, Grand Theater, Juliaetta, Idaho.

Exile, with Mme. Petrova (Paramount)—"Fair picture. The rent is much too high for this class of picture."—H. C. Johnsen, Crystal Theater, Stamford, Texas.

Jack and Jill, with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff (Paramount)—"Another extra good program picture and I was only sorry that the weather was so bad that more people could not have seen it. It will surely make friends for this team."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Hungry Heart, with Pauline Frederick (Paramount)—"Pleased all my patrons. However, it did not pull very strong. It is not what they expected, for not all of the story of the book is put in the film."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke (Paramount)—"A good picture, better than this star's previous work."—C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

The Judgment House (Blackton-Paramount)—"A good picture. Beautiful subtitles, but that's all. Not up to Paramount standard."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

The Clever Mrs. Carfax, with Julian Eltinge (Paramount)—"Julian Eltinge surely is 'stunning' as a woman. Picture pleased everyone."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

PARALTA

Madame Who? with Bessie Barriscale (Paralta)—"The best directed film this star has ever played in. Photography excellent. Bad weather spoiled good business on this picture."—S. P. Totten, Star Theater, Everett, Wash.

PATHE

The Mark of Cain, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—"A fairly good picture but Mrs. Castle does not hold our regular patrons and does not draw new ones. She probably would go well where she is better known to the patrons."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Mark of Cain, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe)—"A good show and a very big improvement over the first of the series. This one should be run first."—R. J. Relf, Star Theater, Decorah, Iowa.

The Heart of Ezra Greer, with Frederick Warde (Pathe)—"A fair picture but would not draw any extra patrons to see it. We had very poor business with conditions good for a large crowd."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

A Crooked Romance, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"A fair program picture."—E. C. Preston, Sterling Theater, Superior, Nebr.

The Last of the Carnabys, with Gladys Hulette (Pathe)—"Miss Hulette is a very clever player and a good drawing card."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

The Little Patriot, with Marie Osborne (Pathe)—"This is one of the best pictures I have seen in all my experience. A very good entertainment."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

France in Arms (Pathe)—"Five reels of war scenes taken from about fifteen reels of Pathe news. No good."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

SELECT

Shirley Kaye, with Clara Kimball Young (Select)—"A very pleasing picture which satisfied everyone and drew fairly good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

Shirley Kaye, with Clara Kimball Young (Select) "An excellent production. Miss Young has a good role."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

Her Silent Sacrifice, with Alice Brady (Select)—"Picture pretty good. Star good drawing card. But this story is not any better than her World pictures."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

Woman and Wife, with Alice Brady (Select)—"A good production."—H. H. Kincey, Academy of Music, Selma, Ala.

TRIANGLE

Ashes of Hope, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"Film in good condition. Subject very good. Business good at five below zero weather."—D. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

Old Folks at Home, with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree (Triangle)—"A very good production. Played to good business."—Charles Dale, Topic Theater, Fairfax, Minn.

Fifty-Fifty, with Norma Talmadge (Triangle)—"Very good. Story drew well in our town."—Charles Dale, Topic Theater, Fairfax, Minn.

The Clodhopper, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"Charles Ray and a good story combined made an excellent picture."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Utah.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"As a re-issue, some of these are better pictures than the star's new ones. This brought good business."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

The Lamb, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"These re-issues are drawing better than the newer Fairbanks productions and are giving better satisfaction."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Cassidy, with Dick Rosson (Triangle)—"We thought this a good character picture but most of the patrons roasted it on their way out. No drawing power."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Firefly of Tough Luck, with Alma Rubens (Triangle)—"This is an extra good picture. Everyone was well pleased."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

Indiscreet Corinne, with Olive Thomas (Triangle)

The Larnin' of Jim Benton, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"I find Triangle getting better all the time. A fine picture."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

Until They Get Me, with Pauline Starke (Triangle)—"A very satisfactory picture."—Mrs. Lou Bacon, Pastime Theater, Itasca, Texas.

The Man Who Made Good, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"A splendid picture and one with a forceful message. The majority of patrons were pleased. Played to good business."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

Blood Will Tell, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A splendid picture. Acting fine; settings good, photography fair. Patrons pleased. Receipts good."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

The Snarl, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"A new star and a new program for this town but patrons were highly pleased. Many comments. Receipts fair."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

One Shot Ross, with Roy Stewart (Triangle)—"Good old-fashioned western thriller. We played it on Saturday to good business."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Ashes of Hope, with Belle Bennett (Triangle)—"Almost as good as The Ten of Diamonds. Drew good business, as all Triangle productions do."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

Her American Husband, with Darrell Foss (Triangle)—"A very good picture but without drawing power, for the star is unknown."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Hopper, with George Hernandez (Triangle)—"A very good picture which pleased the audience, but it did not draw."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

VITAGRAPH

His Own People, with Harry Morey (Vitagraph)—"A fair production but not up to Vitagraph standard."—M. Thompson, White Way Theater, Concordia, Kansas.

Big V. Comedies (Vitagraph)—"We have used these a long time and have yet to hear the first kick."—House and Justice, Grand Theater, Marion, N. C.

The Fall of a Nation (Vitagraph)—"This made me good money. It is a timely picture."—L. Dean Sands, Sands Theater, Warsaw, Mo.

The Tenderfoot, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"A pretty good picture which drew a fair audience."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Strong Way, with Mildred Manning (Vitagraph)—"A fairly good picture. Business just fair."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

The Marriage Speculation, with Mildred Manning (Vitagraph)—"A good picture which pleased everyone and drew a fairly good audience."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater, Chicago.—In high class neighborhood.

WORLD

Rasputin, the Black Monk, with Montague Love (World)—"Did not draw as well as we expected but gave satisfaction. Costume and Russian pictures never draw here."—Pfeiffer Bros., Grand Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.

The Little Volunteer, with Madge Evans (World)—"Madge is surely there. All her pictures are good. She pleases grown-ups as well as the kids."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

Diamonds and Pearls, with Kitty Gordon (World)—"The story is rather weak, but Miss Gordon's beautiful gowns and personality put it over."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

Stolen Hours, with Ethel Clayton (World)—"Very good. Played to capacity houses. World pictures are usually good."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds, with June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell (World)—"Six reels. Our patrons do not care for these costume plays, no matter how well they are produced. The stars do not seem like themselves in these white wigs and colonial wearing apparel. This has drawing power, but in passing out patrons seemed a bit disappointed."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

SERIALS AND SERIES

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Excellent, with lots of action. Very good box-office attraction."—Miss C. Benesch, Garfield Theater, 5531 S. Halsted St., Chicago.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"Bigger business every week."—J. R. Baxter, Lyceum Theater, Spring City, Utah.

The Fighting Trail, with William Duncan (Vitagraph)—"My customers say it is the best serial they ever saw. A great money getter."—H. C. Johnson, Crystal Theater, Stamford, Texas.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Fifth episode and business still improving. Capacity business in cold weather."—Levi Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Falling down every week."—J. Meehan, Orpheum Theatre, Muncie, Ind.

Ford Educational Weekly (Ford Motor Co.)—"These are the best weeklies I ever ran and all you have to pay for them is the express."—George H. Done, Gayety Theater, Payson, Utah.

The Neglected Wife, with Ruth Roland (Pathe)—"The crowd has grown with this interesting serial."—L. Dean Sands, Sands Theater, Warsaw, Mo.

The Bull's Eye, with Eddie Polo (Universal)—"Just started this serial and find it exceptionally well liked. A good drawing card."—Miss C. Benesch, Bell Theater, Chicago.

The Fatal Ring, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"A very good serial."—L. Locklud, Plaza Theater, South Bend, Indiana.

A Daughter of Uncle Sam, with Jane Vance (General—"The greatest drawing card that ever struck this town."—J. Meehan, Orpheum Theater, Muncie, Ind.

A Daughter of Uncle Sam, with Jane Vance (General—"Stood them up for two shows. Have run two episodes."—L. Locklud, Plaza Theater, South Bend, Indiana.

The Red Ace, with Marie Walcamp (Universal)—"Chapter 4. A good serial. Business good with fifteen below zero weather, and no children under fifteen years of age admitted by order of the Board of Health."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

The Lost Express, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"Chapter 11. An extra good all around serial. Business extra good in spite of very gold weather."—L. Stevens, Bijou Theater, Alpena, Mich.

STATE RIGHTS AND SPECIALS

The Garden of Allah, with Helen Ware (Selig)—"A really big picture which can be featured with special arrangements. Photography excellent. Big business in spite of rain. Broke the house records."—A. H. Cobb, Jr., Temple Theater, Hartsville, S. C.

Today, with Florence Reed (Rapf)—"Seven reels. 'Pink permit' for Chicago. A very good drama and it holds the interest throughout its entire length. The title is a little odd, but it is a story dealing with a 'wife who sells her soul for a jeweled dress on the auction block of today.' It is directed by Ralph Ince and has many rich settings. The photography is a little faint in some spots."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Barrier (Rex Beach Co.)—"A fine picture, worthy of much publicity, but it did not draw for me."—H. C. Johnson, Crystal Theater, Stamford, Texas.

Mother, with Elizabeth Risdon (McClure)—"A great picture but too sad. A good comedy must be shown with it to offset the sadness."—A. Lowy, Century Theater, Chicago.

Vitagraph Gets Director Hurst

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, announces the engagement of Paul Hurst, well known director and leading man, as co-director with David Smith in the production of "The Woman in the Web," the fifteen episode serial in which Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon are to be starred.

Mr. Hurst assumed his duties last week with the beginning of work on the third episode of the serial, which is being filmed at the western Vitagraph studio in Hollywood.

Mr. Hurst is known principally for his work in the direction of the "Stingaree" series for Kalem and also is recalled for his handling of the screen version of "A Lass of the Lumberlands." He is less than thirty years old, but has won a reputation as one of the best directors of "thrills" in the industry. He is a native of California, received his stage training with the Elitch Garden Stock Company in Denver and has had one of the most rapid rises to prominence in the film world.

David Smith, senior director of "The Woman in the Web," says he thinks his stars staged one of the most daring scenes ever filmed when Miss Nova and Mr. Glendon in the first episode leaped from a burning bridge across a chasm in an automobile. Going at forty miles an hour in a closed car, the players drove down a steep embankment onto the bridge, and with the impetus gained by the race down hill, leaped twenty feet to the opposite shore.

The next day, Glendon, none the worse for his experience, leaped from a window to a treetop 38 feet below and escaped without injury.

Vitagraph officials expect "The Woman in the Web" to be even more thrilling than "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance—and the Woman," Vitagraph's other big serials.

Mary Goes Mr. Hoover One Better

There is one sure way of getting around the problem of complying with Mr. Hoover's orders to conserve food and still be able to use it in motion pictures. This is the way it was done in "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," Mary Pickford's new Artcraft vehicle.

The scene was a dinner at the humble home of Amarilly and naturally corn beef and cabbage was quite the proper thing. But this could not be simulated. A roast turkey—yes, easily, with papier mache imitations. But cabbage? Impossible. Marshall Neilan, the director, agreed with Miss Pickford on this point. Corn beef and cabbage there should be. Then Mary had an idea.

"We'll use the real thing," she declared, "but we'll wait till lunch time and then when we're through—we will eat the properties."

She had another flash and phoned for her mother to meet her at the studio at noon. And corn beef and cabbage is a favorite dish with Mrs. Pickford.

The lunch was a success. There was no waste—moreover, the scene will be thoroughly realistic.

The Free Lance Source of Scenarios

REALLY competent comment on the gentle art of scenario writing is always welcome. When C. Gardner Sullivan deigns to analyze, even the busy producers stop, we imagine, and turn to listen. For Mr. Sullivan is a very successful scenario writer, whereas most writers are very unsuccessful and do not know why.

The subject of criticism is the typical free lance scenario—which is almost the same as saying the typical unsuccessful scenario, because writers whose stuff assays high do not remain in the free lance class except by resisting the offers of covetous producers. The consistent writer of screenable stories soon gets on someone's staff at a good salary.

That is the condition, but it is not entirely a healthy condition. The publishers of typed fiction find it better to depend upon the free lance, and the writers of such stuff find it better to remain free lances. Only the frankly cheaper classes of magazines rely wholly on fiction ground out on their own desks. This condition is almost reversed in the publishing of motion pictures.

Theoretically, the free lance scenario writer has a broader field for material, a bigger market, a more generous experience. Practically, the opposite is true. The staff writer has all the advantage and does nearly all of the acceptable work.

And the whole simple reason for this state of affairs is a matter of detail. The writer of printed fiction need not know anything at all about printing, about type-setting or make-up or press-work. The writer of screen fiction must know something—at least the fruit of intelligent observation—about the studio, the players, the director, the properties, the settings, the camera, the screen itself.

So the scenario man must really have more shop knowledge than the magazine writer. To offset this, it might be imagined that the screen writer needed less grammar, punctuation and literary style. But that is not true. Almost inevitably those qualities go with the story-telling ability. It is very difficult to put a story together properly and usefully without the knack of putting words together. There are exceptions; occasionally good scenarios have been constructed by untrained and even illiterate persons. But they could not repeat. Theirs were single performances which were strong enough to produce themselves.

Successful scenario writing demands a lot more from its aspirants than successful fiction writing. It demands thorough literary training—that ability to construct logical situations and sequences that comes only with the study of WORDS—even though, paradoxically, words seem of slight importance in the finished work. It demands, too, understanding if not intimate knowledge of studio procedure—understanding, that is, of the things that make a screen picture different from a printed page.

The sharpened powers of observation of the trained writer, his trained intelligence, make it possible for him to deduce the technical details of production from the screen. It is not, or should not be, necessary for him to become a studio attache to solve the problem of screen acceptability.

But the general run of free lance screen writers do not acknowledge that there is such a problem to solve. They persist in regarding a scenario as a story manuscript providentially free from the irksome fetters of style and punctuation. They think the picture business is a market which uses, and prefers, its diamonds uncut and in the rough. They fail utterly to realize that the picture diamond must be arduously polished into a lens.

So Mr. Sullivan charges the free lance writers with a lack of screen study; and he must be right, because it is evident that screen study would turn the trick. Writers who do not know what is meant by the term would better stick to their type.

And he charges them with other misdemeanors: Lack of consistency, because they are more intent upon making their incidents visible to the naked eye than they are upon fitting them together into a story. Lack of serious consideration for their undertaking, because of that mistaken faith in the demand for rough diamonds; their notion that in the kaliedoscopic rush and hurly-burly of picture production, as it looks to the layman, anything will do.

Mr. Sullivan's excellent recipe for free lance success it to avoid the spectacular, mind the theme, and write about "human people doing human things." Following that rule will assuredly sell scripts, and give the producer an increased amount of stuff that, if not of extraordinary quality, at least will keep the studio pot a boiling. The production of first class free lance scenarios, equivalent to ten-cents-a-word fiction is another and weightier question.

We Are Criticised Abroad

EAST AFRICAN criticism of American pictures does not carry enough of a sting to influence our methods. There is, indeed, considerable of a smile in the fact that any part of Africa should presume to censure, if not censor, a film made in the United States. But they have gone ahead and done it just the same, regardless of our sneers or our indignation.

The Lourenco Marques Guardian, of Lourenco Marques, East Africa, is quoted by United States Consul John F. Jewell as containing a severe criticism of some American films shown there. "One," says the consul, "was condemned on the ground that it would lead foreign audiences to believe that in the United States it is a common thing for ex-convicts to become chiefs of police.

"There has been reason in many instances for an erroneous impression to be created in the minds of those who have been schooled under different systems of thought and government, and an American, even with a saving sense of humor, would not hesitate to condemn films of this kind as a misrepresentation of his country.

"Many persons abroad criticize an American film when it attempts to give a representation of court scenes without the proper surroundings, or causes the police to be represented without dignity or discipline, and as instruments to defeat justice. These criticisms are by discerning friends of American films and American institutions.

"Another motion picture was characterized as a 'rank and evil-smelling' illustration of American justice and 'either a blot or a libel.' The film feature to which the paper referred misrepresented the uniform high sense of justice which is characteristic of the American people, its bar, and judiciary."

This, at its very best, is perhaps a serious reminder of the burden of responsibility that rests so lightly, and even unconsciously, upon the shoulders of the American producer. Just as a writer "tossing off" a story before lunch is prone to forget the influence it may have upon ten or a hundred thousand innocent readers, so the producer ignores the swaying of human existence that may follow his display upon the screen.

And it is well that it is so. If timidity and awe and stage fright should accompany each journey into the public eye, accomplishment would be at an end and none would venture beyond the deeds that their fathers had proved safe and sane.

We cannot produce pictures, or write, or address meetings, without encountering criticism and making enemies. Universal approbation and applause is not the rule for success. Every producer knows what is right and what is not right, what should be shown and what should not. When he is sure of his own sincerity, let him go ahead with his product. Then criticism from East Africa or Chicago will deflect harmlessly from his armor of virtue.

New Bureau Created to Aid Exhibitor

WELDING OF PRODUCTION, DISTRIBUTION AND EXHIBITION IS AIM

CREATION OF AN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT new to film organization, to be known as the administrative bureau, is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky corporation.

Hiram Abrams will be managing director and B. P. Schulberg, vice-managing director. Their appointment explains their recent withdrawal from executive supervision of Paramount.

The plans and purposes of the administrative bureau embrace a policy that contemplates a more efficient coordination of the three primary elements that constitute the industry—production, distribution and exhibition.

Abrams Tells Aims

Mr. Abrams, commenting upon the new bureau, said:

"During my recent tour of the country with Mr. Schulberg, I realized that a vastly important and necessary realm of our business, the sphere of personal contact, had as yet been unexplored. I became convinced there should be a specific official channel through which a friendly intercourse and exchange of thought and opinion with the exhibitors could be consistently conducted.

"I proposed such an avenue of communication to the members of the executive board of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, asking to be relieved of the details of distribution so that I could devote all my time and energy to it.

"The executive board itself had often expressed the desire for a closer contact with the exhibitor, and for a greater understanding of his problems, and now, in its wisdom, it has organized this bureau for that purpose.

Feels Qualfied for Job

"I feel that my many years of experience as an exhibitor, and my subsequent and equally long experience as a distributor, enable me to grasp the aspirations and comprehend the obstacles of the average exhibitor, and I hope to be of personal service to each and every one of them.

"It is our wish to organize the exhibitors of America into a great common council by which we can obtain the value of their collective thoughts and opinions on all important trade questions. We wish these opinions to extend even to the matter of production itself, for we realize that the exhibitor should have a larger voice not only regarding the manner in which the pictures are delivered to him, but also in the original creation of the subjects which he shows.

Appreciate Exhibitors Importance

"There are many problems within the industry that demand and require solution, but we of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation realize that no trade problem has arisen yet or will arise in the future the solution of which does not rest solely with the exhibitor. It will be our purpose to maintain such close and constant association with the exhibitors as to solve the problems that confront the trade as they collectively wish them to be solved.

Hiram Abrams (above), managing director administrative bureau, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. B. P. Schulberg, (below), vice-managing director.

"We want the exhibitors to believe firmly that we consider their problems to be our problems, and we want to give, through the new bureau, special and individual service, and to do our utmost to relieve or entirely eradicate the difficulties of the exhibitor.

"That is what I would like the exhibitor to consider this department—his own service department, a branch office of his own theater, with Mr. Schulberg and myself as his personal agents. I want him to feel that we are always at his service, as in time I am sure we will make him know it."

Zukor Predicts Success

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, concurred in Mr. Abrams' statement that the administrative bureau had been specially designed for the welfare of the exhibitor, and said that the company hoped to express through the bureau its appreciation of the fact, not as yet completely realized, that the producer and the exhibitor are in the same business, and the interests of one are the interests of the other, adding:

"I believe exhibitors throughout the country will welcome this new sphere of communion between them and us, as it is certain to result in many constructive and progressive policies."

The administrative bureau is to introduce itself to the trade immediately, and much anticipatory interest centers about its first activity.

Petrova Works on New Play

Work on the fourth special starring production in which Madame Olga Petrova is to appear has been started at the Petrova studios under the direction of Ralph Ince. The story selected for this picture is from the pen of George Middleton, well-known author and scenario writer. Mr. Middleton is responsible for the famous stage success, "Polly of the Circus," in which Mabel Taliaferro scored one of her greatest triumps.

The title chosen for Madame Petrova's latest vehicle is "The Great Star" and in it she interprets the role of Lucille Caruthers, a daughter of a Southern gentleman of the old school, who has strong femininistic ideas of her own and the individuality to place them into effect.

"The Great Star" was constructed especially for Madame Petrova and her role meets in every way with the requirements demanded by the actress.

"Laugh and the World Laughs With You"

A Two-Column Remedy for the Blues

KITTY KELLY, motion picture reviewer of the Chicago Examiner, recently published the following on a Wednesday following Dark Tuesday:

"The Coal Cure, or Sherman Was Right." Written by Fuel Comissioner Garfield. Produced by the United States Government. Directed by Local Fuel Administrator Durham. Presented at all the motion picture theaters.

"This is an amazing stupendous production, involving a vast number of people and blanketing the country with its offering. Its outstanding virtue is thoroughness, not a detail being allowed to slip up.

"The title is the inspiration of Harry C. Miller, proprietor of the Boston, Rose and Alcazar theaters, who has booked the offering straight through for his theaters for Tuesdays for about eight weeks more, so patrons are requested to watch for it.

"Though Mr. Miller, to this writer's knowledge, was alone in titling the production, he is not alone in booking it, all of his exhibitor colleagues joining with him in a uniformity of behavior never before found among moving picture people.

"As a feature, the popularity of 'The Coal Cure' is questionable, there being too little action stretched over too much space for the preservation of anything like interest.

"But the behavior of the cast, made up of motion picture exhibitors, is magnificent. Everywhere one perceives graceful acquiescence to the director's directions, so that the result is a matter of unusual harmony.

"The thing shows what can be accomplished with sufficient pressure properly administered and is a credit to the personnel of the performers, if not particularly to the producing company. And at that, as propaganda, it may accomplish what it has set out to—cure the coal situation."

Monte M. Katterjohn, who supplies the big stories for Paralta productions, has been having a hard time of it since his chauffeur ran his car into a trolley-car a few weeks ago. Monte simply cannot get used to riding in the street-cars. The other day, when he thought he was about to be taken past his street, he jumped up and grabbed for the bell rope and before the conductor could head him off he had rung up six fares.

While in Jacksonville, Florida, recently, completing the final scenes in "American Buds," Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox "Baby Grand" stars, heard of the fuel shortage in New York, where they live, and were told that their apartment had been closed because of a lack of heat.

"Gee!" said Jane, "I left my doll home and I just know she will have pneumonia. Why didn't I think to bring her with me?"

Director O. A. C. Lund, in charge of Peggy Hyland's first William Fox production, told his assistant, George Grimler, to engage three "extras" for parts as army officers. The picture is tentatively called "The Debt of Honor."

When Mr. Lund arrived at the studio he was surprised to see four men in uniform. The director knew three of them because they had appeared in previous productions.

"I told you to get three, not four," Mr. Lund said to Grimler. "That fourth chap isn't the right type for this picture. We can't use him."

"No, you bet you can't" Grimler replied. "He's the real thing. He's an aviator in the naval service who just dropped in to watch us work."

"For Freedom of the World" Draws Crowds

Up to the close of the first week in February "For the Freedom of the World" had been played to capacity business by more than 1,000 exhibitors in every section of the United States and Canada, it is announced by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. Inspection of the booking records reveals that more than a thousand additional theaters have contracted for this spectacle at an early date and that contracts are coming in at the rate of 100 a day.

Goldwyn regards the business done by this production as little short of phenomenal. Not one exhibitor has complained that the picture fell short of his expectations, either as a spectacular drama of powerful audience interest or as a box-office money getter. All declare they could have played it—as some, in fact, did—at advanced prices and for an extended engagement.

Arrow President Takes Rap at Steep Rentals

The producer who sells his product at inflated prices is not only murdering his own organization, but he is forcing the buyer into film suicide, according to W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, one of the best known independent film men in the country.

According to Mr. Shallenberger, the majority of the buyers are paying too much for their pictures and all of them are overbuying.

"The trouble," he said, "can be traced directly to the producer and the inflated prices he has been placing on his negative. The producer comes into the market heralding the fact that his picture cost him so many thousands of dollars to make. This is the cream of his selling talk. He places an exorbitant price on the picture and expects to make a handsome profit for himself. The point is, he doesn't. He blankets himself.

"If the producer would be satisfied with selling his picture at a fair and equitable profit the entire business would be on a much better basis and there would be fewer failures—but he isn't. Too many producers are trying to squeeze every penny they can from every picture they make and in this squeezing process they are not only murdering their own organizations but are forcing the buyer to commit film suicide.

"But economic conditions due to the war in general and the motion picture industry in particular are bringing about a new state of things which will automatically eliminate the man who inflates prices. In the meantime, however, more intelligent attention will have to be given to prices placed on pictures if the industry is to be kept on an even keel."

"Miss Cinderella" Released

"Miss Cinderella," another Strand comedy with Billie Rhodes, was released by Mutual, February 18. The story is this: Mary has an idea that the son of her father's old friend who is coming to visit them is the usual spendthrift and pampered scion of wealthy parents. To prove her assertion she poses as a working girl and manages to have him meet her when she is apparently starving. He proves a real fellow and rescues her from black-handers who are about to blow up the house.

Woman Becomes Operator

The first woman in the province of Saskatchewan, Canada, to receive a provincial license to operate a projection machine is Mrs. Art. Pelletier, wife of the exhibitor at Estuary, Sask., who operates the Sunset theater.

Launch Hard Fight on Big War Tax

CANADIAN EXHIBITORS BATTLE FOR POOR AS WELL AS THEMSELVES

A SERIOUS SITUATION has arisen in motion picture circles in Manitoba, Canada, on account of the provincial government's determination to put through an amusement war tax bill which will provide for an extra stiff levy on all tickets of admission to amusements.

The exhibitors of Winnipeg and Brandon, the two principal cities, are thoroughly organized and will fight the measure. They are threatening either to close their theaters or to use their screen for a campaign against the government if the law is enacted.

Talk with Legislators

They have discussed the measure with Edward Brown, the provincial treasurer, the law amendments committee and various members of the provincial parliament and have obtained the support of a number of these law-makers by basing their case upon the fact that the tax is a discrimination against the poorer people who can afford only the ten, fifteen and twenty-five cent admission entertainments, and favors the rich who patronize the higher priced theaters.

The statement had been made when the bill was introduced in the legislature that the measure would increase the attendance at picture theaters, but the exhibitors point out that the tax on the low-priced tickets is relatively higher than on the more expensive admission.

Tax Now Graduated

A tax of twenty per cent on all theater tickets was originally planned, but this was changed so that the percentage varies from nine to twenty per cent, with the highest percentage affecting the low-priced tickets. This was done purposely to secure a larger revenue.

The following table explains how the proposed taxation works out:

Price of Ticket	Proposed Tax	Average per cent
$ .05	$ .01	20
$ .06 to .15	.02	20
.16 to .25	.03	15
.26 to .40	.04	12.3
.41 to .75	.05	9
.75 to 1.00	.10	11.4
1.01 to 1.50	.15	12
1.51 to 2.00	.20	11.4
2.01 to 2.50	.25	11.1

On tickets for boxing contests, horse race meets and similar events, a flat tax rate of 50 cents will be charged, according to the law as it now stands.

In speaking to the question in the house, Edward Brown pointed out that Manitoba and Saskatchewan were the last Canadian provinces to adopt an amusement war tax provision. Ontario derived $565,000 from this source last year while Quebec gained $650,000. He expected that the tax law would produce $200,000 for Manitoba, which would replace a similar amount lost through the abolition of the liquor license system.

F. J. Dixon opposed the bill because he felt it would add to the burdens of the poor. They needed all the recreation and diversion possible on account of war strains he said. Theater-goers of the class who would be hardest hit, he declared, were not the people who had chiefly benefitted under the temperance act. It is significant that the opposition voted with Mr. Dixon when the second reading of the bill was put to a vote, but the government members were, of course, in the majority.

Exhibitors Urge New Schedule

Mr. Brown was tackled by a strong deputation of Winnipeg exhibitors, who were accompanied by Max Finkelstein, their attorney, when the law amendments committee held a session. In behalf of the exhibitors, Mr. Finkelstein urged that a new schedule of taxes be adopted, this schedule to be as follows: One cent on tickets of less value than 25 cents; five cents on all tickets from 25 cents to 50 cents; and a ten cent rate on tickets from 50 cents to one dollar.

Mr. Brown answered that the whole purpose of the measure, namely the securing of large additional revenue, would be defeated if the tax on the low-priced admission tickets were thus reduced.

The theater men also suggested that the bill be dropped and that the owners of theater sites and buildings be taxed as the landlords were making big rentals out of theater properties.

Tells Poor Business

H. N. Jernberg, manager of the Province, Gaiety and Bijou Theaters, Winnipeg, stated that the Province did not afford a clear profit of six per cent; the Bijou was in arrears in taxes and the Gaiety had lost $1,800 in eight weeks. In the latter instance it had been necessary to put on a special campaign in order to repopularize the house.

F. R. Hyde of the Crescent Theater declared that he was willing to stand a ten cent tax on his 35-cent seats if the tax on lower-priced seats were cut.

Manager George Sackett of the Orpheum Theater was sure the receipts of his house would drop $2,000 per month through the war tax.

The exhibitors protested against the exemption of religious and educational entertainments, fairs and art exhibitions, but they favored the taxation of pass holders.

Sullivan Tells How to Write Scenarios

Thomas H. Ince Chief Says Chief Trouble With Outside Writers Is That They Fail to Take Screen Seriously

BY C. GARDNER SULLIVAN
Head of Ince Scenario Department

LACK OF SCREEN STUDY—that, I believe, is the chief reason why the outside writer fails to register a high percentage of sales to the producing companies.

In the several hundred manuscripts which have come to my attention in the last two years, I have been chiefly impressed by the fact that the authors did not seem to be writing for the screen, but rather along short story lines. By that I do not mean plot necessarily, but rather action, or lack of action.

As an example, a story depending upon brilliance of dialogue, or getting over some talking theme, possible in a magazine, must naturally fail on the screen. For, properly to bring out the author's idea, the picture would become more or less of an illustrated lecture.

Another great trouble is lack of consistency, writers striving for a certain situation, but subsidizing the theme, which every good story must have, for a series of thrilling incidents held together by a badly woven thread of coincidence.

If the free-lance writer of today will take his stories from the everyday life about him, not trying to make them vividly sensational, but merely tales of human people doing human things, I do not think he will have any trouble in disposing of his work, granted the writer has a certain gift for depicting the phases of life in an interesting manner.

He must realize that the screen, above all other fields of literary endeavor, has a technique particularly exacting, and the only way this can be learned is by practice and by studying the screen itself.

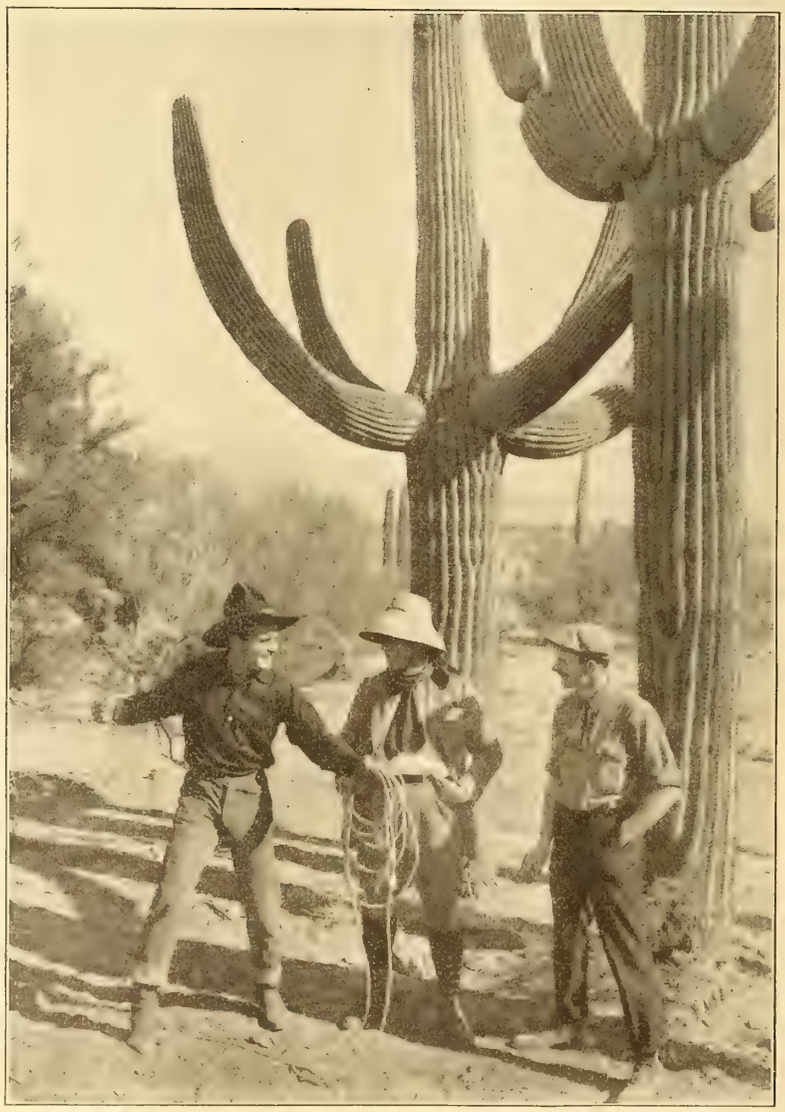
By studying the screen, I do not mean copying the ideas set forth thereon, as some writers have a particular weakness for doing, but rather profiting by the finished work, which, in nine cases out of ten, represents the result of hard, careful study.

The idea must not necessarily be new, but its treatment should be new, and it should above all seek to bring out some phase of life in which we are all interested, but which perhaps we may not have noticed until brought to our attention by a keener student of humanity.

Summing up, I would say that the trouble with the outside writer is that he does not take the screen seriously, and in many cases, I believe, having failed in other lines of literary endeavor, he turns to the motion picture not only as a last resort, but with a feeling of contemptuous superiority; that anything will do for pictures.

Until he learns that the screen demands the highest that he is able to give —and will accept nothing else, no writer will attain even the slightest success in this work.

New Sunshine Comedy Out



Another of the Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies was released February 17.

It is titled "Are Married Policemen Safe?" and is reported to be a satire on human nature as evidenced in the administration of justice. A crusade against women wearing clothes which are more abbreviated than the law allows results in policemen and juries being captivated by their captives.

The action ranges all the way from the United States to Mexico with trouble of several sorts developing in both countries. A Mexican who has fallen into the lap of the law here struggles out and finds the way opened to revenge when his American tormentors go to Mexico. It develops then that he is chief of police of a Mexican city and that he knows how to make the most of his authority. A railroad train running straight through a station is a feature of the action.

Start New Brockwell Film

Three days after she had completed "The Moral Law," at the William Fox studios on the Pacific coast, Gladys Brockwell began work on a new production. In the cast are William Scott, Bertram Bracken, Lucille Young, Georgie Woodthrop, T. A. Crittenden, Sarah Herman and Betro Buzi. Edward J. Le Saint is directing the picture.

Douglas Fairbanks talking over a scene from the new Artcraft picture, "Headin' South," with Supervising Director Allan Dwan and Director Art Rosson.

Zukor and Aids Praised for War Work

ROTHAPFEL AND OCHS PREDICT THE UNITED SUPPORT OF THE EXHIBITORS

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry formed to co-operate with the United States treasury department in its war program, last week received congratulations from S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theaters in New York and Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, on the effective work of his committee.

The recent letter sent to exhibitors throughout the country by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in which Mr. McAdoo expressed his appreciation of the co-operation afforded him by the motion picture industry prompted both Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Ochs to voice their commendations in letters to Mr. Zukor.

The other members of the treasury department committee are Jules E. Brulatour, Marcus Loew, George K. Spoor and Walter W. Irvin.

Letter From Rothapfel

Mr. Rothapfel said:

"A form letter from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in which he expresses his high appreciation of the assistance the motion picture industry has given his department, is before me.

"It is most gratifying to learn that the efforts of exhibitors and in fact the entire industry have been awarded the praise of the officials in Washington as mentioned in his letter. It is clearly evident that the committee of which you are chairman and which was appointed by the national association to confer with government officials as representatives of the industry, has done its work well.

Sees Greater Effort

"Mr. McAdoo's request in connection with the new war savings stamps campaign will receive every attention from exhibitors, I am sure, and the fact that the importance of our industry—particularly in these times—is appreciated by the government should spur every person connected with the business to put forth greater effort than ever in assisting the cause.

"We are working with the United States marine corps in staging 'Marine Corps Week' here, beginning next Monday, in connection with our presentation of 'The Unbeliever,' an Edison picture in which the marines actually took part. We expect to make it a big patriotic occasion and I mention it merely to show that we are always on the lookout, so far as these two houses are concerned, to find some way of directing the public mind toward the great national task which confronts us all.

"With personal regards and my compliments to your committee for its excellent work, I am, Yours sincerely, (Signed) S. L. Rothapfel."

Letter From Ochs

Lee A. Ochs, in an equally enthusiastic communication, said:

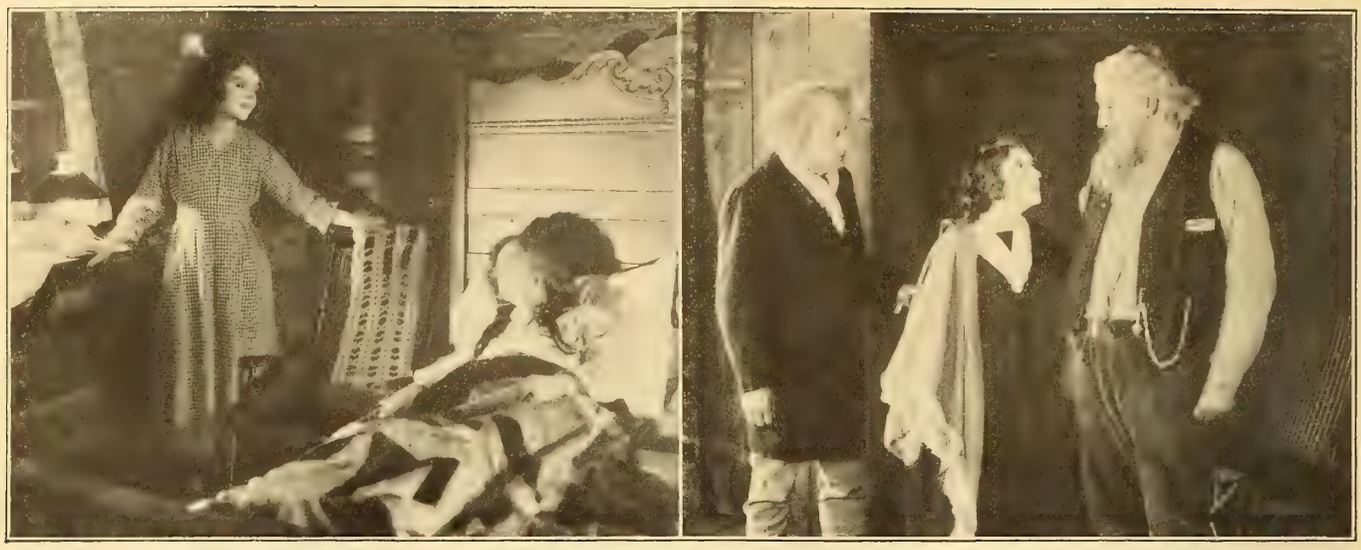
"Permit me to congratulate you and your associates on the committee appointed by the National Association to co-operate with the government in its war program, on your splendid work as evidenced in Secretary McAdoo's recent letter to exhibitors.

"The fact that the entire industry is behind the government and that it has done and will continue to do everything in its power to cooperate with the executives at Washington by placing at their disposal the great avenue of the screen, has been made clear to them by the committee of which you are chairman, and the effectiveness of your work is disclosed in Mr. McAdoo's appreciative mention in his letter concerning the War Savings Stamps drive.

"Exhibitors everywhere in the country will continue to give every assistance to the Government and Mr. McAdoo's appeal in this direction will receive their hearty patriotic response. With best wishes, believe me to be, Cordially yours, (Signed) Lee A. Ochs."

The activity of Mr. Zukor's committee has already received many laudatory comments in Washington and the added endorsements from two of the foremost factors in the exhibiting branch of the industry are especially gratifying.

Kenneth Macgowan Promoted



The high favor with which George Loane Tucker is regarded by Goldwyn finds additional confirmation in the appointment of Kenneth MacGowan as his aid. Until recently director of Goldwyn publicity, Mr. Macgowan brings to his new work all the energy and enthusiasm which has kept the name of Goldwyn constantly before the public. As editor of production he will make his headquarters at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee.

Plans New Thriller

Bernard Macfadden is preparing another thrilling story to follow his recent athletic feature, "Zongar, the Daredevil of Romance," in which George Larkin is starred. The company will leave shortly for the south, where the story will be filmed under the personal supervision of Mr. Macfadden.

A study of human interest in Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft picture, "The Lie."

Dare Death to Film "Heart of Sunset"

Rex Beach Players Bridge the Hazards of Revolution, However, and Return Safely to U. S.

WHEN THE REX BEACH PICTURES COMPANY sets out to picturize one of the author's novels there is never any question about "locations." If the scenario calls for New York City, as in "The Auction Block," New York City it is, not a West coast studio representation of famous New York places; or if the script prescribes Mexico, as in "Heart of the Sunset," players and technical staff are whisked off to Mexico.

All of which is preliminary to saying that members of the "Heart of the Sunset" company have just come back from nearly three months of wild adventure in Southwestern Texas and Northern Mexico filled to the point of volubility with interesting anecdotes and experiences involving actual contact with conditions as they are pictured in the Beach novel.

Despite official warning that they were making the excursions at their own risk, Director Frank Powell and his players made frequent journeys into Piedras Negras and vicinity for important scenes. Rebel snipers, Mr. Powell was told, were taking particular delight in watching for the advent of Gringoes and potting them when they were least expecting it. He was informed by Mexican federal officers that Americans who crossed the Rio Grande at this unfriendly stage of Villa feeling stood about a 50-50 chance of returning.

On several occasions the players were granted the honor of escort by a Federal bodyguard and were edified by the repeatedly expressed and earnest wish, couched in something sounding like English, that a few Villistas would turn up and afford the government troops a little target practice.

Director Powell at first affected to believe that this was mostly talk, but became persuaded one afternoon at the sight of a small band of Carranzistas in hot pursuit of a ragged but well armed flock of rebel soldiers, that there might really be some shooting that would make it uncomfortable, not to say dangerous, for visitors. Whereupon he decided he would keep as closely as possible to his own side of the river.

It was deemed safe, however, to photograph in the outskirts of Piedras Negras a dozen scenes requiring a Mexican ranch house, but it was found that the few of these really worth while had been burned by warring factions. It thereupon became necessary to construct one especially for the picture—no small undertaking, it will be realized, when the magnitude of these structures is taken into account.

To make certain that the structure would be true to type, R. W. McFarland, the company manager, journeyed to El Paso and engaged a firm of architects to prepare drawings of a sizeable structure to be built of concrete. After much hauling of sand, stone and lumber, this was erected at a suitable spot and the making of the scenes begun.

Other details of Mexican life are as faithfully depicted in the film, which is now being cut, titled and assembled at the Beach laboratory in New York City. Upon its completion, the picture will be released throughout the world by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation as a Rex Beach special—which is to say that it will not be rented to exhibitors as part of the regular Goldwyn program, as was the case with "The Auction Block," but will be handled as a production separate and distinct, such as "The Manx-Man" and "For the Freedom of the World."

"Daughter of Uncle Sam" Ready at Early Date

General Film announces that the final scenes of the twelfth and last episode of the serial, "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," are completed. This is far ahead of the release date and is an achievement when weather conditions are considered. The work of assembling, titling and printing the final chapters is now well under way at the Providence studio of the Jaxon Film Corporation, assuring speedy delivery to exhibitors.

Reports which have reached General Film since the release of the first episode on January 19, indicate that the serial has scored a success. A prominent Muncie, Indiana, exhibitor, T. C. Lacy, is quoted as declaring "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" to be the most wonderful serial he has ever seen.

"Ham" Works on New Comedy

"Ham" is at work again on a new Sunshine Comedy at the Lehrman-Fox studios. The famous comedian, who is known off the screen as Lloyd Hamilton, has recovered from the broken toe he received during the filming of his last comedy, "Hungry Lions in a Hospital."

New Jaxon Called "Marooned"

"Marooned," a lively one-reel comedy subject, is General Film Company's current Jaxon Comedy release. Following this will come "Sherman Was Right," an entertaining farce on domestic life.

Ince Makes War on Inconsistency

Producer, Citing Many Errors in Films Generally, Tells How He Keeps Them Out of Own Pictures

By THOMAS H. INCE

Head of Thomas H. Ince Studios, Inc.

THERE are still little inconsistencies in some motion pictures—inconsistencies which progressive producers have eliminated.

For instance: How many times have you watched a performance and noticed a telegram received by some actor in the photoplay—and then perceived that it was on a "send" blank? And what thoughts coursed through your mind anent the carelessness of the director who would let such an obvious mistake creep into his work—and let it pass on to the public without correction? The chances are that you mentally assigned this particular director to the "dub" class.

And perhaps the same picture displayed specimens of handwriting supposedly of different players—and you were further amazed to find that everybody in the picture that was called upon to do any writing wrote exactly the same hand.

If there is a letter to be addressed and projected on the screen it often happens that the man to whom this portion of the picture is entrusted—the insert man, so called—either forgets that such a thing as a postmark is stamped on all letters, or if he is thoughtful enough to remember the postmark he is apt to neglect providing an imitation of a postage stamp—all of which tends to make the fan uncomplimentary in criticism. And rightly!

And if the occasion arises for the reproduction of a passport, or a like document, the insert man sometimes goes on the theory that anyone likely to see the photoplay has never seen a passport—so what's the use of accuracy?

It is no infrequent thing to find that a check for a million or so dollars, the letter from the Black Hand demanding the same and the telegram from the son at college asking for an additional allowance are all written in the same hand.

And just as frequently as otherwise a letter or a telegram that has supposedly been sent in an envelope is displayed to the astonished gaze of the spectators as void of any crease as the day the paper came in its virginal freshness from the mill.

The more progressive producers of motion pictures are sticklers for realism and accuracy, though in many cases it is the one quality which they find most difficult of attainment. The mistakes of an insert man are not to be found in their pictures. No features leave the Thomas H. Ince Studios, for instance, until they are viewed, reviewed and rereviewed over and over again, with the one idea of avoiding inconsistencies in continuity and technique.

Fourth Selburn Released

Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby, two of the screen world's best known light comedians, are featured in the one-reel Selburn comedy, "His College Proxy," just released by General Film Company. This is the fourth of the Selburn comedies.

Fun Reigns in "Adam and Some Eves"

Klever Komedy Unique From the Standpoint That There Is Only One Man in Entire Cast

KLEVER PICTURES INC., has released the newest Klever Komedy entitled "Adam and Some Eves," with Victor Moore playing the only male role in the comedy. This picture is said to be unique from that standpoint. The comedy was written and directed by Chester M. De Vonde.

The picture opens showing Vic as the aviator Adam, bidding his sweetheart goodbye, before taking a fly in his "flying fliver." Next he is seen in the sky. He stubs his toe on one of the clouds, putting his flivver out of gear and down he comes, landing in a town known as "Femininеville."

This is a town inhabited only by women and no man is allowed to enter.

Helena Pinch, with wrinkles in her face big enough to hold a two days' rain, is Chiefess of Policess and she immediately puts Adam in the lockup. He is then put on trial before a "soprano jury," on which he chances to risk one eye. The judgess demands in her charge to the jury to "despise and hate all men and to bring up your children to do the same." The jury after a short deliberation decide that he is guilty and Adam is sentenced to be tickled all over and kept confined in prison.

At the outlook, Adam had as much chance as one apple in an orphan asylum and he had decided to take his medicine. After he is placed in his cell, both the judgess and the chiefess of policess try to vampire him and during the mixup he escapes.

The prison bell gives the alarm and the whole town of Femininеville is after Adam. They chase him everywhere. In the meantime Adam's sweetheart has got word through her pet goose that he is imprisoned in Femininеville and she is off to rescue him in her Rolls-Ford. By the time Adam is within reach of the city gates his sweetheart comes dashing in, Adam takes one flying leap, lands in her car, and off he dashes free from the hands of the women

"Props" Turns Opera Critic for Night

Sees "Thais" When Mary Garden Gives Him Ticket and "Pans" Show—Says Picture Has It Beaten to Death

By WM. B. ("PROPS") MAGINN

I AM asked by Mary Garden, having been her chief property man while she was in the movies, to see how she works in the opera of "Thais," she having sent me a ticket which was far back I could not see much but I heard a whole lot, and as a result I am willing to admit that Mary Garden is every bit as good as her movie press agent says she it and that is pretty blame good.

Mary, as we call her at the studio, reaches lyric heights hitherto unfathomed in singing this great and sensational part for the opera, but the opera has got things kind of twisted. For instance the monk, which in the movies has the name Paphnutius, is named Athanael for the opera probably because his regular name is to hard for people to understand in singing and instead of having the big temptation scene in Thais' boudoir they have got her vamping him in his front yard right before a whole party of fellows and girls dressed up for dancing and singing and laughing right while the temptation is being done.

The opera has got some movie stunts, but the conductor as the director is called can learn many things from the pictures. For instance the opera has got a double exposure showing Paphnutius (called Athanael) on his couch in the retreat of the monks and dreaming about Thais that has got bum lighting and the dancing is punk.

While I was there the electrician forgot to turn on the lights and his honor the Monk had a dark dream for a few minutes till everybody laughed so loud the electrician must of woke up because he throws on the Kliegs in a hurry. And they have got a little box on the front of the stage all lighted up and a fellow in it waves a little stick at the actors and even in the dark scenes a little light shines out from this little box. You can imagine what a movie electrician would catch for a bull like that, oh Boy!

The fellow singing the subtitles for Paphnutius (called Athanael) conversation is a baritone, but has not got the figure Hamilton Revelle has. I bet if Ham, as we call him at the studio, could sing he could take this fellow Dufranne's job and make good. I guess Mary, as we all call her, must have sent him a ticket too, because there he was in a seat big as life and twice as natural wearing a full dress suit that certainly looks as if it belongs to him.

The opera has got its good points such as the scene in the desert, where Thais and the Monk sing songs about the sprinkling pot when Thais is awful thirsty and doesn't want to wait to have a drink.

I know what I like and that duet is swell all right because I almost cried. But it's got little nuisances, too. For instance there was a fellow sitting next to me kept saying over and over to himself, "Magna feek, magna feek," and a lady sitting on the other side has a pocket flask she uses to look at the liberetto and which like to drove me nutty when Mary was dying under a tree that would make a movie director holler for the stage carpenter to be fired quick before he gets apoplexy and croaks right on the set.

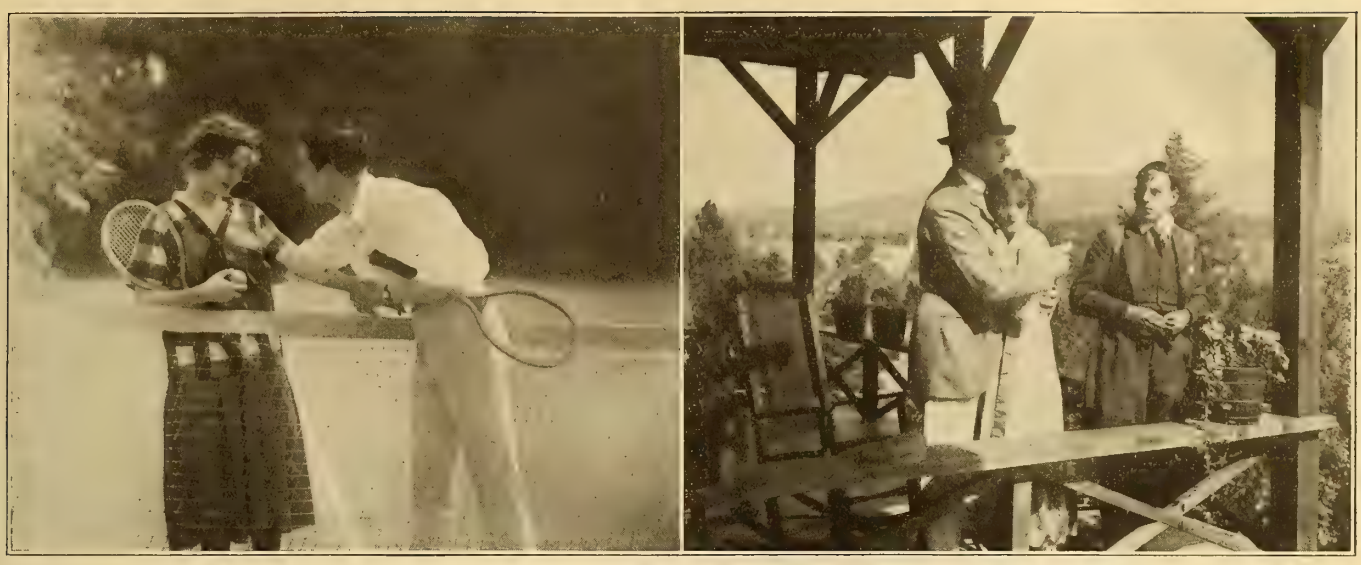
And the billings says a lyric romance in three acts and the blame thing has got four and it lasts till blame near twelve o'clock and I hear a gray haired old lady saying she pays a $1.10 to stand up in the aisle and can't sit down because somebody will grab up her standing room.

But oh Boy, Mary is some vamp and she wears the same frank costumes in the opera as in the movies, which ought to be worth a $1.10 for standing room if they'd let you stand in the wings or the little box where the fellow waves the stick.

Exhibitors Eager to Show "Doctor and Woman"

Twenty prints of "The Doctor and the Woman" have been ordered by the New York branch of Jewel Productions, Inc., as the result of requests for bookings that have already been forthcoming from exhibitors.

Announced as the companion picture to "The Price of a Good Time," the newest Jewel release has aroused the interest of exhibitors who ran its predecessor. Both were produced by Lois Weber and feature Mildred Harris.



According to Harry M. Berman, sales manager of the Jewel organization, the picture will be released March 4 and every effort will be made to have all the first run houses in the New York territory show it within the thirty days that follow.

Dustin Farnum a Producer

Dustin Farnum has formed his own film concern with Harry Sherman in Los Angeles. It will be known as Sherman Pictures, Inc. The pictures will be known under the brand of Dustin Farnum Feature Plays.

Mutual Has All-Star Cast in "My Wife"

Ann Murdock in Stellar Role Takes Part of Girl Who Wed Guardian So She Could Inherit Fortune of Her Aunt

ANN MURDOCK is seen in a screen production of "My Wife" in the Mutual star production series of February 18.

The picture was made under the direction of Dell Henderson at the Empire All Star studios. It is an adaptation of the play by Michael Morton, which had an extended run both in America and England and achieved a tremendous success with Billie Burke when first produced in New York. Originally it was a starring vehicle for John Drew, but in the film version the play was altered to provide a stellar part for Beatrice Hammond, "My Wife," who is portrayed by Miss Murdock.

The story presents the amusing and interesting complications developed by a marriage of convenience entered into by Beatrice who, in order to comply with the conditions of a codicil in her wealthy aunts will, in which she is left a million dollars on condition that she marry before she is eighteen, weds her guardian "in name only," with the intention of obtaining a divorce when her lover returns from the front.

It becomes embarrassing and decidedly uncomfortable for the guardian when he falls in love with his wife and he repents of his bargain. The comedy element is dominant throughout in spite of the seriousness which involves the unusual position of the husband.

Miss Murdock is said to be thoroughly at home in the role of the temporary wife, giving it a lightness of touch and vivacity that are charming. She wears some stunning gowns of the ultra-fashionable mode, one of which is decollette.

Rex MacDougal reveals some fine acting in the part of the husband—a part created by John Drew in the stage production. Mr. MacDougal has supported Miss Murdock in many of her stage successes in which he has made distinct hits, his most recent being his characterization of a role in "The Three Bears."

The cast supporting Miss Murdock in "My Wife" is an all star one, including Amy Veness, who has appeared with Mme. Nazimova, Tyrone Power and Ethel Barrymore; Ferdinand Gottschalk, who plays "Gibby Gore," the part he created in the stage version; Hubert Druce, Grace Carlyle, Dudley Hill and Carl Sauermann.

Fox Talks on Scandal Film

Since it was announced that R. A. Walsh has been working on a production founded on a recent New York society scandal and subsequent murder trial, the William Fox policy of reticence in part has been abandoned.

Mr. Fox himself is now the author of a statement regarding the photoplay in which he argues that all of the publicity the case received in the press will redound to the advantage of the exhibitor —may, in fact, be considered as so much preliminary advertising.

"Mr. Walsh and I talked over the matter at the time; looked at it from all angles and then decided it would furnish the material for a photodrama notable in the annals of the screen," said Mr. Fox. "We took into account especially the human appeal—the mother's love for her child and the super-dramatic scene in which she faces, alone, the representatives of the law, who, being men, are natural allies of the man who sought to deprive her of her child.

"Then Mr. Walsh was given a free hand. The high qualities of directorship which he exhibited in such photoplays as 'Carmen,' 'The Conqueror,' 'The Regeneration,' and 'The Honor System,' showed that he was eminently capable of directing even as great a picture as this promises to be.

"From the exhibitor's angle, it represents a great opportunity. The picture should make a record."

Miss MacDonald Praises "Doug"

Katherine MacDonald, who plays opposite Douglas Fairbanks in his new Artcraft picture, "Headin' South," says that in working with the acrobatic actor, one must be a daredevil athlete.

"His stunts," continued Miss MacDonald, "are more thrilling than I have ever seen in a circus, and really the risks he takes are great.

"While we were working down at Tucson, Arizona, on a train hold-up, he leaped all over the locomotive with the agility of an animal. His jump from the speeding train onto an opposite bank caused us all to shriek with horror. He certainly earns his large salary.

"Working with Mr. Fairbanks has other compensations than money. He is a student and his peculiar philosophy, when treated seriously, is more refreshing and instructive than any of the philosophers I have studied at school."

Big moments in the Vitagraph picturization of Sgt. Arthur Guy Empey's war book "Over the Top."

Seize Impersonator of Sergt. Empey

Canadian Imposter Is Deported Following Vigorous Search By Police and Subsequent Capture in Philadelphia

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, reports the arrest and deportation last week of a man who impersonated Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, author of "Over the Top" and star of the big Vitagraph production which is being made from the American fighter's famous war book.

The man was first noted in Albany, N. Y., later on a train from the capital to New York City and finally in Philadelphia, where he was arrested.

According to the information reaching Mr. Irwin, the impostor, in the uniform of a British soldier, appeared at a convention of lumbermen in the Ten Eyck Hotel at Albany and delivered a patriotic address which roused the delegates to great enthusiasm.

The manager of the Ten Eyck had seen Empey at one of his lectures and he felt certain that the man was a faker. He wired to Lee Keedick, Empey's lecture manager, and Robert Gordon Anderson, of G. P. Putnam's Sons, Empey's literary adviser and author of the scenario for "Over the Top." They, in turn, communicated with Mr. Irwin.

Empey's associates notified the Albany hotel man that the sergeant was in Scranton, Pa., and consequently could not have been in Albany. A search was started for the impostor, but he had already left Albany and was said to be on his way to Buffalo. Notices were sent immediately to the police departments of Buffalo, Philadelphia and other eastern cities, asking that the man be detained.

It later developed that the man, instead of going westward, had boarded a train for New York City and on board had introduced himself to a party of American soldiers as "Over the Top" Empey. He was hailed as the heroic American who went to France and fought for eighteen months in the front line trenches until, after being wounded seven times, he was forced into a hospital and temporary retirement.

It was in this atmosphere that the impostor showed himself different from Empey, for he got uproariously drunk and boasted largely of his exploits. Empey, Mr. Irwin announces, rarely uses stimulants, although in his book he speaks gratefully of the rum ration that was served in the trenches to warm the men against the chill and dangers of their position.

The bogus Empey was traced from New York City to Philadelphia and there was placed under arrest. Within twenty-four hours he was on his way to Canada.

Miss Pearson Works on Big War Drama

William Fox Predicts "A Daughter of France," the New Play, Will Be Best One in Which Star Ever Appeared

VIRGINIA PEARSON has begun work in what will be one of the most stirring war dramas yet made for the screen, according to an announcement from the William Fox offices.

Director Edmund Lawrence, whom Mr. Fox recently acquired, makes his debut with the Fox forces with this production.

Hugh Thompson, who plays opposite Annette Kellerman in the marine spectacle, "Queen of the Sea," and who had the leading male part in "The Forbidden Path," appears in a similar role in this picture.

"Exhibitors may confidently expect Miss Pearson's most powerful story and most dramatic vehicle in the play she now has in preparation," said Mr. Fox. "It has the tentative title of 'A Daughter of France,' and is a vivid pictorial presentation of the way in which one woman served the tri-color. More than the usual amount of time was spent on this film before actual photography was commenced. Our purpose now is to release the drama as a Special Feature for the week of March 24."

The production will enlist the services of a large number of players. Prominent in Miss Pearson's supporting company, in addition to Mr. Thompson, are Herbert Evans, George Moss, Ethel Kaufman, Anthony Merlo, Maude Hill and Naida Gary. Miss Hill was in "Sister Against Sister," and Mr. Evans in "All for a Husband," both recent Virginia Pearson features. George Moss will be recalled particularly for his excellent characterization of the Bishop in "Les Miserables."

"A Daughter of France" is being filmed at the former Victor studio. William Zollinger is in charge of the photography. The settings are said to be noteworthy. Especial emphasis is laid on the interiors of the French chateau, where most of the action takes place. It is declared that because of the depth of the scenes in the chateau living room more lights of all kinds are being used to assure the recording of detail than have been required for months.

Beautiful Music for "Lest We Forget"

Program Outlined as Arranged by George William Beynon, Conductor of Orchestra at the Lyric in New York

"LEST WE FORGET," Metro's great screen spectacle based on the sinking of the Lusitania, starring the beautiful French actress, Rita Jolivet, has a magnificent musical setting, especially arranged by George William Beynon.

Mr. Beynon conducts the orchestra of thirty pieces which is adding to the effectiveness of the New York run of "Lest We Forget" at the Lyric Theater.

Music of great beauty and dignity, suitable to the sincerity of the production, occasionally lightened by patriotic airs popular with the soldiers of the allied forces, forms the background of harmony against which this stirring drama is played.

In some of the most powerful scenes Gounod's "Ave Maria" is heard, as a sort of obligato to the battle theme arranged as its accompaniment by Mr. Beynon. This gives the effect of hope rising out of the chaos of destruction.

Verdi's "La Forza del Destina" is another striking selection used. The De Koven setting of Kipling's "Recessional," from which the picture takes its name, has a prominent place in the synchronization.

At one point, where the soldiers are shown at the front, the men in the orchestra whistle "Over the Hills," giving utterance to the gaiety of the men on the screen. "Over the Hills" was the song popular in the camps "over there" at the beginning of the war.

The Marche Lorraine is used for the reviewing of troops, when "Papa" Joffre inspects his boys. When the French and German forces meet on the firing-line, there is a contest of musical phrases, the "Marseillaise" and "Die Wacht am Rhein" opposing each other as the nations they represent advance and retreat.

An arrangement of all-French airs, called "Aux Aveugles," has been made by Mr. Beynon to be played in the scenes showing the men wounded in the hospital. During the maneuvers of the Zeppelins Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyrie" is played. Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" gives the swing and enthusiasm that typify the entrance of the United States into the war.

Selections from famous operas are interpolated to accompany the scenes in which Miss Jolivet as Rita Heriot, a favorite opera singer, appears in snatches from Massenet's "Manon," Bizet's "Carmen," and Massenet's "Herodiade."

Saint-Saens' "Samson and Delilah" has been chosen as the background of some of the love scenes, notable among the airs being "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice." Massenet's "Elegie," a Gavotte from "Manon," Beethoven's "Adagio Cantabile," Bizet's "Agnus Dei," and favorite selections from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite have also been arranged in synchronization with various moments in the production to which they are admirably suited.

Libraries Converted to Aid of Films

Many Will Post Lists of Photoplays Based on Books —Opens Good Avenue of Publicity to Exhibitors

EXHIBITORS who have sought the co-operation of the library in their town and found it valuable both in advertising film versions of classics and in giving their theaters prestige among the cultured classes, will be glad to learn that the tables are being turned and the libraries are about to seek the aid of the theaters.

The value of motion pictures as an introduction to literature will be tested in a number of libraries of the country during the next few months, according to the February issue of the Library Journal, which contains a list of photoplays of recent release based on well known books.

These lists are intended to be posted on the bulletin boards of the libraries as a guide to those attending picture theaters who may wish to know something further about the books on which the photoplays are based.

"The movies," says the Library Journal, "have of late years been considered the chief rival of the libraries for public attention, but it is now found that the two may act in concert, to their mutual benefit and the common good. This number of the Library Journal is, therefore, specialized on this topic. Movies more and more find their subjects in great books, as 'Quo Vadis' and 'Les Miserables,' and the local library may well advertise that fact by displaying a movie poster and with it copies of the book in question or of cognate books and periodical articles. One library in Indiana has arranged with local managers to share in the net returns where the library advertises the book films in this way."

The wise exhibitor, especially the exhibitor in the small town who is eager to enlarge his patronage by creating a taste for pictures among the better element, will find this a psychological time to interest librarians and teachers in his theater. He is almost certain to run several photoplays based on worth-while books during the coming months, and he can greatly increase attendance if he is able to have the pictures announced in the library and schools. If he has found these indifferent to him in the past, he should not neglect the opportunity of calling their attention to the editorial in the Library Journal.

"The Thing We Love" Is Next Paramount

New Release Will Present Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams in Drama Dealing with Enemy Plotters

THE NEXT PRODUCTION to be released under the Paramount trademark presents Wallance Reid and Kathlyn Williams in "The Thing We Love," picturized by Harvey Thew from the story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel, which sounds a powerful patriotic note.

It shows the cunning of the country's enemies and how they work in the dark and strike down a man from behind. The story is particularly timely, although it shows none of the war's horrors. The scene is set in the period just prior to America's entrance into the great world war, and deals with German plotters who attempt to injure a manufacturer making munitions for the Allies.

Wallace Reid as Rodney Sheridan and Kathlyn Wililams as Margaret Kenwood in a series of sensational incidents are able to avert an explosion which would have wrecked the plant.

The co-stars in "The Thing We Love" played opposite each other in the Paramount release, "Big Timber," which was well received throughout the country.

The supporting cast includes Tully Marshall, the noted heavy of the stage and screen, Mayme Kelso, Charles Ogle and Billy Elmer. The latter again appears in the role of a detective, in which character he has been seen to advantage in a number of Paramount pictures.

The production was directed by Lou Tellegen.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation anticipates that this picture will create considerable comment, as it presents the much debated question as to whether men or women feel more severely the terrible burden of war and it is expected to arouse patriotic enthusiasm in every community where it is shown.

Harvey Thew, who wrote the scenario, was responsible for the screen versions of many other popular Paramount pictures, such as, "The Big Sister," "The Kiss," "The Years of the Locust," "The School for Husbands," and others.

Lasky Praises "Wild Youth"

In a telegram to Walter E. Greene, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president and head of productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, wired from Los Angeles as follows:

"Having just witnessed J. Stuart Blackton's production of 'Wild Youth,' I have to express my words of tribute to a brother producer. Mr. Blackton has secured a remarkable story on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel. The picture has a wonderful cast. Miss Huff, as the youthful girl of the story, never has done a better performance than in 'Wild Youth.' I cannot be too enthusiastic in praising this production."

Weather Makes 'Em Mad and Glad

Director Tourneur, Held Back on "Prunella," Peeved Over Arctic Days, But Jose, with Siberian Picture, Is Delighted

IN FT. LEE, N. J., Director Maurice Tourneur is heaping imprecations upon the weather man for the arctic weather with which he has surrounded the Famous Players-Lasky studio.

The production of "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark as the star, is going on under difficulties, for the weather has made travel to and from the studio uncertain, and the shortage of fuel has caused the authorities to withhold electric power at inopportune times.

'Tis an ill wind that blows no good, however, for at the Fifty-sixth street studio in New York City Director Edward Jose hailed the drop in the mercury with delight. He has begun the production of "The Resurrection," with Pauline Frederick as the star and had started on interiors when the blizzard arrived. This picture will contain Siberian scenes which he had contemplated taking in the extreme northern part of the state, near the Canadian border, where the temperature at this time of the year is about twenty degrees below zero. Mr. Jose dropped the interior scenes and immediately arranged for the filming of these Siberian pictures near New York City.

Mineola, L. I., was selected, where three hundred persons were assembled. The cold was severe and the fine snow felt like needle points. Daniel Pennell, Jose's assistant, had bonfires built to keep the extras warm, and on each fire was a steaming pot of three gallons of coffee.

Rehearsing was an apparent cruelty, but of course absolutely necessary. After several rehearsals of a very dramatic scene between Miss Frederick, Robert Oliver, the leading man, and Gerald Austin, the heavy, the scene was being photographed when suddenly Miss Frederick dashed out of the lines and seizing both hands full of snow clutched an extra man by the ear and nose. Jose and several of the male principals rushed up to demand what the man had done. "Nothing," said Miss Frederick, "but he came near being frozen."

The man was a Russian who did not understand English and when he realized what Miss Frederick had done for him he dropped on his knees and kissed her hand.

Miss Young to Appear in Prison Garb

Select Star Takes Part of Girl Wrongly Accused and Convicted in "The House of Glass" — Picture Ready Soon

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in prison garb is the novel sight which will greet this star's many admirers when the "House of Glass" is released by Select Pictures Corporation within the next few weeks.

Miss Young has created many famous roles during her life on the screen, but it remained for "The House of Glass" to present her in stripes and the lock-step—or the modern equivalent which prison reform has substituted for these time-honored ear-marks of the jail bird.

In "The House of Glass" Miss Young plays the part of a girl who, believing herself on the threshold of a happy marriage, finds herself landed in the Tombs so charged with complicity in a major robbery that proof of her innocence is impossible.

It is while serving the resultant prison term that Miss Young—discarding for once the beautiful habiliments in which she has made so many notable screen pictures—appears in one reel in the drab garb of a Blackwell's Island inmate. It is a novel view of Clara Kimball Young, and a most interesting one.

Admirers of Miss Young will not be surprised to hear that in this difficult characterization she has been able entirely to sink the brilliant personality which she brings to many of her more worldly roles, and to appear on the screen a living visualization of rejected and entrapped innocence.

The cutting of "The House of Glass" is progressing rapidly under the close attention of Miss Young and Emile Chautard, who directed the piece. Meanwhile, the busy star is greatly engrossed in the prepartaions for her next Select production, a screen version of Elinor Glyn's successful serial, "The Reason Why."

"The Reason Why" will be directed by Robert G. Vignola.

New Play for American Star

William Parker, the American scenario writer, has just completed a new comedy-drama for Margarita Fisher, the working title of which is "The Primitive Woman."

The story is different from anything Miss Fisher has ever done, but it lends itself remarkably to her personality, being written especially for her.

Wanted—A Million Dollar Photo Play

J. Stuart Blackton Says He Would Be Happiest Man in World to Pay That Sum for Story Really Worth It

"NO one realizes better than myself how much value can be placed in a story," said J. Stuart Blackton in an interview. "Right at the present minute, I am proving that no price is too great for a picture play plot. I was very unkindly criticized by my friends for purchasing the six Gilbert Parker stories at the price I paid; was called an extravagant fool and all sorts of harsh names, simply because I paid a fortune for the right to produce 'The Judgment House,' 'The World for Sale' and 'Wild Youth'; but I want to go on record right now that they are the best literary investments I ever made. I wish I could buy a thousand stories at the same rates."

"I have dozens of good stories under consideration; some of them being held for quite a pretty price. But their price is of no consequence if the story is there. I would gladly pay half a million dollars in spot cash for a series of really great stories. It is a lot of money, but they would be worth it."

Without pretending to be a great author, but standing as a producer with a brilliant string of financial successes to his credit, Commodore Blackton proudly points to "The Battle Cry of Peace," written by him, as an example of what a picture can earn and what can be paid for a story.

"That one picture has earned more than a million dollars, so why do people believe that any price is too great for a story?" he asked. "I would be the happiest man in the world to pay even a million dollars for a story worth that much. It would be the cheapest story I ever purchased."

Commodore Blackton distributes his pictures through Paramount.

Industrial Film Pleases

An interesting industrial film, showing the manufacture of labor-saving devices for the printing industry by the Miller Saw-Trimmer Company of Pittsburgh and their uses in various plants, was presented before the Trade Press Association at the Chicago Advertising Association's club rooms a few days ago.

The production has educational as well as advertising value, since it gives very complete views of the manufacturing of the machines, the casting of the iron and the assembling of the parts, and also shows technical details in the work of printing newspapers and books.

World Announces Many New Films

Makes Public the Titles of All Pictures Completed and Scheduled for Release Up to Middle of May

THE WORLD FILM CORPORATION is able to announce to exhibitors the titles of all the World-Pictures Brady-Made completed and scheduled for release up to the middle of May. Inasmuch as the chronological order of the pictures is not determined, no release dates are given and the following order is only approximate.

Kitty Gordon in "Divine Sacrifice" leads the list. Associated with Miss Gordon in this picture is Jean Angelo, who is leading man for Sarah Bernhardt in the present American tour.

Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley follow with "Broken Ties," which is directed by Mr. Ashley and possesses a complication of the tensest sort involving no less than six persons, the solution of which is accomplished by the sacrifice of the victim.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are co-starred in "His Royal Highness," in which picture Mr. Blackwell performs a feat of marvelous athletic dexterity.

Alice Brady reappears on the World program in a most sympathetic role in "The Spurs of Sybil," a comedy drama. In this picture, Miss Brady portrays a very ambitious girl who surmounts all kinds of obstacles, both serious and ludicrous, in order to win her spurs.

Kitty Gordon's next picture is called "The Wasp" and contains a number of startling mob scenes and exciting episodes which indicate some deviation from her previous roles.

"The Cross Bearer," in seven reels, with Montagu Love and Jeanne Eagele, is prepared for publication. This is the much discussed picture showing conditions in Belgium at the opening of the war. Montagu Love portrays the masterly figure of Cardinal Mercier in his role of protector of the oppressed Belgians. A delightful love story is bound up with the sterner duties of the prelate and relieves the harrowing details. Several military scenes of surpassing interest are included which are in keeping with the massive scale of the production.

Madge Evans is co-starred with George MacQuarrie in a picture with the thought-provoking title, "Wanted, a Mother." The story revolves about the vicissitudes of little Madge as the motherless child of an ambitious surgeon who endeavors to renew the affections of her father and at the same time find a suitable mother. Some of the scenes are of marked beauty, having been photographed in the Magnolia Gardens of Savannah, Georgia.

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge appear in "The Way Out," Ethel Clayton in "The Witch Woman," and Kitty Gordon in "Devil's Dice," all of which titles are not permanently decided upon. Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell appear together in "Leap to Fame," and Ethel Clayton plays an unusual role in "A Soul Without Windows," which has the Shaker life as a portion of its background. "Journey's End," which is also an Ethel Clayton picture, has John Bowers as leading man. The scenes are of great natural beauty, being laid in Florida. Another Alice Brady release, called "Nether Currents," is listed for publication.

The release sheet also contains an "announcement extraordinary." Inasmuch as such pictures—previous to their being permanently titled—as "Mothers of France," "Rasputin" and "The Cross Bearer" were unveiled to the public under this caption, the implication is that another superpicture is to be released on the World program.

Ethel Clayton is scheduled to appear in "A Modern Girl" and another all-star production, entitled "Helene," is about completed. Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Montagu Love, George MacQuarrie and John Bowers are among the long list of World players in the picture.

Sophye Barnard, Balboa star.

"Over Here," a one-reel subject showing what the large industrial plants of the country are doing to aid the United States in the war, is being distributed through the Unity Photoplays Company.

Hart's Fame Widespread

William S. Hart, the Ince star appearing in Artcraft, has won renown for his remarkable delineations of western character both on the speaking stage and in pictures.

"Big Bill" Hart, as he is known throughout the country, looks as if he just came out of the west, a real stone-featured cowboy who rides a horse and shoots a gun as though he knew how and not as if he were doing it for his salary.

Hart was born in Newburgh, N. Y., and his parents moved to North Dakota when he was an infant. From the time he was old enough to walk until he was fifteen he associated with cowpunchers, Indians and frontiersmen, and became an accomplished horseman as well as an expert marksman.

At the age of nineteen he went to New York City and made his first appearance on the stage in "Hamlet." Within five years he was supporting Modjeska and was leading man for Julia Arthur. He played leading parts in "The Squaw Man," "The Virginian," and other successful plays.

The tremendous popularity of his initial appearance in motion pictures under the direction of Thomas H. Ince led to a continuation of western plays as his specialty, and he has starred in notable film productions. His last Artcraft picture is "Blue Blazes Rawden," released February 18.

Release Mix Play in March

Tom Mix's next starring vehicle for William Fox is "Six-Shooter Andy." It will be one of the March releases. The large cast includes several of the children who had roles in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and similar Fox productions.

Gloria Hope, Paralta Star.

A thrill and a still in "Keith of the Border." A Triangle play featuring Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick.

Eleven Plays on New Triangle Program

Olive Thomas Opens Month in "An Heiress for a Day"—Dorothy Dalton Closes in "The Unfaithful"

DURING March Triangle will release eleven pictures. Olive Thomas opens the month, on March 3, in "An Heiress for a Day," a new comedy drama directed by Jack Dillon, in which she is supported by Joe King, a leading man new to Triangle colors. Miss Thomas, who is said to equal, if not surpass, her clever work in "Indiscreet Corinne" and "Limousine Life," has a charming role as a little manicurist with whom fickle fortune trifles.

The second feature for this week is "The Shoes That Danced," an adaptation of John A. Morosco's American Magazine story dealing with life on the fringe of New York's underworld, in which Pauline Starke, Wallace MacDonald and Dick Rosson are featured.

A Saturday Evening Post story by Frederic Bechdolt, "The Hard Rock Breed," is the first release for the week of March 10, showing J. Barney Sherry and Jack Curtis as the two typical hard rock men, and including in the cast Margery Wilson and Jack Livingston. The other feature is "The Sea Panther," an elaborate costume picture with William Desmond in the title role as a swashbuckling pirate of the days of Captain Kidd. Mary Warren, who has been with the Triangle forces for some time, makes her initial appearance as leading woman with Mr. Desmond. The famous Clara Morris wardrobe was utilized in providing costumes for this play.

For the week of March 17, Roy Stewart stars in a new Western thriller, "Faith Endurin'," by Kenneth B. Clarke, said to be the strongest vehicle for a two-gun hero in which Stewart has ever been cast. Supporting the cowboy star are Miss Fritzi Ridgeway and a carefully selected cast. "The Answer," a socialistic drama starring Alma Rubens, is the second release. Joe King enacts the role of John Warfield, socialist, and the supporting cast includes Claire Anderson, former Triangle-Keystone ingenue, Francis McDonald, recently seen as the highwayman in "The Gun Woman," Jean Hersholt, Wilbur Higbee and Betty Pearce.

For the week of March 24, "Nancy Comes Home" is presented, with Myrtle Lind, late of the Triangle-Keystone bevy of beauties, and Jack Gilbert, who has recently returned to the Triangle fold. Myrtle Rishell, a newcomer at the Culver City studios, appears as a society matron. The adventures of a young school girl, who, neglected by her society mamma, cultivates the acquaintance of the family chauffeur, are divertingly portrayed.

The second release of the week is "Innocent's Progress," a society drama featuring Pauline Starke, and numbering in the supporting body Lillian West, Jack Livingston, Charles Dorian and Curley Baldwin. Little Miss Starke, who is featured for the third time under the direction of Frank Borzage, enacts the role of a country girl who is driven from home by the false accusations of narrow minded parents, and seeks her fortune in a large city.

Dorothy Dalton is seen in a two-reel feature, "The Unfaithful," released March 31, a play with an intensely dramatic plot. The second release for the week is "The Marriage Bubble," a diverting three-reel comedy-drama, with William Desmond in a dual role.

"Another Foolish Virgin" completes the month's program. This picture is based on W. Carey Wonderley's story of the same title, and has been adapted for the screen by Charles J. Wilson of the Triangle staff. It is described as a society drama offering an unusual theme for a dramatic production. Included in the cast are Margery Wilson, Texas Guinan, last seen in the title role in "The Gun Woman," Mildred Delfino, Francis McDonald, Lee Hill and George Pearce.

"The Lie" Under Way

At the Famous Players-Lasky Fifty-sixth street studio, New York City, the production of "The Lie," starring Elsie Ferguson, is well under way and the interiors will be completed this week, after which the outside scenes will be taken.

J. Searle Dawley, the veteran producer, is directing this subject and pays high tribute to Miss Ferguson's art.

"Studio work is made a pleasure," says Mr. Dawley, "with a talented woman like Miss Ferguson."

"The Lie" was adapted by Charles Maigne from the play by Henry Arthur Jones. Miss Ferguson as Elinor Shale is surrounded by a strong supporting cast, including Betty Howe as Lucy, the treacherous sister, Dave Powell as Gerald Forster, whom both girls love; John L. Shine as Sir Robert Shale, their father, and Percy Marmont as Noll Dibkin, who loves Elinor and plays an important part in the story. Charles Sutton and Bertha Kent as the butler and maid add humor to the play.

Percy Marmont is the English actor who appeared in "Rose of the World," with Miss Ferguson and John L. Shine is a member of the noted Shine family which has been prominent on the English stage.

Goldwyn Announces Capitol Comedies

William H. Parsons, Head of National Films, Will Be the Star—To Make Twenty-six a Year

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION announces the creation of Capitol Comedies, starring "Smiling Billy" Parsons.

Twenty-six of them, all two-reelers, will be distributed annually.

"Smiling Billy" Parsons is none other than William H. Parsons, President of the National Film Corporation of America, who springs full-fledged into pictures as a star.

The contract for distribution was signed this week by Mr. Parsons and Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. Mr. Parsons left at once for California to begin work in his studios in Los Angeles.

The story of Mr. Parsons' entry into pictures as a star is filled with novelty. Primarily he is a promoter and producer, being producer and one of the owners of "Tarzan of the Apes." During the making of this picture there were idle moments in which Mr. Parsons read the scenarios of a number of two-reel comedies and racked his brain to think of an engaging male comedian available to be starred under his management.

Having the rotund figure so often associated with comedy roles, an engaging and winning smile, and being comically bald, persons to whom he admitted his perplexity quickly suggested that he become a screen star himself and make his own pictures.

After persuasion, but still not convinced, Mr. Parsons did so. Goldwyn executives saw them, then employed Mr. Parsons to make twenty-six a year for them.

Goldwyn intends to market these two-reelers by placing prints of the first four comedies in all of its exchanges in advance of the first release, giving exhibitors everywhere the opportunity to see four releases before booking any of them.

Hart's Newest Picture "The Tiger Man"

Artcraft Star Doubles for First Time in Photoplay—Dorothy Dalton's Next Film to Be Called "Tyrant Fear"

THE TITLES of two new Thomas H. Ince productions on which work is now in progress were received at the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, last week.

William S. Hart's new vehicle following "Blue Blazes Rawden," which was released by Artcraft on February 18, has been named "The Tiger Man." In this production Hart is now appearing before the camera as Hawk Parsons, an outlaw of the desert who is redeemed by the love of a good woman. The story is by J. G. Hawks, who also wrote "Blue Blazes Rawden."

A troop of cavalry plays an important part in this picture. In staging a big cavalry charge last week the players did not seem to present the necessary punch. It was suggested that if Hart would lead there would be a different kind of showing. Changing his buckskins for a faded blue cavalry uniform, the popular star lead the charge and the desired result was immediately evident. This is perhaps the first time Hart has doubled in a photoplay. The charge, however, was taken at a long shot so that the leader will not be recognized as the same person who portrays the starring role.

Dorothy Dalton's newest Paramount picture on which she has been working for the past few weeks has been titled "Tyrant Fear." This story is being staged by R. William Neill under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince from the scenario by R. Cecil Smith. John Stumar is responsible for the photography.

The story is one of primitive passions unloosed and a woman's struggle against fate, with her triumph when she has once thrown off the shackles of fear. Work on this film is now progressing rapidly at the Ince studio and is expected to be completed shortly. "Tyrant Fear" will be released after "Love Me," the next Dalton offering.

Loew to Build Four Houses

It is reported that Marcus Loew and his associates will build four more theaters in Eastern Canada in addition to the possibility that the St. Denis Theater, Montreal, will pass into Loew control shortly.

One of the new Loew houses it is said will be erected in Ottawa at a cost of $200,000. If all these projects are carried ont, there will be at least nine Loew Theaters in the dominion.

Gladys Brockwell in "The Moral Law." A William Fox production.

Shows Perfect Double Exposure Kiss

"The Moral Law," Fox Special Feature, Filmed Twice in Many Places, Stars Taking Dual Role of Half Sisters

PHOTOGRAPHY of a decidedly unusual nature, a feature of which is a perfect double exposure kiss, is claimed for "The Moral Law," starring Gladys Brockwell. The production will be the William Fox Special Features release for February 17.

From a dramatic standpoint, the drama is declared to be specially interesting because Miss Brockwell has the role of half-sisters of very dissimilar dispositions.

One of the girls has been raised in an atmosphere of refinement in New York and the other has been reared in a gambling house conducted by her mother in South America. One is American through and through; the other has considerable "bad blood" in her veins. The two meet when their father dies.

As the action centers about the two young women, the director was called upon constantly to resort to double exposure. The two appear on the screen at the same time on numerous occasions and in no instance, it is claimed, is there even a suggestion of a division in the film.

The kissing occurs at the time the two girls meet in South America and is declared to be done with such exactness as to register perfectly and realistically.

Those in the cast besides Miss Brockwell are Rosita Marstini, Cora Rankin Drew, Colin Chase, Bertram Grassby and Joseph Singleton.

The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and the scenario is by Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling," who recently has joined the Fox organization in the west. Bertram Bracken directed the production.

Mutual Picks Camera Chief for Screen Telegram

The appointment of Harold P. Brown as chief of the camera staff of Screen Telegram, the Mutual Film Corporation's twice a week news reel, is announced by John R. Freuler, president of the corporation.

Mr. Brown is a news camera operator of several years experience. He started turning a crank on news subjects in Minneapolis after he had worked on many of the large newspapers of the middle west. He was for a time the editor of the Northwest Weekly, a moving picture news reel, distributed throughout the northwestern states.

He joined the forces of the Hearst International Film Service two years ago in Chicago and during that period contributed negative of excellent quality.

Some of Mr. Brown's most notable work was done along the Mexican border and in the interior of Mexico at the time of the Pershing expedition. He "scooped" all news cameramen on the return of the expedition, getting his negative to New York twenty-four hours ahead of his competitors.

Mr. Brown will assist Blaine McGrath, editor of the Screen Telegram, in the direction of the staff cameramen.

Several Points to This Story

Anna Q. Nilsson will tell you, if you approach the subject with proper regard for her feelings, that the common or Texas variety of cactus has approximately 3,500 needles. She sat on one recently, and is reasonably sure that these figures are correct, though they may vary a needle or two either way.

Miss Nilsson came into contact with the cactus in her capacity of featured feminine player in Rex Beach's new film play, "Heart of the Sunset," which was picturized in and around Eagle Pass, Tex., for distribution by Goldwyn. A skittish horse and a setting sun which threw alarming shadows were responsible.

As Alaire Austin, heroine of the story, Miss Nilsson was required by Director Frank Powell to ride her horse headlong for the camera, turning sharply at the proper moment to one side. The scene had been duly rehearsed and the camera was being loaded preparatory to photographing it when her mount took fright at the long shadow of camera and tripod cast by the disappearing sun and whirled off for a run in his own behalf.

Miss Nilsson is a good horsewoman, but her horse's unexpected bolt jerked her feet from the stirrups, and when the beast veered suddenly on a dead run the actress left the saddle and arranged herself plump on top of an extra mean cactus. She intended, she said afterward, to miss the cactus, but in the stress of the moment was unable to arrange it.

When Director Powell and his assistants reached Miss Nilsson she was on her feet, but only partly erect.

"Pick me!" she begged piteously. "Pick me!"

Every man present did his best, but it was several hours before her riding breeches were sufficiently free of needles to permit her to sit down in the sand and several more before she was again able to rest her weight in the saddle.

"The Woman Between Friends"

Vitagragph Blue Ribbon, Starring Alice Joyce. Released February 11. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

THE many novels written by Robert Chambers have proven themselves interesting screen subjects; the latest offering of the popular author's writings is an adaptation of his novel "Between Friends." It may be that in picture form it makes a more interesting subject for, interpreted as it is by an exceptional cast, it is one of the most intense dramas seen in some time.

The story relates the experiences of two men, who had been friends for twenty years, when it is discovered by one that the other had proved himself unworthy of the trust placed in him. An artistic atmosphere pervades the entire story as the two leading characters are American artists living in Paris. Both meet a girl who later proves the woman between friends and although she is loved devotedly by one her affections are for the other. An unfaithful wife causes disruption in the lives of the men but when death is about to claim both, the girl intervenes and time brings about forgiveness and restoration of health.

Alice Joyce is the girl who enters the lives of the two men and her work is fully in keeping with what she has already done. Marc McDermott plays the part of Drene, the sculptor, and Robert Walker is Graylock, an artist. Each fulfills his role with utmost satisfaction and the combined efforts of all three have made this a really delightful and entertaining release.

The story: Twenty years of companionship terminate when Drene marries and leaves his old friend, Graylock, alone in bachelorhood. Drene is commissioned to make a statue protraying Chastity and uses his wife as a model. His work is just begun and he is so engrossed in it that he neglects his wife, who seeks solace in the company of Graylock. Later Mrs. Drene leaves her husband, who is unaware that his friend is the other man.

Graylock and Mrs. Drene go to Nice, where he renews friendship with a flower girl who is induced to pose for him. Mrs. Drene is introduced as Mrs. Graylock. Soon after Drene comes to Nice and during the revels of the carnival Mrs. Drene is burned to death and her husband does not yet suspect Graylock. The flower girl, Cecilie, is induced to come to Paris and there she continues to pose as Graylock's model while Drene is unable to find the inspiration to finish the statue. Secretly Cecelie loves Drene and agrees to pose for him and one day picks up a picture of his dead wife. Cecelie tells Drene that she had known the woman as the wife of Graylock, who is now revealed. Graylock is confronted with proof of his duplicity and in revenge Drene exacts a promise that Graylock will kill himself on a certain day.

When the day arrives Graylock shoots himself, but is only slightly wounded. Drene has suffered greatly and suddenly relenting tries to halt the fulfillment of the past. But then Cecilie comes in and tells him that Graylock will live; Drene and the girl confide in their mutual love and all ends happily.

"The Guilty Man"

Paramount Picture, Starring Gloria Hope. Released February 18. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

ANOTHER screen version of the many A. H. Woods' stage successes is "The Guilty Man," announced for release in the very near future. On the stage this play proved to be one of the best dramatic successes in many seasons. In screen form, the picture lives up to the standard set by the stage success and should acquire a great following of admirers.

The story is known in all circles and the characters have also earned a place in the hearts of many. Claude Lescuyer is one to be both pitied and censured; his irate father brings about his desertion of the girl, but the passing of the years had not brought a desire to Claude to find her. Engrossed in his work as criminal prosecutor of Paris, his former wife is brought to him, but is not recognized. How Claude is brought to a realization of his errors is cleverly and excellently portrayed in the picture.

Gloria Hope enacts the role of Claudine with sincere emotion and William Garwood as Lescuyer is equally as acceptable. Vivian Reed is very good in the part of Marie, the deserted girl. The production has been staged under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and is fully up to his usual mark of perfection. Irvin V. Willat directed.

The story: Marie and Claude Lescuyer have been living together for some time as man and wife and are finally separated by Claude's father, who has arranged a more suitable marriage. Claude is a promising lawyer and to preserve his assured future submits to his father's wishes.

The years pass rapidly and Marie, to give her child a name, has married Flambon, owner of a cafe in Paris. Claude has achieved his success but the years had brought death to his wife and he was alone. Marie and her child Claudine are treated brutally by Flambon and suffer greatly by his wickedness. Claudine possesses a voice of sweetness and charm and is compelled by Flambon to sing in the cafe, where she meets Gaston, a young writer. Many meetings cement their friendship and soon ripens to love. Unable to stand Flambon's cruelties, Claudine decides to run away with Gaston; Flambon enters her room and beats both Claudine and her mother. Fearing lest the man kill her mother, Claudine shoots Flambon and is taken to jail.

The case is left in the hands of Claude, who is the criminal prosecutor of Paris. Marie is taken to his office and is revealed by a friend of hers who is familiar with the early life of Claude and Marie. Claude is confronted with the results of his desertion and when the trial comes up denounces not Claudine, the murderer, but himself, the guilty man. He asks leniency for the girl, who is acquitted, and resigns his position as prosecutor to devote the rest of his life to Marie and Claudine, who is now happy in the love of Gaston.

The parting of the ways.

"My Wife"

Ann Murdock in Empire-Mutual Picture of February 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

NOT up to the standard set by "Outcast" or "Please Help Emily," but diverting enough to please Murdock admirers, this picture will entertain the average audience fairly well. It is a comedy drama based upon a frequently used but seemingly popular dramatic situation, a marriage in name only from which a real romance develops. In handling the subject, good taste has been used to avoid risque situations but the action is slow and too much depends upon the acting of the star. Miss Murdock, with an appealing story and clever situations to aid her, has shown ability as a screen player, but in this case she has not the aid, for the story is mediocre. The photography and outdoor scenes are the most pleasing feature of the picture.

The party.

Dell Henderson directed. Michael Morton wrote the story. The large cast of players includes Rex MacDougal, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Jules Rancourt, Herbert Druce and others.

The story: When Beatrice Hammond's maiden aunt was on her death-bed, she added a codicil to her will that unless Beatrice was married before her eighteenth birthday, the large bequest left to her shall revert to others.

Gerald Eversleigh, a wealthy bachelor and a life-long friend of Beatrice, is named as one of the executors of the will.

Beatrice believes herself in love with Ronald Farwell, who has been called to the colors and sent to France.

When Beatrice learns of the codicil to the will, she persuades Gerald to marry her, "in name only," in order to save her inheritance, with the understanding that they shall be divorced when Ronald returns from France.

Ronald is wounded in action, falls in love with the French girl who nursed him in the hospital, and marries her.

In the meantime, Gerald has fallen desperately in love with his "temporary" wife and becomes jealous of the attentions of other men to her, while fervently praying that Ronald will reap all the glory of a dead hero.

Ronald returns from France with wife and offers Eversleigh a bribe of sixty thousand dollars if he will remain married to Beatrice. Eversleigh, who has discovered that his love for his wife is reciprocated, considers it a good bargain, but refuses the money, and the denouement is a happy one for all concerned.

"Jack Spurlock—Prodigal"

Fox Film Production, Starring George Walsh. Reviewed by L. J. Bourstein

GEORGE WALSH is back and in film production of George Horace Lorimer's "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal." Seldom has a screen production excited so much curiosity. For the many who read of Spurlock in the Saturday Evening Post this picture will have an added interest. Mr. Lorimer has certainly chronicled some humorous incidents in his story. Judge for yourself the sight of a band of onion peelers. Now isn't that enough to bring tears to your eyes? Or a huge bear bent on getting an absolutely innocent student in Dutch with the prof. These are only two of the many funny angles of the picture, which abounds with the infectious smile of George Walsh. Walsh is given full sway and makes the most of it. As the speculator in onions Spurlock gets into many difficulties, but the onions finally prove strong enough to bring Jack back to his irate father.
